Stans added that he didn't have anyone available on his campaign finance committee to go to New York from Washington on the afternoon of April 6 to pick up the money, and so arranged to have it delivered after the ensuing weekend.

"Isn't it true you didn't want any member of the committee to pick up the money if it wasn't Maurice Stans?" The government asked in cross-examination.

"No, that is not a fact," Stans replied.

Aspirin may be wonder drug for heart attack patients

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A group of heart-attack victims will begin taking daily does of aspirin next fall to test a theory that it may prevent further heart attacks. Aspirin, cheap and yet so useful that some doctors have called it a "wonder drug," has been associated in some studies with a lower incidence of heart attacks.

"There may be something to aspirin," said Dr. Robert Levy of the National Heart and Lung Institute, which will conduct the study. "The institute is convinced it's worth looking into."

But health authorities warn there are dangers to taking aspirin, and they hope word of the study will not cause a massive rush to drug counters.

Aspirin irritates the stomach lining, often causing bleeding. It can be dangerous to ulcer patients, and aspirin overdose is a leading cause of drug poisoning in children.

Wilson visits Ulster

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Harold Wilson flew to Belfast yesterday for his first visit to Northern Ireland since becoming prime minister.

The Laborite prime minister planned a round of talks with Brian Faulkner, the Protestant chief executive, members of his coalition government of Protestants and Roman Catholics, and military leaders.

Another visitor to Belfast today was Enoch Powell, the maverick member of the British Conservative party who refused to run in the Feb. 28 general election that brought Wilson back to power.

Powell was in Northern Ireland to make a speech and talk with hard-line Protestant leaders who oppose the British policy of cooperation between Protestants and Catholics and cooperation between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic.

Although Wilson supports that policy, it was instituted by his Conservative predecessor, Edward Heath, and Powell criticized it strongly.

Discounts allowed

NEW YORK (AP) — Customers who pay cash may now be able to get discounts of up to 6 per cent off the displayed price in stores that accept American Express credit cards, Consumers Union says.

The consumer group said Wednesday that it had obtained a settlement of a suit in which it alleged that a clause in the contract between American Express and retailers violated federal law by barring merchants from offering discounts for cash.

Jews protest Nazis

TEL AVIV (AP) — Angry demonstrators shouted, "Nazi go home" outside the West Germany Embassy yesterday as Israelis mourned the death of six million Jews slaughtered in World War II.

The protesters were demanding the release from a Dachau jail of anti-Nazi campaigner Beate Klarsfeld.

About 30 young Israeli protesters carried placards in Hebrew saying "Free Beate" and "Imprison the Nazis."

Earlier, Israel came to a two minute standstill as sirens sounded throughout the Jewish state commemorating the slaughter of the six million.

Holocaust Day is held on the anniversary — by the Jewish calendar — of the Warsaw ghetto uprising against the Germans in 1943.

Steel prices to rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Director John T. Dunlop of the Cost of Living Council says an estimated 13.6 per cent increase in costs for the nation's steel firms will result in sharply rising steel prices.

"We expect prices to increase substantially," Dunlop told a news conference Wednesday.

Steel companies will be free to raise prices without government interference when wage and price controls expire April 30.

He said the cost pressures do not take into account new labor agreements reached in the steel industry last week, which observers say could add another 5 per cent to industry costs.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Following complaints from the coal industry, the Interior Department plans to issue new strip mining regulations which will give strippers greater flexibility in restoring disturbed land.

The decision came after the coal industry fought an earlier proposal requiring abandoned strip mines to be graded to a slope not greater than 30 degrees.

The new regulations, sources said, will replace the 30-degree requirement with a more flexible standard calling for ravaged land to be restored to its original contour.

The Environmental Protection Agency called for a more stringent final slope standard in commenting on the original 30-degree requirement contained in tentative regulations published last year as part of an overall revision of its rules for mining on federal land.

Final regulations are expected to be published in the Federal Register within 30 days. They will go into effect 30 days after publication.

Andrew Bailey, chief of the mining operation branch of the Geological Survey, said the 30 degree slope requirement has been dropped and a less specific provision substituted.

"We felt we could really be in trouble if we tied it down too strictly," Bailey said. He indicated the change was made to permit more flexibility for mining operations under varying conditions.

Bailey declined to discuss the changes in detail, but said the regulations have been substantially altered from the original proposals.

After the original regulations were published, Chairman Russell Train of the Council on Environmental Quality wrote to the department saying they were "notably deficient in dealing with the reclamation of coal surface mining."

Train asked that the department's mining supervisor be given broader powers, including power to prohibit mining in areas in which reclamation would be impossible.

The revised regulations replace standards drawn up in the 1930s which deal chiefly with health and safety. Bailey said the department decided they were needed because of changes in technology and increased concern for the environment.

They will apply on an estimated 760,000 acres of land leased by the Interior Department for coal mining and on Indian lands. The department has imposed a moratorium on coal leases pending a study of leasing policy.

Bailey said the outcome of the study will not affect the regulations, but they will have to be rewritten if Congress passes strip mining legislation it is considering. The legislation contains more stringent standards.

Cuba to partake in hemispheric relations relations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cuba made it known yesterday that it is prepared to become an active participant in inter-American relations for the first time since 1962.

The dramatic disclosure came at a meeting of Western Hemisphere foreign ministers, who were informed that Cuba is willing to assume a "positive, nonobstructionist" but restricted role in hemispheric deliberations.

Mexican Foreign Minister Emilio Rabasa told the gathering that Cuba would accept an invitation to attend the next meeting of hemispheric foreign ministers, tentatively set for Buenos Aires next March. Rabasa personally discussed Cuba's position with Prime Minister Fidel Castro last month in Havana.

Not since the late Ernesto "Che" Guevara represented Cuba at a conference in Uruguay in 1962 has Cuba participated in an inter-American forum.

That same year the Cuban government was excluded from the Organization of American States which decided that Cuba's Marxist-Leninist system was inconsistent with OAS principles.

Two years later, the OAS decreed a commercial and diplomatic embargo and diplomatic embargo on the island after finding Cuba guilty of attempting to overthrow the Venezuelan government.

Cuba has expressed no desire to return to the OAS but since the Argentina meeting will be held outside the OAS frame-work, Cuba's participation would not be inconsistent with its anti-OAS policy.

The foreign ministers requested that Argentina take "soundings" of the hemispheric governments to determine whether an invitation should be extended to Cuba.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger offered no immediate objection to the prospect of Cuba's attendance at the meeting.

American officials said the invitation would be contingent upon "the acceptance or at least the toleration" of each hemisphere government.

The chief U.S. objection to Cuba has been its commitment to support revolution elsewhere in the hemisphere. Kissinger has said American policy would be subject to change if Cuba abandons efforts to export revolution.

W'gate prosecutor to study 'falsified' tax deduction

WASHINGTON (AP) — The special Watergate prosecutor's office has taken over the Internal Revenue Service investigation of President Nixon's controversial gift of pre-presidential papers, informed sources said yesterday.

Evidence collected by a congressional committee and other government investigators indicated documents had been falsified when a half-million-dollar tax deduction was claimed for the papers gift.

But the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, which was asked by Nixon to examine his tax returns, refused to address itself to the question of criminal fraud.

It concluded that the gift deduction was improper and that the President should pay the taxes he would have been assessed had he not claimed the gift.

The IRS, which also audited the Nixon returns, came to a similar conclusion, but the White House said the tax agency had found no evidence Nixon defrauded the government. The IRS refused comment on the issue.

Sources close to the case now say IRS agents continued to investigate the circumstances surrounding the papers gift even after Nixon agreed to pay his back taxes. The agents called off their probe this week when the special prosecutor's office took over, the sources said.

Gop urges impeachment

BOSTON (AP) — The head of the Massachusetts Republican State Committee has become the first GOP state chairman in the country to ask for President Nixon's resignation.

William A. Barnstead of Arlington, a longtime Nixon supporter who assumed the party chairmanship last month, said Wednesday that Nixon should leave office for the good of the country and the party.

"I believe Nixon is guilty, at least of covering up the facts on Watergate, and if those tapes exist he ought to turn them over to the House Judiciary Committee," said Barnstead.

A conservative GOP loyalist, Barnstead said he made his statement with extreme reluctance but was prompted to do so in the aftermath of Tuesday's congressional election in Michigan's 8th District, in which the Republican candidate for whom Nixon personally campaigned lost to a Democrat.

"My job is to rebuild the Republican Party in this state," Barnstead said, "and it can't be done so long as Richard Nixon is in the White House."

Sargent assures aid

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent promised yesterday the state would make "as large a commitment as we are able" if the federal government stops paying for anti-poverty Community Action Programs (CAP).

An overflow crowd in Gardner Auditorium listened to speaker after speaker predict tragedy for the poor if the state did not take over financing the 24 CAP agencies.

Sargent recommended $3 million in his budget for next year and the House voted $5 million. A $2 million appropriation for the current fiscal year is not being used since the federal government will continue financing to June 30.

The governor called on the audience to press Congress to continue federal financing. President Nixon has recommended no CAP money for the next fiscal year.

One of the speakers, Rosa Navarro of Chelsea, whose native language is Spanish, said, "If I hadn't been in these programs I wouldn't be here speaking English today."

Another, Francis A. O'Connor, chairman of the Greater Lawrence Community Action Council, said the $8 million was "to be considered as an investment in the people of this commonwealth."

A delegation from the rally, organized by the Massachusetts CAP Directors Association, negotiated with Sargent aides for two hours before Sargent agreed to address the meeting.

Doctor arraigned

BOSTON (AP) — A Boston City Hospital doctor is free on $1,000 personal bond following his arraignment Wednesday on a charge of manslaughter in connection with an abortion.

Dr. Kenneth Edelin, chief resident in obstetrics and gynecology at BCH, pleaded innocent to the charge brought in connection with the abortion of a six-month-old fetus at the hospital last October.

Doctors, nurses and other hospital personnel crowded the courtroom in a show of support for Edelin, who has been suspended by the hospital following his indictment last week.

Four other doctors charged with illegally dissecting aborted fetuses as part of a research project have not yet been arraigned. Two are staff members at BCH; two are former staff members who have since left the country.

The date of the abortion and the name of the unborn child in the Edelin case were ordered impounded by Judge John F. Moriarty.

Minorities recruited

STORRS, Conn. (AP) — The University of Connecticut has adopted a policy to increase recruitment of minority students at all campuses.

In a letter to the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, UConn President Glenn W. Ferguson said the program would begin in the fall.

One change would allow applications to apply directly to branch campuses without filing through the main campus in Storrs. This will allow a member of a minority community to "pick up a phone or go down the street" for information, according to Bertram W. Wilson, UConn's equal opportunities officer.

Decisions on admissions still will be made at Storrs, he said.

Recruiting and tutoring programs will be stepped up around the branches. UConn also will attempt to encourage qualified two-year community college students to continue in a four-year program at Storrs.

Conte foe needed

ADAMS (AP) 8 The Berkshire County Democratic Association has asked House Speaker David M. Bartley to call a 1st District Democratic caucus to pick an opponent for Rep. Silvio O. Conte.

At a Wednesday night meeting, the association decided to issue the request. Members noted that Democrats have won four traditionally Republican House Seats in five special House elections this year.

Conte, a Republican congressman since 1958, has been unopposed in his last five reelection campaigns.

The association suggested the caucus could be held June 1 in Northampton, when 1st District Democrats meet to select delegates for a party mini-convention planned for December.

Black named at WSC

WESTFIELD (AP) 8 Dr. Robert L. Randolph, 47, will become the first black president of a four-year college in New England upon his inauguration Sunday as head of Westfield State College.

Dr. Randolph was appointed president of the 2,400-student coeducational facility by the Massachusetts State College System's board of directors last year.

Until his appointment, the highest ranking black administrator in the state college system was Dr. Randolph Bromery, chancellor of the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, officials said.

Nuclear court

BOSTON (AP) — The Union of Concerned Scientists proposed creation yesterday of a scientific supreme court of nine persons to settle the points it has raised about the atomic power plant in Plymouth.

Dr. Henry Kendall of the Cambridge-based group said, "We are now part of the controversy, and for that reason we think such disputes should now go to an impartial body of scientists for arbitration."

The U.S. Atomic Energy Commission has ordered the Plymouth plant, owned by Boston Edison Co., shut down until the contentions of one of the group's members, Daniel Ford, can be heard and decided.

Medeiros on Farah

BOSTON (AP) — Humberto Cardinal Medeires, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Boston, has urged consumers to seriously consider purchasing Farah clothing products now that the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America strike against the firm has ended.

Grass linked to fertility loss

BOSTON (AP) — Men who smoke large amounts of marijuana run risks of decreased production of male sex hormones and sperm which could affect their fertility, researchers say.

In tests with 20 heavy marijuana users who smoked from five to 18 "joints" a week for months or longer, researchers found that 35 per cent had noticeably decreased sperm counts. They also found that blood levels of the hormone testosterone averaged 44 per cent lower in the drug users then nonusers.

In a report published yesterday in the New England Journal of Medicine, the researchers said two of the chronic smokers were impotent "apparently in association with marijuana use."

The report noted that one of these men returned to normal sexuality within two months after he discontinued marijuana use, but the other declined to give up the drug.

The study was conducted at the Reproductive Biology Research Foundation in St. Louis, and its director, noted sex researcher Dr. William H. Masters was one of the report's authors. Others conducting the study were Drs. Robert Kolodny and Gelson Toro, and Robert M. Kolodner.

The study noted that the results should be taken cautiously because of the small size of the sample, lacks of data on the potency of the marijuana and because it was impossible to measure hormone levels and sperm counts of the marijuana users before they took up the drug.

The researchers said their examinations of the 18 to 28-year-old users, who were compared with 20 similarly healthy men of the same age who did not use the drug, showed no noticeable change in testicular size or texture in the users.

The study said the depressant effects of heavy marijuana use on both sperm count and testosterone levels seemed directly related to the amount of marijuana used. Subjects averaging more than 10 marijuana cigarettes weekly had significantly lower testosterone than less chronic users, the researchers said.

The male hormone finding is of particular significance, the researchers said, because numberous other research findings indicate that a lack of testosterone at critical points in the development of a male fetus can cause sex organs to develop improperly and later cause permanent hormone imbalance in the male offspring.

The researchers said it would be "judicious" for women to avoid marijuana at least during the first three months of pregnancy since it has been shown that marijuana ingredients can pass from the mother to the fetus.

The study hypothesized that a pre-adolescent boy who was a heavy marijuana smoker possibly could throw off his puberty since this depends on proper hormone balance.

Looking at the often-voiced boasts of marijuana and performance, the researchers remarked that the assertions probably should be reassessed.

The cooling of America

By ANTHONY BANNES

According to Andrew Kopkind, a reporter for "The Real Paper," a Boston weekly newspaper, it has been four years since three members of the radical Weatherman organization blew themselves up in a house on West Eleventh St. in New York. But since that incident along with a brief rash of insignificant bombings in the spring of 1970 to bring an end to the New Left's strategy of political terror and practically all forms of protest and displays of political activism among American students and among Americans on the whole.

With the exception of the Symbionese Liberation Army's emergence into the scope of the New Left, political activism in America has apparently been Replaced by political apathy.

The idealism characterized by the Students for a Democratic Society and the "bad ass motherfucker" attitude that characterized the Black Panther Party in the late sixties and early seventies has somehow been exorcised from the American people. We now find Americans regressing into the past, this can be upheld by noticing the current nostalgia fad.

At a time when Americans should be exercising their constitutional powers and acting on the question of impeachment and the Watergate issue, we find a great many Americans engaged in the peculiar phenomenon of "streaking."

What could be the reason or reason's for the decline in political activism and the rise of more traditional attitudes in American thought? For better insight on the situation the writer talked with Ms. Kelly Erwin, Mr. Mark Cerasuolo, and Ms. Susan Bergerson, all members of the Young Socialists Alliance, which has an office in the Student Union.

They related to me the Y.S.A. point of view on the situation. They stated that there are still plenty of radicals in the U.S., in fact, they cite the recent truckers strike as an example of the fact that there are more radicals now than at any other time during the sixties. They feel that the truckers strike indicates that more working class people are entering the struggle. They contend, however, that there is a "lull" in activism as far as the student is concerned because they feel that students are now demoralized because they weren't as effective as they wanted to be in the sixties with their efforts. They related that students found that they couldn't change the system by themselves. They cite the withdrawal of American troops from Viet-Nam as a factor also. They also stated that the lack of leadership within the movement is a cause for the lull. They say that improved relationships with China has caused many radicals to turn away from China as a source of revolutionary leadership leaving these radicals in a state of ideological limbo. They also cite the media as a major promoter of the lull stating that significant radical events don't get covered but instead get blacked out by the media.

After gaining the views of the Y.S.A., the writer happened upon Gerald Platt, who is a professor of Sociology here at UMass. He offered the writer the sociologist's point of view on the situation.

He states that a decline in the economic market has raised students consciousness about getting the most out of an education, so that when they leave they will have a better chance of getting the jobs that are so scarce these days. He stated that students feel that any black mark on their scholastic record will hamper their chances at these jobs. He goes on to relate that because students today are more future orientated, they have gotten out of the things that could have a negative effect on their future. They don't see the system as being as corrupt as they felt it was in the sixties in spite of Watergate. He also raised the point that many students fear for their own safety. He cites the Kent State incident as the example that authorities used to show middle class people that they were no longer immune from police and-or National Guard bullets, a service which was previously rendered exclusively to Black and lower class students.

Of course these opinions do not cover the entire scope of possible reasons for The political apathy which exists today in America, but they do offer a better insight on its existence and why it does in fact exist. And it exists at a time when in all practicality it should not. (Watergate, soaring inflation, shortages, the fuel crisis (?) Nixon and etc.)

The writer offers this essay not as an answer to the questions about the existance of political apathy in America, but just to give those who read it a better understanding of the Cooling of America.

Citizen participation: the FBI wants You!

By DENNY MATTEAU

Participate! Be the first in your gang to work for the FBI! That's right folks, the FBI needs YOU!

Hard times have fallen upon our noble nation, and what with the demand for wiretaps and topflight secret agents being what it is these days, the FBI is encouraging citizen participation.

But, there are risks to this work, and if you're interested, you must ask yourself: "Am I Man (or Woman) enough, is the taste for danger in MY blood?"

One brave soul recently lost his job when his superiors found that he'd cooperated with the FBI. That was photographer James Mone of the Associated Press, who gave his information to the FBI during the occupation of Wounded Knee. Why, this man bravely disregarded all those insidious principles of the Press being independent of the government.

Attorney General Saxbe himself said, in defense of Mone, "This causes us concern, because as you know, we're trying to do everything possible to encourage citizen participation."

The Mone case is concerned with freedom of the press, which is a corallary of that subversive right, freedom of speech. How could we maintain ourselves as the Leader of the Free World, if citizens in our midst are allowed to criticize the government or go about their business free of surveillance?

Well, our government is doing what it can to protect us from too much freedom. It's an uphill battle, but as long as we have the Silent Majority, Middle America, and Student Apathy, I'm confident that it will be won!

As far as freedom of speech is concerned, our government will get it right at the roots. A start has already been made: on Tuesday the Supreme Court decided that civil servants can be fired for criticism. Any civil employee who publicly makes comments which impair the efficiency of the organization can be dismissed. It doesn't say what kind of comments would count, but that may as well be left up to the individual cases that arise. Thus, any sort of criticism can more effectively be wiped out. After all, how efficiently can our government operate if employees are not kept from blabbing to the press about bribes, which are the lubrication on our big wheels?

Yes folks, our government is making great strides, and remember, YOU can be part of it all!

HURRAH FOR THE STATE! YAY BOMBS FOR PEACE! YAY BUGS FOR SECURITY! SILENCE IS TRUE FREEDOM!

Letters to the editor

Estelle as "unobjective"

To The Editor:

Everybody puts down Bob Estelle these days. It's the fashionable thing to do: "Did you see Estelle's article today, he must be crazy!" But people forget that like some parts of the body he's been compared to, Bob does serve a useful function.

Bob espouses (and uses) the ideas of the John Birch Society. This name refers to the O.S.S. army captain, John Birch, who in the closing days of WW II, was brutally murdered by Chinese bandits posing as communist partisans working under Chiang-Kai-Shek. One might also add that the O.S.S. was the forerunner of the C.I.A.

Mr. Estelle serves two useful pruposes on this campus. First, he reminds us of the unobjective view of any ideology. And secondly, he helps keep the memory of the 50's alive in a time of 50's nostalgia. Remember the 1950's, those years of Eisenhower and Nixon (commies, eh Bob?;, McCarthyism, the Edsel, A-Bomb drills, Checkers Speeches and "Teen Angels?" Well don't forget the apathetic America we had then too.

So wake up, people, and watch out for the fanatics on both sides. Meanwhile Bob: nuke-em, mine-em, bomb-em back to the Stone Age, and kill a commie for Christ (Fascinating, Jesus was probably a black man, and the early Christians lived in "communistic" groups).

Suggestion

To The Editor:

As an independant consultant I am submitting a proposal to the UMass trashmens association.

There are no trashbaskets from the entrance of Worcester Dining Commons to the front entrance of the Student Union. A series of baskets placed along the road that travels that route should alleviate much of the litter problem. In my humble estimation it would be much easier to empty trashbaskets than to meander around picking up litter.

For my fee, considering the time spent pondering this problem, I ask only the piddling sum of 10 per cent of the monetary savings produced by this simple remedy.

Student elections: a modest proposal

To The Editor:

Elections, what a Bore!

I think there should be some changes in the election procedures. Otherwise I might again be aquainted with the noncandidates of this years farcial election, with the only difference in distinction, being a change of name and face.

First of all I'd like to recommend student polls sometime in February, in order to see out some realistic University-wide issues. With these issues in mind, I'd recommend formation of political groups, with definite positions on student issues. From there hopefully will come some worthwhile candidates.

Next, I recommend that in order to appear on the ballot, that a prerequisite of a 1,000 signatures be obtained from the student body. This would insure, the necessity of reaching the student body, and thereby allowing the student body as a whole participation in the election of our SGA President.

Finally I'd like to take the power of electing the SGA President, away from the Student Senate and put it back to where it belongs. The Student Body as a whole! Personally I think, I, as well as the rest of the student body are quite well qualified, to make a decision on who we want to be our SGA President. We don't get to make that decision now and I think that's wrong, and I would like to see that changed.

The end of the road

Get this.

The leader of a nation resigns, comes back to the job by popular demand, and then resigns again. Two resignations. The second one, "irrevocable".

The leader of another nation won't even resign once. Not even by popular demand. Irrevocable.

The first country was trying to hold onto a good leader. The second country is trying to get rid of a bad one.

Golda Meir and Richard Nixon.

I can see the headlines now:

"Golda Meir, former Premier of Israel, died today after a long illness in Mt. Sinai Hospital....."

And then the following day:

And then a few weeks later:

"Golda Meir, who in recent weeks has appeared 'more dead than alive' according to informed sources, joined the ranks of LBJ, to whom she bore close resemblance, and finally tossed in the towel. Her decision, she said, is 'irrevocable'. In Jerusalem to announce her decision to reporter, she declared: "I have reached the end of the road..."

"President Richard Nixon announced he will fly to Jerusalem today to attend the second funeral of former Israeli Premier Golda Meir. White House spokesmen report the President is practicing Yiddish phrases for the occasion, notably "shalom", "gud yontiv", and "mazel tov", while standing before a mirror and tipping his yarmulke."

And of course:

"President Richard Nixon, returning from a weekend trip to Israel, reported: "I haven't had this much fun since ol' Pompidou croaked." The President said he was particularly impressed by the culinary fare. "How was I to know gefilte fish tasted so good?" he said. "And matzo balls?" he continued. "What can I say but 'oy vey is mir', if you know what I mean."

Weeks pass:

"President Richard Nixon was indicted today for his alleged role in what the Senate has termed The Knish Deal. The President, proclaiming his innocence, declared: "I gave you milk. I gave you wheat. So what's wrong with a few shiploads of knishes? Anti-semites, that's what you are!"

And finally:

"President Richard Nixon resigned today, succumbing to popular demand. "Nobody appreciates me here anymore," the President told reporters in his parting speech. "I think I'll go to Israel."

C.E.Q. expanding, too much waste

For the past three years the Coalition for Environmental Quality has been operating a successful paper recycling program. In fact the operation has been so successful they can no longer handle the volume. The time has come for the project to expand in order to alleviate the excess waste which sometimes goes untouched for days.

Under the present system the Physical Plant has been handling the work load with two old trucks which are used seven days a week all year long. The burden has simply become too great to handle.

In answer to this problem a proposal, authored by Henry Doyle of C.E.Q., has been prepared to go before the Student Senate. This proposal calls for expansion of the project and offers many advantages to the UMass community.

The aim of the proposal is to increase the tonage by 300 per cent; this would raise the income from the present $4200 per year to $12,600 with the S.G.A. receiving the profit. The increase in tonnage would come through participation from the Campus Center Complex and the Dining Commons (presently there is no recycling from these areas).

The plan also calls for the purchase of a used dump truck which would be operated by student employees.

Since the profit would be going to S.G.A. it is the belief of the organization that the money could be returned to the student body by lowering the student tax.

Moveover the proposal also mentions an added $6000. per year from participation from the Five College area schools, local apartment complexes, factories, and public schools in the area.

The initial cost of this plan would be $15000. for the truck and 20 bins plus $9000. yearly operating cost. Under this system the operation will pay for itself within two years. It is also possible that the revenue will be greater than anticipated due to the paper shortage and increasing demand.

The proposal is obviously a worthy one, it aims to improve the environment of the UMass and Amherst community and at the same time replenish the S.G.A. treasury.

Casson: eat at Burger King

To The Editor:

Re: James W. Casson III who wrote to the Editor complaining that a waitress was not satisfied with a 75 cent tip on a meal that amounted to $24.83. She returned it saying he needed it more than she did.

Three cheers for that waitress! I, too, am a waitress and have wanted to do that very thing many times myself, but have not for fear of the consequences (loss of my job).

You state that the waitress should understand that you are a "poor student" and that you would leave her a decent tip if it possible for you to do so. If you can afford to spend almost $25.00 on a meal then you should be able to leave her a proper tip.

As far as the food being "shitty", why take it out on the waitress. She just serves the food, she doesn't cook it. If you have a complaint, take it to the management, don't take it out on the waitress' tip. And yes, a 15 per cent gratuity is expected unless the service of the waitress is at fault. I assume that is not the case where you are concerned as you made no comment about the service not being up to par.

You tie her table up for an hour with four people and then ask for her understanding when you give her a 75 cent tip. I ask for yours in behalf of that waitress and any other poor girl that may have the misfortune of waiting on you. The average hourly wage a waitress receives in a restaurant such as the Kalihi Kai is around $1.00 an hour. Therefore, it should be obvious to you that she relies on tips for the main bulk of her pay.

You go off on a tangent railing the management and all beaureaucrats in general. You state that the management should be expect to pay for the labor of the waitress. This is all well and good; perhaps the waitress even agrees with you. But the point remains that this is not the way it works. Meanwhile the waitress loses out, receiving a big 3 per cent tip from you.

Your tip to the waitress was to accept people for what they are, not for what they ought to be. Follow your own advice. Accept a situation for what it is, not for what it ought to be and tip accordingly. Here's a tip for you. Next time you get a yen for eating out, try McDonalds or Burger King. There you can blow all your money on the food and won't be expected to leave a tip.

Rachids rude

To The Editor:

In an effort to "broaden" your awareness of the screening procedures used by the sophisticated management of a certain groovy discotheque, (Rachids), in the selection of their pseudable personnel, I shall attempt to relate my enlightening experience. Applying for employment is not one of my favorite pastimes, but since life is no free breakfast, it is sometimes necessary to reorder one's priorities. So with my head up, shoulders back and chest out, I entered the majestic temple of love and liquor in search of the omniscient proprietor. Upon approaching him, I did my gig and awaited his response. He explained that they presently had no openings...but with second thoughts, took it upon himself to look into the heart of the matter, proceeding to take in his hand the breast of my jacket and open my coat. After a scrutinizing glance, he sneered, "Oh, forget it!" Totally apalled by his crude behavior I was struck speechless. Turning to exit, I managed to retort, "Well you can forget it man", but this line was ineffective in conveying my repulsion.

Now I realize that I am no Chesty Morgan, and neither am I naive to the set of criteria required by such institutions, however I feel this man's manner of surveillance was both rude and unneccessary. Ironic that the classy image that this joint attempts to project is indeed an image.

To The Editor:

I found it extremely hard to believe that sex discrimination is occurring at a so-called liberal institution like the University of Mass at this day and age. I am a victim of it as a student employee working at the Bluewall cafeteria during lunch hours. As a female employee I am issued a uniform dress, matching apron, and one hairnet. This uniform must be carried back and forth every day and I am responsible for cleaning it. The men's uniform consists of striped pants and a white shirt, although the male students are allowed to wear dungarees or whatever they have on with the white shirt over it. Their shirts are simply passed in and laundered for them. For sanitary reasons, they are also given paper hats instead of hairnets even if their hair happens to be longer than the women's hair.

I find wearing this uniform offensive, uncomfortable, and an unnecessary bother. Why should I have to spend time and money changing and laundering simply because I am a female? There is no need to have to wear a dress nowadays, especially when I have to bend over and down constantly, serving food and bussing tables.

When I requested the men's uniform I was simply told to be a girl and wear the dress, period! I think that this in unfair discrimination and shouldn't be allowed to continue. Support is needed to fight this injustice.

SGA Apostola's puppets

To The Editor:

An open letter to the Student Senators:

One thing bothers me now after the action taken by the Senate on April 4, and that is the development of the Student Senate into a legalized puppet group. When I walked into my first Senate meeting, I was impressed with the amount of structure in your "student" organization. I use this term loosely because your body does not represent the attitudes or feelings of the students at large, it represents the opinions of its individual members, except in infrequent instances.

The issue of impeachment has technically been railroaded over by the Senate, with none of its puppets brave enough to stand up and vote against their loyal Student Government Association President, Nick Apostola. Is it because you yourselves feel guilty about not doing a good job, or is it because you don't want to mar your "political" future? Or don't the students, the simple peasants as some call them, matter any more?

It scares me because important issues like finding the Belchertown Project are coming up and if you play the same political game as you've been playing lately, I don't see any future in student organizations. Instead of sitting up in the Senate office or in Senate meetings playing Governor Sargent or Mr. UMass trustee, fly back down to earth for a while and see what the students really want. Go to Belchertown State School and see people with twice the size of yours or people so badly deformed they are hard to look at. Then think twice about yourself.

You are all puppets and Nick is pulling the strings.

La peste

To The Editor:

The unusual events described in this chronicle are occuring on the campus of the University of Massachusetts at this time.

To be a concise narrator, an honest witness, it is for me to confine myself to what people did or said and what can be gleamed from certain observations noted on campus.

We have been infected, you and I. A plague has struck UMass. It could strike anywhere, anytime; it can hit in small numbers or it can engulf us all.

What shall we call it, this plague? What name does it go by? That I shan't say; and anyhow you wouldn't gain anything by knowing. What we can take into consideration are its symptoms.

They are quite noticible: apathy, disgust, frustration, friction between members of the same species, inflamation of the cerebellum due to the inhalation of certain sedative opiates followed by an occasional fit to destroy any existing form of order.

Prognosis: Hopeless.

Let us examine the character of this truely distinct species of Mankind. I call him Homo Umieus; or in lay terms, the Amherst Man. Please note the reaction this being takes upon his environment.

Crossing the campus at any given hour, the clangorous pealing of Old Chapel bells brings every arm up. Every wrist turns, every sleeve pulls back, every head lowers, and every eye focuses on its time piece.

An! The chimes are early again. It's only two minutes to the hour and the tower proclaims that it is the hour. How absurd!

And indeed, the library is much too tall and the Fine Arts center is an atrocious sight. Ah yes, the Dining Commons. Let us not leave without mention of the endemic pestilence associated with university food.

The entering freshman is immediately confronted with the situations described above. Without hesitation he plunges into the role of student. Being without defense (as there is no vaccine for these conditions) contamination hastily sets in.

It is necessary to note that Homo Umieus is a species of Man, and Man unlike the other animals has the capability of controlling his evolution. Man can rise above the situation, even change it while lower life forms must adapt, run away, or simply cease to exist.

At this time the plague is on the rampage. A more extreme form of this disease is setting in known as the Exam Syndrome; the results are a total lack of personality and the sudden awareness that you do, in fact exist. Why just last week a friend of mine came to the realization that he is not Mozart; quite a disheartening revolation.

There is no true cause for this plague; nor is there a cure. It is not an exceptional phenomenon but the condition in which we live. It is the suffocation of our lives; the strange, menacing atmosphere that chokes our existence.

When this self-imposed malady has left us it will not be victorious. No, it will withdraw as unaccountably as it had arrived. It has always been here, and perhaps always will be. We can not understand it nor should we try to; afterall we are strangers...

Health services tests hypertension

The University Health Services is undertaking a pilot project in the screening of hypertension among college students.

Hypertension, more commonly referred to as high blood pressure, is a common problem in the United States, being a contributing factor to an estimated 250 deaths each year. Physicians estimate that there are some 23 million persons in the United States that have high blood pressure but half of them do not know it.

This disease while more common in older people, still occurs in people of college age. There are two types of hypertension, secondary and essential. Essential hypertension although the exact cause is unknown occurs more commonly in people with a family history of high blood pressure. Secondary hypertension is a result of a specific disease of physical abnormality and can usually be treated with medicine or by surgical means. The college student probably has a higher percentage of secondary forms of hypertension, — and this age group is not spared the excessive mortality of cardiovascular disease that is proportional to blood pressure levels.

There are no special symptoms but when your blood pressure goes up and stays up it may be cause for concern. You can find out by having a simple blood pressure reading. Although one reading is not nearly enough to prove you have blood pressure, it may be an indication for you to seek appropriate medical diagnosis.

So why not get a check up and have your blood pressure taken. Blood pressures will be taken and informational literature available at the following locations and times: Mackimmie Third World Corridor, Thursday, April 18, 6-8 p.m., and Hampden Commons, Monday, April 22, 6-8 p.m. Additional screening sites will be listed in Collegian Notices.

UM's versatile prof from Colombia

Prof Balagura
By DONALD WILHELM
MDC Staff

UMass has a professor who was born in Colombia of Rumanian parents, who has staged several one-man art shows, has appeared in opera companies, has written a novel, and is considered by some to be the best professor UMass has.

If all that isn't enough, Professor Saul Balagura is also a medical doctor and he will soon be leaving UMass to study brain surgery.

Prof. Balagura received his M.D. degree at the Universidad del Valle in Colombia at the young age of eighteen, but then went for his Ph.D degree in Psychology, attending the Univ. of Chicago and Princeton University. At the time he felt that opportunities for research medicine would be reduced by the amount of time he would have to spend in the day-to-day care of patients. To his parents, reasonably well-off members of the professional class, money was no pressing problem.

Prof. Balagura has taught at UMass since 1971, and teaches both graduate and undergraduate courses. His specialty is studying the body mechanisms that induce hunger and thirst.

Brain surgery which the professor will soon be studying, has always been an interest of Prof. Balagura. He studied the brain in medical school, and his hunger and thirst studies have involved hundreds of hours peering at the brains of rats. In addition, he has been working on ways to minimize damage and trauma to the brain during brain surgery. Brain cells, can not be replaced when damaged, so this type of work is important.

He and others have found that much improvement can be done in this area. For example, the use of certain hormones cuts down damage, and altering periods of light and dark that the patient is exposed to can also be useful.

Prof. Balagura has changed his mind about being a doctor. He feels he can "have his cake and eat it too," by being both a researcher and a practicing physician.

Prof. Balagura is no bookworm, and he doesn't believe in hiding in a laboratory. He believes rather in getting involved in the arts as well, and enjoys drawing, writing, and singing. He also takes an interest in his students, though they don't always appreciate his interest, he says.

His speaking style is animated and he likes to throw jokes into his lectures as well; his Spanish accent lends the right touch of exoticness to his speech.

He can certainly be considered a professor with an individualistic and characteristic personality, and many Umies will miss him when he leaves.

Eye bank soliciting donors

On Tuesday, April 23rd and Wednesday, April 24th, a table will be set up in the Student Union to distribute eye donor forms and to accept monetary contributions.

The New England Eye Bank was established in 1946 to provide facilities for the collection, preservation and laboratory analysis of eye tissue, to be used in the research of various ocular disease and in the corneal transplant operation.

A corneal transplant can only help that type of blindness caused by disease or injury to the cornea; the whole eye can't be transplanted successfully. Surgeons estimate that thousands of needlessly blind persons (about 1 in 25) could be helped to regain their sight through this operation. Some facts about the eye bank:

Anyone can donate their eyes (after death) to the eye bank.

There is no disfigurement after removal of donated eyes.

Wearing of glasses, most previous eye surgery or diseases of the eye have little effect on eye donations.

If an eye is found unsuitable for transplant it is used in research: however no eye is used for research if it is suitable for transplant.

The cost of preparation and transportation of eye tissue for transplant is $40 but, there is no charge to patients for the tissue.

The eye bank is able to maintain its services only through individual contributions.

Spring Marathon: all fun and games

By JUDY BOUCHER
MDC Staff

The Spring Marathon at the School of Education this week is anything but "a long contest with endurance the primary factor." More accurately, it is a week of fun, games and learning experiences.

"The basic philosophy of the marathon is to present a vast choice of alternatives in the field of education; and education is a lot of things" said Ms. Sheila Inderlied, co-ordinator of the marathon.

Over 400 events have been scheduled. All presentators have offered their services voluntarily.

"This gives people a chance who would normally not have access to this content to experience it" stated Ms. Inderlied.

The Marathon has been well attended by students from this university and outlying areas. Also present administrators, professional consultants, people in the field not working and the curious have come, as well as people from England, France and India.

"The marathon is unque. Most universities sponsor conferences" said Ms. Inderlied. Participants have remarked on the liveliness and energy of the marathon.

"The marathon is a boat rocker. Education should always be changing; it should be in a state of flux" said Ms. Inderlied.

There are four levels of change that the marathon attempts to effect. "The first level is personal knowledge, the second and third are behavior and attitude, the fourth is the total organization" said Ms. Inderlied.

There has been no field research done to measure the impact of the marathons that have been taking place for six years. The only feedback has been written evaluations and letters from people explaining how they implemented what they have learned.

The last day for the Spring Marathon is Friday.

‘Students at top’ is subject of proposal

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
MDC Staff

The Student Senate Rents and Fees committee has introduced a proposal to Whitmore for reorganizing administration bureaucracy that will allow students “to have a decision made as fast as possible in any situation,” according to Rick Savini, chairperson of the committee.

Savini explains that in the present situation the administration is arranged in a “pyramid” with the students at the bottom. He claims they must go through six layers of bureaucracy to get a proposal through.

The proposal was made to a special committee, headed by Dan Fitzpatrick Associate Dean of Students, set up to study reorganization of the Students Affairs system.

Savini says the committee disagreed with the structure of the proposal but did agree with the general goals.

Under the proposed system a student would be able to go directly to an office of student services and have a decision made on that level.

Savini describes the main problem with the proposal as having to reorganize people and positions already firmly established.

The Whitmore committee should give their initial response to the proposal within a week.

Students against fire

Not only does the United States have the highest per capita loss from fires of any industrialized country but it has neglected the problems of fire prevention and control for far too long, according to SCORE, (Student Competitions on Relevant Engineering, Inc.)

SCORE’s answer is Students Against Fire, a competition designed to bring student ingenuity to bear on fire research and development problems. At UMass and at 26 other institutions across the U.S. and in Canada, student teams are at work readying entries for a final testing session May 1 through 4 in Wisconsin.

The format — selecting a problem of national importance and setting competing teams of students to work on solutions — grew out of the 1970 Clean Air Car Race, in which student-built low-pollution vehicles raced from Massachusetts Institute of Technology to the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena.

SCORE was established as a result of that race and its first project was the 1971-72 Urban Vehicle Design Competition. The UMass entry, a hybrid hydraulic car, won a first place safety award and placed high in other categories in national competition in Milford, Mich.

This year the mechanical engineering professor who led the urban vehicle team, Paul Tartaglia, is heading a new student team for the Students Against Fire competition.

The team includes David O’Connor of South Hadley, Diane Bradford of Southwick and Paul Grocki of Salem, mechanical engineering students; Jenny Ryan and Peter Cadieux of Holyoke, electrical engineering students; Robert Hopkins, Jr., of Chicopee, a psychology major; and Bruce Whitmore, Jr., of Waltham, a business administration major.

Team members conferred with fire experts at a national symposium last semester at the University at Maryland and are now working on these projects: a computerized central detection and warning system, an automatic oven fire extinguisher, a fire helmet with a built-in two-way communications system, heat and flame-resistant clothing for fire fighters and the use of electrical fields for controlling and preventing fires.

A panel from the fire fighting and research fields will rate the student entries and make awards in five categories, plus one grand prize winner.

EAST HARTFORD, Conn. (AP)-After viewing “Deep Throat” a Circuit Court jury yesterdqy ruled the fim obscene by Connecticut standards and banned it from one theater.

The jury of four men and two women took 55 minutes to reach the verdict, the first Connecticut court judgement against the X-rated film. Defense attorney Alvin Pudlin of New Britain immediately filed for an appeal.

The verdict serves as an injunction against any future showing of Deep Throat by operators of the Rockville Cinema in Vernon, where one copy of the film had been seized for evidence. A record three-month run of the film continued at the theater until April 4.

If Pudlin’s appeal is lost, the seized copy of the film would be destroyed.

“I’m disappointed in the result. It’s certainly not a victory for free speech,” said Pudlin. He hoped the ruling would not set a precedent for other towns in Connecticut.

The jury viewed the hour long film on Wednesday morning during a special court recess.

Judge Francis Quinn explained yesterday the three-step requirement for obscenity: if the average person using contemporary community standards finds that the dominant theme on the whole is an appeal to the prurient interest, if the film as a whole goes substantially beyond the customary limits of candor to the point of offensiveness to the common conscience of the community, and if the film is utterly without redeeming social value.

Judge Quinn said the jury should consider the entire state the “community” under the standards.

In testimony Wednesday, Dr. John Felber, a local psychiatrist, said some couples could benefit by viewing the film. He said one couple on the verge of separating called him and he recommended viewing the film. He said they forgot for the moment their intention of a divorce.

He called the film a comedy with shock value. Later, an assistant prosecutor sarcastically called the film “sparkling dialogue with a little action to shock you.”

Deep Throat had been seized in Fairfield by police. The movie was not put on trial in the state before.

Pudlin’s appeal motion will be heard May 1.

Nader-inspired group dying of apathy

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. (AP)-A campus consumer group, inspired by Ralph Nader, is dying because of student apathy.

“The atmosphere on campuses is much different these days, much quieter. There is some apathy there,” says Steve Wisensale, head of the Connecticut Public Interest Research Group ConnPIRG.

“You don’t have the issues you had. You had the war. It was a common denominator, an issue to rally around. The war plugged everybody in. The war isn’t there now.”

Because of this students are not as serious-minded, Wisensale said in a telephone interview yesterday.

“Now streaking is getting all the publicity,” he said.

He said students cannot identify as easily with consumer issues as they did with the war.

College trustees agreed to print a $2 checkoff on January tuition bills. Students who wished to contribute would mark it and add $2 to their fees.

A long struggle for 'Some of My Best Friends' band

By E. PATRICK McQUAID
MDC Staff

Some fairly renown celebrities have performed at UMass in the past; James Montgomery, John MacLaughlin, Count Basie, to cite a few examples. Each time the Collegian has followed their appearance with extensive coverage and everyone knew before and after just who was in town.

The performances of many local groups of course does not attract as much publicity. There's a lot of unnoticed talent floating around Amherst and one band that may deserve some more recognition is Some of My Best Friends.

"You've just got to know the right people" says Rick King, the band's guitar player. A little over a year ago, when the group was quite young, they became the first band to be banned from UMass; quite a distinction one would think! The reason for this absured affair was simply that they knew the wrong people.

At the time John McCloud was head of Campus Food Services and due to some personal friction between he and the group, Some of My Best Friends were fired prior to an evening's performance at the Bluewall.

"It was basic contempt," said bass player Fred Spence. "One night all the bouncers were watching a football game and they told us to turn down the music or else."

Another incident was when the "people in charge" moved a concert from the Campus Center Auditorium to the Student Union Ballroom because they wanted to show a film. The band complained of the acoustics and they were threatened.

The final straw came when McCloud claimed they were breaking their contract when singer Aimy Rosenthal left the band. A disagreement over starting times brought about their dismissal.

It was a long struggle for Some of My Best Friends until last summer when Food Services direction changed hands. The band returned last September and since have built up a notable reputation here at UMass.

It has only been in the recent past that Some of My Best Friends have gained the recognition they have deserved.

Now guitarist Rick King fears that several other local bands will have to fight the same personal prejudices and battle with similar contentions in their attempts to get some where.

"There's a really fine group" says Rick, "out of Boston called the Chris Rhodes band, and they just haven't gotten any bookings. Like I said, they just don't know the right people."

African agriculture subject of speech Sunday

Raymond Coppinger, Professor of Biology at Hampshire College, will present a lecture Sunday at 8 p.m., titled "Technological Agriculture in SubSahara Africa."

Coppinger visited the SubSahara of Africa in the fall of 1973 as a United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization consultant to the Republic of Chad, one of the countries now in the grip of a six-year old drought and mass starvation.

Time magazine has called the crisis "a feast for vultures," a cycle of drought, famine and death. Among the sayings of the nomadic tribesmen affected by the crisis is that "When the camel collapses, the game is over." For them, now lustered in refugee camps and having seen their camels die, the game is indeed all but over.

U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim, on his return from an inspection of the disaster area, says: "Peoples and countries could disappear from the face of the map; this region has not seen such a disaster in two centuries."

Coppinger believes that the problems in this crisis are a foretaste of those to come elsewhere, as "the green revolution" of fertilizer-based agriculture becomes a victim of the inability in underdeveloped countries to acquire sufficient volume of the petroleum used in the nitrogen fertilizers.

In the words of Father Theodore M. Hesburg, the president of Notre Dame University, people in the developed countries will be able, before the year is out, to watch people starve to death on their home television sets.

Coppinger predicts that by the end of the century as many as three of every four people alive on the planet will starve to death, almost the entire underdeveloped world.

All events in the series meet in the Pierpont main lounge in Southwest, and the public is invited.

'I was eating myself to the grave'

So, instead of taking a trip to Rome, he had to use his $1,300 prize for a hospital dieting program.

"I was eating myself into the grave," Aprile, 23, said yesterday at Tampa Memorial Hospital. "It was suicide by the easy installment program. I just made up my mind to lose weight and here I am...hungry but determined."

Last December the robust cab driver consumed more than 6½ pounds of spaghetti at one sitting to capture the title, which will be included in the next edition of the Guinness Book of World Records.

The previous record was a mere 2.1 pounds, set in 1970 by Tom Cresci at Dino's Restaurant in San Diego.

He blames the contest for fouling up his digestive system.

"Right after it, I was hungry three times as much. I started gobbling up things left and right.

"Two hours later I went home and had a steak" Aprile said.

Within six weeks, Aprile said he added 53 pounds to his already rotund 425-pound frame. His waistline expanded to 70 inches. At 5 foot 8, that made his girth greater than his height.

After consulting a doctor, who warned he was eating himself to death, April decided to spend his prize money learning not to eat. In February he entered the hospital for a three-month stay.

He is on a high protein diet, restricted to 400 calories a day, no carbohydrates and plenty of water and exercise.

"I'm down to 404 pounds today," says Aprile, proud of his accomplishment. His goal is a trim 220 - if he can avoid temptation.

At Easter he visited a relative and devoured five pounds of goat meat and a huge portion of his Uncle Jimmy's homemade sausage.

"It's a fight," he admitted. "I slip a little."

Prisoner preaches

DUNDEE, Mich. (AP) — "If you're not serving God, you're serving Satan," John McClish intoned to a small congregation at Calvary Baptist church. "Face the facts. There's no in between."

McClish isn't just serving the Lord. He's also serving 25 years for bank robbery at the federal prison in nearby Milan.

After four years, the 22-year-old from Des Moines, Iowa, says he has been saved, and has persuaded the warden to let him out evenings to preach at the church.

"God saved me from the rotten lust of the world and set me on a rock," McClish told the congregation this week. "But there is more to Christianity than being saved. Jesus wants to use us. When you wake up in the morning, your first thought should be: 'What can I do for God.' "

SAN FRANCISCO ENDURES...

...Hearst decries Saxbe

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)-Newspaper executive Randolph A. Hearst yesterday called U.S. Atty. Gen. William Saxbe irresponsible for suggesting that Hearst's daughter Patricia probably was a willing participant in a bank holdup blamed on members of the Symbionese Liberation Army.

Hearst said Saxbe's comments "confirmed my original view that the man makes irresponsible statements and obviously talks off the top of his head when he should be listening."

Saxbe said Wednesday that he personally thought Miss Hearst "was not a reluctant participant" in the robbery.

...Zebras claim 12th victim

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Policemen swept through the streets of San Francisco yesterday, conducting unprecedented searches of black men in a search for the killer or killers of 12 white victims.

One of the first to be stopped, Robert Brocks, said: "I think the mayor is persecuting the black community for the acts of a few crazy dudes."

But police officials reported that although there was some resentment, most persons subjected to searches understood the reason and hoped it would uncover the man Mayor Joseph L. Alioto described as "a mad killer."

Brooks, a 23-year-old security guard, was stopped at a bus stop only minutes after Alioto announced the stop-and-search procedure as an "extraordinary measure."

"If the killings continue, some other people are talking about retaliation against blacks," said Brooks, who wore a knit cap like one shown in a police sketch of the suspect. "That will be too bad. The thing is bad enough now."

Brooks said officers asked him if he had any first-hand information about the case, code-named "Zebra" after the police radio channel used in the investigation.

THIS WAS the scene in San Francisco's Ingleside district Tuesday night as 23-year-old Nelson T. Sheilds, a recent arrival in the Bay Area lay murdered in what police called another of the motiveless killings that have plagued the city.

FBI pursues Miss Hearst

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley said yesterday that FBI agents are pursuing the Patricia Hearst kidnaping case on the assumption "that she is the victim of pressure or coercion."

"We will be guided by the facts and not by any opinion," Kelley said at a news conference when asked to comment on Atty. Gen. William B. Saxbe's statement that he considered Miss Hearst a common criminal.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The gentleness of Libra is classic and so is the music, the art and the perception which permits opposing forces to meet without clash. This is the seventh sign, signifying partnership, co-operation, statesmanship and marriage. The scale here is wide, ranging from David Ben-Gurion to Gene Autry and Ray Charles. Libra voices are distinctive and listen to the charm sound of Glynis Johns, the smoothness of Rex Reed, the measured beat of Sam Ervin, the high pitch of Truman Capote and the twang of Groucho Marx. The planet is Venus and the water waves can be blue-green with splash and white foam with spent force; the knot is Libra tied with silken rope and the final scene is delicious dissolve.

Quotes and notes

Spanish credits

Any student who has completed Spanish 140 is eligible to register for Spanish 301 — Tutoring Spanish-Speaking Students (formerly Holyoke Tutorial) (3 credits).

It is not necessary to be a Spanish major; each semester about half of the students enrolled in the course are majoring in other areas, yet have found this an exciting and meaningful way to use their language skills and to have direct contact with Hispanic minority groups.

Traditionally the U. Mass. students have gone to Holyoke on Monday and Wednesday mornings to tutor Puerto Rican schoolchildren in bilingual classrooms of the public schools. Tutors work at all levels — grades 1-12 — generally with the teachers in the classrooms at the elementary level, and on a one-to-one basis with the older students. The content of the tutoring sessions is determined by the specific needs of the children involved.

Some tutors also work with Puerto-Rican mothers in their homes, and the course has now been expanded to tutor some of the Puerto Rican inmates of the Hampshire County House of Correction in Northampton. In the fall the bus to Northampton and Holyoke will leave the campus at 8:30 and return about 11:45 a.m., so that students who wish to participate in the program must have these mornings completely free of classes. Tutors generally meet on Friday mornings to discuss their progress or to hear occasional speakers. Students are asked to keep an experiential journal which serves as the basis for a final paper.

For students unable to fit the above times into their schedules, there is also an opportunity to tutor the growing numbers of Spanish-Speaking Students in the junior and senior high schools in Amherst. Tutoring sessions for these students could be scheduled at other times.

Any students who are interested in this course should contact Prof. Nina Scott (5-0613) or Prof. John Staczek (5-0535) in the Spanish Department.

Wyner wins Bogdan award

Accounting Excellence Awards were recently presented to seventeen accounting majors who earned a grade point average of 3.6 or higher.

The Barbara Bogdan Award, which is awarded annually to a senior accounting major who achieved the highest academic grade point average, was presented to Steven Wyner who earned a 4.0 average.

The Woman CPA Award given by the Boston Chapter of the American Society of Women Accountants was awarded to ten women students who had excelled academically during the year.

The Accounting Alumni Award was presented to Bernard J. Britt, Class of 1959 and partner in the Boston office of Coopers & Lybrand for his support and cooperation with the Accounting Department over a number of years.

The Accounting Appreciation Award was presented to the Hartford Office of Ernst & Ernst for its outstanding support over a number of years of the accounting program.

Special awards were also given to the retiring officers of the Accounting Association, President Brian Cuddy, Vice President Betty Andelman, Secretary Earlene Davis and Treasurer John Basdekis. A special award was given to Professor Martin Gosman, adviser to the Association.

A meeting of the Accounting Alumni Advisory Association was held prior to the awards banquet. The association discussed ways in which it and alumni could assist the accounting program. The Association is planning to hold a luncheon meeting for Accounting Alumni in Boston in early October. A committee of accounting alumni headed by David Watt is planning the program.

The instructor is Claudette L. Kiely, a lecturer, teacher, writer, and psychic, who has experienced ESP since her teens. She is a member of the American Society of Psychical Research (ASPR) and the ESP Research Associates Foundation.

Sessions will be 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. each Wednesday and Friday at UMass. Full tuition and registration information is available from the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, UMass, Amherst 01002.

Trackmen hope to pull together at relays

By SCOTT HAYES

Teamwork will be the name of the game tomorrow, as the UMass Track team competes against the top New England squads in a test of team depth, balance and individual excellence at the Boston College Relays.

A year ago, the Minutemen finished fourth with 25 points, 11½ back of Harvard, the team champions. Northeastern was second and Dartmouth finished 4½ points ahead of UMass, in third place.

This year's team is a bit stronger in the distance events, although a shade weaker in the sprints. Coach Ken O'Brien regards the relays as "one of the real important meets of the season." The meet will provide the trackmen with a chance to compete in a variety of events with a common goal—team superiority.

Rather than competing with personal achievement as a priority, the team members will be part of a team effort. Three members of each relay will be depending on the performance of the fourth man. In the field and jumping events, the importance of teamwork is stressed by combining the distances or heights of the three competitors for places. Should an individual fail to come through, he will have let down several teammates as well as the entire team.

UMass should have the same success enjoyed last year in the running events. The best chances for a first place finish will be in the two-mile relay and the distance-medley relay. The chances of the distance-medley quartet may depend on the seriousness of an injury to Randy Thomas' knee, which is a question mark. The team of Jack Maloney, Steve Crimmins, Bill Gillin and Thomas are just a step away from qualifying for the Relay Championship of America, which is held at the prestigious Penn Relays.

The Minutemen placed in nine of the fifteen events they entered last year. This year, UMass will have an added chance to score in the three individual running events. Tom Maguire and John McGrail will be competing in the three-mile run, while Curt Stegerwald, Chris Nelson and Mel Cobb will see action in the 440 intermediate hurdles. Four of last year's top five finishers are returning, so in order for the UMass hurdlers to place, an outstanding race will have to be in store. Tommy Wilson and Phil Broughton, last year's JV winner, will run the 3,000-meter steeplechase.

The BC Relays haven't had a tradition of fine weather. Should the weather be ideal tomorrow, look for some real outstanding performances as the trackmen get their only shot at Harvard and a chance to qualify for the Penn Relays. PASSING THE BATON.......Dan Grigus was in third place after the first day of the decathlon at BC. Abe Davis was the leader with 3560 points, but Grigus might be able to gain ground with the pole vault, javelin and discus coming up tomorrow. Grigus has 3089 points and John Osborne is in seventh. Pete Ryan was forced to drop out of the competition after two events with a sprained ankle.

NEW YORK (AP) — Doc Medich pitched a four-hitter and the New York Yankees scored six runs in the sixth inning, three on Mike Hegan's homer, for a 6-1 victory over the Boston Red Sox Thursday.

Boston's Rick Wise, making his second American League start since he was acquired from the St. Louis Cardinals, blanked the Yankees on four hits until the sixth when Bobby Murcer's leadoff single and Ron Blomberg's second double of the game touched off the big inning.

Graig Nettles delivered the first run with a sacrifice fly and designated-hitter Duke Sims, playing for the first time this season, ripped a run-scoring double over first base.

Gene Michael's double made it 3-0 and rough on Diego Sequi, who walked Jim Mason and struck out Roy White before Hegan unloaded his second homer of the year.

Medich, 2-1, lost his bid for a shutout when Bernie Carbo hit his second homer of the season with two out in the ninth.

Medich walked Juan Beniquez to start the game, and Beniquez stole second with one out. With two down, Medich fell behind Carl Yastrzemski 3-1 and threw the fourth ball intentionally. Rico Petrocelli, making his first appearance since he pulled a muscle on opening day, fouled out to end the threat.

Meanwhile, Wise got out of trouble in the second and fifth. Blomberg opened the second with a double and took third on an infield out. But Wise struck out Sims on three pitches and Michael grounded out.

Jim Mason doubled with one out in the fifth, and walks to White and Hegan loaded the bases. But Thurman Munson lined to shortstop Mario Guerrero and his throw to Griffin doubled White off second.

Wise yielded singles to Murcer and Nettles in the fourth but they were sandwiched around Blomberg's double play grounder. Petrocelli and Dwight Evans hit long drives off Medich in the seventh that were caught on the warning track.

Hawks edge Bruins 4-2 on late goals

BOSTON (AP) — Chicago defenseman John Marks split the Boston defense and scored on a brilliant effort with just over three minutes to go Thursday night, lifting the Hawks to a 4-2 victory over the Boston Bruins in the opener of their best-of-seven National Hockey League series.

Goalie Tony Esposito, who allowed only two goals in the first round playoff victory over Los Angeles, turned in another brilliant performance as the Hawks wiped out Boston's home ice advantage, before a packed crowd of 15,003 at the Garden.

The Hawks added an insurance goal on Dennis Hull's rally into an open net after the Bruins had pulled netminder Gilles Gilbert for a sixth skater in the final seconds.

Esposito kicked out 46 shots in frustrating the high-scoring Bruins. He was particularly sensational against older brother Phil, the NHL scoring champion in five of the last six seasons.

The Hawks, who played defensive hockey in the opening period, opened up in the second session and went in front 2-1 although outshot 21-10 in the period.

Veteran Stan Mikita took a pass from Cliff Koroll and went down the right lane to beat Gilbert with a low slap shot into the far corner at 3:48.

JV's destroy Greenfield

J.V. Baseball
By BILL DOYLE

The UMass junior varsity baseball team clobbered Greenfield Community College 18-2 Wednesday in a two hour forty-five minute farce.

UMass feasted on three Greenfield pitchers for 18 runs and 18 hits. A flock of walks and errors didn't help Greenfield's cause.

Coach Jeff McKay said, "We've come a long way from being behind UConn 4-2 in the bottom of the seventh." He was referring to UMass' last victory. Truer words were never spoken as the game Wednesday was never in doubt after the second inning.

UMass starting pitcher Jim Witherell retired the side in order in the first inning. In their own half of the first inning UMass leadoff hitter John Kearney hit the first pitch thrown to him for a sharp single. A misjudged fly ball and a walk loaded the bases with no outs and it looked as if the game was over already. UMass could only score one run though and Greenfield went ahead 2-1 in the second so the game wasn't quite decided as yet.

The Minutemen wrapped it up though with 5 runs in the bottom of the second. With one out, Bob Moore walked. A stolen base and a wild pitch put the runner on third. After John Kearney walked, a double steal produced a run that tied the score 2-2. After Charlie Johnson's Texas League single Steve Wright put UMass ahead to stay with a long two run triple. Jim Cullen's long double knocked in another run and he scored on an error to make it 6-2. From then on UMass coasted.

In the fourth inning Bill Tremblay's hard smash over the center fielder's head went for a 2 run homer and it was 8-1. Two more runs in the fifth made it 10-1 and an 8 run seventh inning made the final score 18-2.

Winning pitcher Jim Witherell pitched extremely well for six innings, giving up only four hits. Only one of the two Greenfield runs were earned. Despite wildness, Gordon Smith looked good in his three inning relief stint.

The game was played with designated pinch runners and unlimited substitution upon agreement by both clubs. This pleased Coach McKay because it enabled him to get everyone in the ballgame but it had all the fans scratching their heads in confusion.

Bavel Cummings was given the game ball by Coach McKay for coming off the bench and getting two hits.

Recruiting OK here, he says

By MARY MUIRHEAD
MDC Staff

The high school student participating in team sports has a slim chance to eventually play for a professional team, according to Eric Kjeldsen, former UMass gymnastic coach, speaking yesterday as part of the "First Amendment Series."

Of the estimated 200,000 high school students who play basketball each year, 5,700 eventually play as college seniors and only 51 go on to sign professional sports contracts, said Kjeldsen.

Although "athletics is a very different world West of Pennsylvania", UMass is confronted with most of the same problems as the "big-time" sports programs, he said.

Budgetary problems are a primary concern for every intercollegiate athletic program. Scholarship aid, given to players not only for financial need but also as an attraction to desirable players, is a large part of recruitment techniques. At UMass, scholarships are funded through the admission fees and various other unplanned-for sources.

Kjeldsen stated that to his knowledge illegal recruitment tactics are not employed at UMass. He admitted, however, that there has been evidence of such practices at other institutions throughout the country.

Kjeldsen cited tighter admission standards as one means of overcoming recruitment violations. Those students participating in intercollegiate sports must be representative academically of the student body. UMass has, however, established tutorial programs in the past to assist players with academics.

Despite the many problems of intercollegiate sports, Kjeldsen believes that such athletic programs benefit not only the individual player, some of whom might never had attended college but for the athletic opportunities, but the whole university (through publicity) and the surrounding community who participate as spectators.

Crew teams up Saturday

WOMEN

By KATIE KING

The Women's Crew team will row in their season opener tomorrow on Lake Quinsigamond, Worcester, Mass., in a 1000 meter race hosted by W.P.I. The varsity boat, featuring several rookie rowers, will race against W.P.I., Syracuse, Wellesley, UPenn, and Connecticut College. The meet will start at 12:15, and finish at Regatta Point. Coach Bob Spousta expects his team to place well in the meet, and sees this season as "a time for the team to improve, and eventually work up to their maximum speed." The team's goal is capturing the Eastering Championships, and if the girls work to their potential, they will qualify well.

A Row-A-Thon will be held on the Connecticut River Sunday afternoon, sponsored by the National Women's Rowing Association. (NWRA(Each member of the UMass crew team will be sponsored for so much money per mile, and the proceeds will be split between the team and the N.W.R.A. The team expects to row a maximum of 26 miles during the afternoon. Anyone interested in sponsoring a crewmember, may do so by contacting crew members at the UMass boat house.

MEN

By BOB ESTELLE

The varsity crew travels to the Charles in Boston for a regatta against a strong Boston University crew in what will be a strong test for the Minutemen.

UMass will have the same eight that won the first two regattas: Steve Loomer, Bill Fitzpatrick, Peter Flood, Peter Berg, Mike Kaczmarek, John Moynihan, Jack Watkins, Paul Gowen and Rich Clair. Bruce Kline is the coxswain.

UMie golfers undefeated

By RICH SEVIERI

The UMass golfers remained undefeated on the young season when they swept a tri-match from Boston College and Holy Cross yesterday afternoon at Hickory Ridge Country Club. The Minutemen's 402 score topped 2nd place BC by a resounding 10 strokes. Holy Cross finished third at 413.

For the second match in a row a transfer student playing in his first match for UMass was the team medalist. Last week at Yale it was Howard Terban with a 76. It was Ken Stawcz's turn to make an auspicious debut yesterday.

Stawcz had a 79 after scrambling back from a disastrous start. He was 10 over par after 10 holes, then caught fire and played the final 8 holes in 3 under par.

"Stawcz showed me a lot today," said coach Fan Gaudette. "He was in trouble early but he kept his head and fought back to shoot a good round. He had birdies on 15 and 16 and those holes were playing real tough."

Teammates Jim Moriarty, Joe Artman, and John Lasek all finished one stroke behind Stawcz at 80. Howie Terban slipped to an 83. Terban's round was the opposite of Stawcz's. Terban was only 4 over after 12 but faltered on the last 6 holes to finish 11 over on the par 72 layout.

Hickory Ridge C.C. was playing longer than usual yesterday. The tees were moved all the way back and with the wind it took more club than usual to get to some of the holes. The course is still a little wet and drives are getting less distance and little roll.

"If you shot 79 or 80 on this course today you had a good round," said Fan Gaudette.

Gaudette is pleased with the progress of his team and hopes they will be ready for the Yankee Conference Championships next Friday at Stowe Acres C.C. in Stowe, Mass.

"We're 3-0 after playing three good golf schools," said Gaudette. "I think we should be in good shape for the YanCons next week."

Triple Crown for Boston?

I know it's still early in the baseball season but both the NBA and NHL playoffs are well underway. Seeing as I picked the Red Sox to win the pennant, and the Bruins are favored to win the Stanley Cup, and the Celtics have a good chance to win the NBA championship, especially with their current domination of the Knicks (knock on wood) it may be the first time that one city wins the triple crown, championships in the three overlapping sports.

There's never been three winners in a city before, in fact, not since 1933 has a city had two "world champs."

However, seven times since 1928 when the NHL started (baseball's World Series began in 1903 and the NBA playoffs in 1947) a city has had two teams that won either the championship or a divisional crown.

In 1928, the New York Yankees won the American League championship and the New York Americans won the NHL's Stanley cup. Again in 1933 the Yankees and the Americans won respective championships (In 1960 the Pittsburgh Pirates and Philadelphia Warriors won world championships in the same state).

In 1965 the L. A. Dodgers won the World Series and the Lakers were NBA runners-up. Again in 1966 the Lakers were west division champs (losing to Boston in the finals) and the Dodgers were N. L. champs (losing the series to Baltimore).

In 1968 the St. Louis Hawks won the NBA West division as the St. Louis Cardinals were baseball's National League champs (losing 4-3 to Detroit in the series).

In 1969 and 1971 the Baltimore Orioles were A. L. champs (losing to the Mets and Pirates respectively in the series), and the Bullets were East division champs in '69 and Central champs in 1971.

In 1972 Boston had its only taste of co-winners (tri-winners if you count the Whalers who won the WHA's first Avco cup).

The Bruins, you remember, were the Stanley cup champs and the Celtics were Atlantic division champs (the Red Sox lost the pennant by ½ game).

And last year the Knicks were NBA champs and the Mets were National League champs losing to Oakland 4-4 in the series.

This year Boston has the best chance to produce co- or tri- winners. Baltimore is already out of it (Bullets lost to New York). New York has a chance but the Knicks don't look so good right now. Chicago has an outside chance, as does Milwaukee (outside because of the Brewers) and so, for that matter, does Montreal.

It's all speculation now, we'll know more about it in a couple of weeks. I'd sure like to see a bunch of championships come to Boston.

NOTICE

As you know, the New England weather has not been cooperative with our interests this spring. As a result of the snow, rain and wet fields, we have been unable to conduct the first two weeks of the Softball and Soccer Tournaments.

The loss of this much time makes it impossible to continue with the original Round Robin Tournament Schedule.

Consequently, we are dropping the Round Robin Schedules and will begin a Single Elimination Campus Tournament in both Softball and Soccer, which will commence on Wednesday, April 24, 1974.

However, and PLEASE NOTE, the Round Robin Schedules which you have will continue to be followed up to Tuesday, April 23rd. We will continue to provide equipment and officials for these contests which will not count towards team records but which will provide valuable practice experience for all teams.

Please be aware that...EVERY TEAM HAS BEEN INCLUDED IN THE SINGLE ELIMINATION CAMPUS CHAMPIONSHIP SOFTBALL AND SOCCER TOURNAMENT.

Batsmen face crucial series

Staff Photo-Dan Smith

They say pitching is 75 per cent of baseball. After Wednesday's 11-8 loss to Springfield, the UMass baseball team will have to improve its pitching in order to win New Englands.

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

The horserace has started.

The qualifying heats are underway. They will narrow down the field of New England collegiate baseball squads and send the teams with the four best times to Fenway Park for the NCAA District I playoffs.

Round-robin double elimination play will then narrow down the field to one, and for that squad it'll be off to Omaha for the Collegiate World Series.

Last year all baseball talk was centered around the "Omaha Trail". It's a long trail which depends primarily on consistence throughout the season of a team's performance. That consistency has to be in the W column, not the L column!)

Something very unusual has happened this time around.

The gates opened, as usual about two weeks ago when the Minutemen entertained the BC Eagles, and the Minutemen riders fell to the ground, as a result of BC (4-9) and Springfield (8-11) harassments.

This weekend finds the hitters with a chance to get "back on their horse," by faring well against UNH (home-Friday, away-Saturday) and Holy Cross (away Sunday).

For the 3-4 Minutemen it's a chance to turn things around, and get back over the .500 mark, where they're not accustomed to being located.

Coach Dick Bergquist will ask Jeff Reardon, a southpaw (and a freshman) to tow the hill this afternoon at Earl Lorden Field, game time 3:00 p.m. His opposite will be Bill Tufts, also a southpaw, who hopefully will be the cause for the Minutemen's team batting average to jump a few points (now at a meek .246).

UNH has played but two games, but have fared well against a strong team, Providence College (splitting a doubleheader).

On Saturday the two teams will hike up to Durham to face-off at 1:00, with Craig Allegezza facing Rich Gale. The home-and-home series will open the Minutemen's defense of the Yankee Conference title.

It's really a grueling schedule, for after little more than 10-12 hours of rest, the hitters will take to the road again to tangle with Holy Cross Sunday afternoon under Interstate 290 in Worcester. Coach Bergquist couldn't say at this moment in time who will pitch for him on Sunday.

So this is a testing weekend for the UMass baseball squad. Three victories would be equivalent to an 800 (perfect) and put them back into the forefront of New England baseball.

Tomorrow's game time again is 3:00 at Earl Lorden Field.

Gorillas battle Fairleigh Dickinson

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Garber's Gorillas will travel to New Jersey to meet Fairleigh Dickinson College on Saturday in a game starting at 2 p.m.

The Gorillas are just coming off a 9-4 win over Harvard on Wednesday. They played inconsistently in that game. In the first half they executed well on plays that eventually resulted in goals. Other times they had trouble making passes and picking up loose balls. Leading 5-1 at one point, the Gorillas then began to play aggressively — in fact, overaggressively. They picked up some unnecessary penalties which allowed the Harvard Crimson to close the score to 5-4 at halftime.

UMass came out to play some solid lacrosse in the second half, though. They played good defense while shutting out Harvard. They scored four goals themselves and certainly the Crimson netminder was a factor in keeping the score so low.

UMass coach, Dick Garber, felt that his team made a lot of mistakes. They certainly did not play up to their potential. Said Coach Garber, "We are going to work in practice on the 'man down' and 'extra man' situations."

Fairleigh Dickinson is a division I team. They play some top teams and thus far this season they are 3-1. Dickinson lost their first game to Princeton (ranked 13th in the country) and have won their last three games, including one against C.W. Post College who, says Coach Garber, "are a real fine lacrosse team."

Last season, the Gorillas beat Fairleigh Dickinson by a 13-5 margin. In a series which thus far has three games, Dickinson has yet to beat the Gorillas. "You can't go by comparative scores," said Coach Garber, "Dickinson has won three straight games over some good teams."

"Fairleigh Dickinson looked good when Charlie Hardy (assistant coach) saw them play Springfield College. They have a good midfield consisting of Jerry Hall, Ronnie Spotts, and Mike McCormack. They also have a fine attackman in Art Beccaris."

Dickinson will have a tough time against the Gorillas. They will have to contain the high-scoring attack of UMass, especially Harry McVey and Jeff Spooner. Dickinson may also find it tough to penetrate the UMass defense to shoot on goalie, John (O.J.) Rutledge.

LACROSSE NOTES — UMass goaltender John (O.J.) Rutledge is ranked second in the nation in saves per game. Rutledge has a 19.5 saves per game average . . . UMass will travel to Boston College on April 23 to meet the Eagles in a night game at Alumni Stadium before returning home to face Holy Cross on April 25 . . . The Gorillas are presently ranked ninth in the nation and can conceivably make the top eight by winning the rest of their games. By finishing in the top eight, they will win a berth in the NCAA post-season lacrosse tournament . . . Harry McVey, the Gorillas' top scorer, had a hand in eight of the nine goals that UMass scored against Harvard . . . The Gorillas have only five home games this season out of a total of fourteen games. The Boston College game, to be played under the lights at B.C. was originally scheduled to be played at UMass.

Expansion of gymn programs brought time, money problems

By WALT POWERS

Editors note — This is the second article in a series by the Collegian Sports investigative team on the announced phase-down of the men's gymnastics team by the Athletic Department.

In 1962 there was a small "girl," (they were "girls", not "women" then) gymn club. The club performed in several "functions" throughout the year, and practiced a very rudimentary, totally noncompetitive form of gymnastics. Ms. Kjeldsen, a Springfield graduate and one of the country's pioneer competitive gymnastics coaches, offered her services as a part-time instructor to the Women's Phys. Ed. department and offered to start a team.

She was hired as a part-time P.E. teacher and given the go-ahead on starting a team. Women's program's were looked down upon then, and Ms. Kjeldsen had no support other than that given to clubs. The team was allowed to practice two nights a week in WOPE (now NOPE) and the women practiced in the gymn between classes and in the hallways during classes. The team paid for travel and uniforms out of their own pockets.

During the 1963-64 season the women's team began to use the auxiliary gymn along with the men. The decision to let the women's team use the facility was Erik Kjeldsen's. Both teams were small, there was plenty of space, and no conflict in equipment use. Had both programs remained at unchanged, there is no reason to expect that major conflicts would have developed. The winds of athletic expansion were blowing at gale force that year, however, and in 1963 they blew both programs on a course that would result in collision in the early 70's.

The decision for mens team to join the Eastern League came at the end of the 1962-63 season from Dean and Athletic Director Warren McGuirk. Basically, Erik Kjeldsen was told to work toward upgrading the quality of the men's team to prepare it for entry into the EIGL in the 1965-66 season. The directive originated from the Dean's Office, but conformed exactly to the wishes of Kjeldsen.

Though still officially a club, the women was treated as a varsity team by Ms. Kjeldsen in the 63-64 season. There were daily workouts modeled exactly like the men's program and the women tried to compete in a similar 7-8 meet schedule. 1963 was also the year the women received their first budget, a small one of $400.00. That year the first women's intercollegiate dual meet in New England history took place between Springfield and UMass.

Gymnastics was finally recognized as a "women's sport" in 1964 and given a $600.00 budget that remained virtually unchanged for several years. In 1965. Southern Illinois University held the first National Invitational Women's Gymnastics Championships, the forerunner of the present AIAW nationals, and UMass finished sixth. The women attended every subsequent year and never finished worse than sixth. Their high finishes attracted coverage from gymnastics magazines and afterwards women gymnasts gravitated toward UMass, active recruitment of women became more intense that year.

In effect, both teams went "big time" in the mid-sixties and problems went hand in hand with success. Conflicts arose over use of facilities and the high calibre of the programs demanded more coaching. Until the mid-sixties both the men's and women's programs had maintained a close association, but as the programs expanded they separated. As the gym became crowded and both teams expanded, problems concerning time, equipment allocation, arose and became more difficult for the teams to work effectively together.

Both Kitty and Erik Kjeldsen had decided for career purposes to retire quietly from coaching in the early-to-mid 70's. Teaching P.E. and coaching at the Eastern level had become an 11-hour a day, seven days a week, position for both of them; both were getting paid essentially only a third of their salary for what had become full-time work.

In 1970 both Erik and Kitty Kjelsen could look back on a decade that had seen both women's and men's teams rise from relatively nonentities to respected Eastern powers that were utilizing Boyden Gymnasium to its fullest capacity. Both coaches had felt satisfied with their achievements and both planned to retire quietly to pursue their careers.

The growth that marked the sixties though, was almost over and events that were inceivable in 1960 were beginning to exert their effects on the school of physical education. The school had stopped growing and consequently the rapidly increased school funds became stable. There was a marked increase in athletic competition for women and there were conflicts about their use of Boyden auxiliary gymn. These factors contributed to the early retirement of the Kjeldsens after the 1971-72 season.

"From the Godfather"

Carcasses pose health threat

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

Residents of North Village are putting up a stink over animal carcasses which they feel have been "dumped" by the University near their apartment complex.

To the displeasure of some, rotting flesh and bones are finding their way into the neighborhood via dogs — posing what several health authorities call a "definite health hazard."

Bernard L. Hilton, Stockbridge farm superintendent, said the animals, primarily used in research projects, are buried on University property in the vicinity of the apartments.

"I don't know of any problems...you have a cemetery; the animals have this," he told the Collegian in an interview.

"I've been down there three weeks ago and the animals are buried...I don't want to do your research. Why don't you go down there and see for yourself," he said.

When told the Collegian has learned of animal remains lying in an open pit, Hilton snapped: "You must not be looking at the right pit."

William Christie, a UMass student who has resided at North Village for nearly two years, said he is "fed up" with having to remove parts of animal bodies from his property.

"Last May I had to call the campus police to take away a horse head which was across the street from my front window," he said.

"It was really gross...like something out of the Godfather...a fairly huge horse head apparently dragged here by dogs."

Christie said the situation has existed from the beginning of his family's residence and added it has caused him to pay close attention to his dog.

"One day I found by the side of my house a bread bag with three freshly skinned rats inside of it. Another day I found a piece of some animal hide on my front lawn," he said.

"It's getting to the point where I can't allow my dog in the house. When he goes to kiss you, you know where he's been by his white nose and the foul odor."

Leo Ojala, a former resident, said the problems created by the dead animals was one reason for his leaving North Village.

"I called the Amherst Board of Health one time and they told me they couldn't do anything about it because it was on state property," he said.

"Once in a while the Physical plant would come over and throw a few inches of dirt over the animals. But nobody has really done anything about the problem."

Charles Drake, Amherst director of Public Health, said he thought the matter had been corrected two years ago.

"We've been through this a couple of times before, so it is not necessarily news to us..it's a UMass problem," he said.

"Apparently we'll have to go after it again. It is a common agricultural practice to bury dead animals that have died of natural causes. But they should be disposed of properly and not just dumped."

Drake acknowledged "a definite problem in terms of a health hazard" if the animal carcasses were left exposed.

Jack Littlefield, UMass director of planning, said the situation was "news" to him and added he doubted the validity of its existence.

He declined to comment, but added he would bring the matter up at a staff meeting Wednesday.

A remote possibility exists that diseases communicable from animal to man could be spread throughout North Village because of the dead animals, according to Fred T. Degregorio, from the University Division of Food and Drugs.

"It definitely is a public health hazard, regardless," he said.

"I don't know who is putting them there, but the police should take notice."

Although there are now state laws directly dealing with the proper disposal of animals bodies, district sanitarian Peter Mokrzecky said it would be indirectly covered by waste disposal regulations.

"Sanitary land fill regulations would consider it a special waste," he said.

"Anything anybody throws out would be considered a waste. You just don't leave animal bodies lying around."

Mokrzecky said proper disposal would be incenration or burying the animals deep enough so that animals would not dig them up.

The Gov. agrees

Daniels case "poorly handled"

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

Gov. Francis W. Sargent Saturday acknowledged failure on his administration's part in the treatment of Russell Daniels - the former Belchertown State School inmate now serving a life sentence in Norfolk prison on a murder conviction.

In a special meeting here with a student group supporting an appeal and reevaluation of the case, the Governor fielded questions for nearly an hour agreeing to answer a list of the group's demands within a 10 to 14-day period.

Sargent had announced Friday that Daniels was eligible for transfer to the Belchertown State School. The decision had been formulated by the department heads of Corrections, Human Services and Mental Health and the superintendants of the two institutions, he told the group.

Susan Sherry, a spokesman for the students, asked that a special citizen's review commission be established by the Governor to investigate Springfield police practices and that the Department of Mental Health be reviewed by a similar commission.

Other demands revolving around the Sargent administration's handling of the area of human services were presented in the discussion.

"The Russell Daniels case was very obviously poorly handled; what can I say," Sargent said.

"I hope the state can be helpful in the future in avoiding instances of this type ... frankly, they've been very neglectful."

Regarding an attack by students on the Governor's administrating of human services, he replied: "It's not right for government not to act until there is a public furor. The only excuse that I can give you is that we're trying to revamp a whole system."

"I've fought for a long time and have scars all over my back from some of the failures. We're trying to change a great many things — and certainly have started something which hasn't moved for years."

Asked whether he thought it would be appropirate to pardon Daniels, Sargent said he could not answer. However he agreed that Daniels' possible transfer was a semi-vindication.

In an address later in the evening the Governor said he believed Daniels "has lost his rights unfairly."

Sargent said he would use the Daniels case to persuade the legislature to restore proposed cuts of the Department of Mental Health budget.

Following the discussion he admitted his administration's shortcomings in human services "will be pointed to" by his opponent as a key campaign issue in his re-election bid for Governor.

Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, who attended the session, called the student effort "a large victory for Russell Daniels; a large victory for students over a bureaucracy which has not been doing its job."

"What pains me the most is to see a Governor come in here and say 'gee, what can we do'," Olver said.

"The Governor can't absolve himself from his administration's inaction as he has done all along."

Sargent said Daniels' misfortune was the fault of "a system which has been antiquated for a whole life time."

Daniels' friends react

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

Russell Daniels' supporters clearly do not trust governor Francis Sargent.

Daniels supporters interviewed by the Collegian Saturday said they were not impressed with Sargent and they seriously question his motives.

"Sargent embarrassed himself," said Lynn Nichols, a UMass graduate and one of the key organizers.

"He had no response for us," she said. "I think he'll avoid the issue as much as possible."

Nichols said Sargent was politically motivated when he issued a statement Friday that Daniels is "eligible" for transfer out of Norfolk State Prison to a more appropriate institution.

Said graduate student Ted Smith: "I question why he came to the decision of transferring Russell on the eve of the conference. It was an act of appeasement...but was it for Russell or for votes?"

Dr. Benjamin Ricci, the UMass professor greatly responsible for the recent outcry, said he is withholding judgement. "I want to wait and see what he (Sargent) does."

The day's praises were reserved for the supporters themselves. "I'm very proud," Ricci emphasized, "on the role played by the students. They have brought great credit to the University."

Dukakis blasts Sarge

By MARK VOGLER

BELCHERTOWN — Michael Dukakis, Democratic candidate for Governor, Sunday called Gov. Francis W. Sargent's record in human services "outrageous". He said how to deliver effective administration in the area is "no secret."

"The Governor's concern for the quality of human services is the most outrageous example of government neglect at the state level that I have ever observed in 14 years of state politics," Dukakis said.

"It's pretty irresponsible when citizens have to bang on the door for the Governor to take action."

Dukakis said he considered human services a very important campaign issue for November's election prior to an address before the Belchertown State School Friends Association, a citizen's advocacy group for the residents at the state school.

The Democratic candidate was the first of the gubernatorial hopefuls to acknowledge an invitation to meet with the Friends.

Friends President Dr. Benjamin Ricci, of Amherst, said he extended six more invitations to the Governor, but predicted the dates would be filled with other commitments.

"A governor has got to appoint people who are competent and take their job seriously. If they don't want to do the job, then they should be fired," Dukakis said.

"A responsible governor expects a very high standard of performance and expects the people under him to live up to it. The Governor has obviously not done this. I don't think the people of this state want to put up with it any longer."

Dukakis said his personal record in human services reveals the cosponsoring of all major reform legislation.

He said his decision to run for governor is because "I got sick of passing legislation which was not implemented by various administrations."

Goldman calls court irresponsible

Ed. Note---For MDC Reporter Mark Vogler, it was a busy weekend, covering Sargent, Dukakis, Goldman, and Pomerantz. Vogler's stories appeared not only in today's Collegian, but also in papers throughout New England via the AP and UPI.

State Mental Health Commissioner William Goldman Saturday called the Massachusetts General Court "very irresponsible" for its proposed DMH budget cuts.

"They'll burn the candle at both ends -- jeopardizing the present quality of life in our state mental institutions while also making impossible our goal of deinstitutionalization," Dr. Goldman told the Collegian in an interview.

Goldman was at the University of Massachusetts as keynote speaker for the Governor's Conference on the Developmentally Disabled.

"Gov. Sargent can have tremendous impact on the final negctiations with the Senate, and then in conference committee between the Senate and House," he said.

"I pray that the Governor comes through. If the leadership in the executive does not restore these funds, then the Department of Mental Health cannot carry out its legal operation."

According to Goldman, he has been unable to get either a rationale or details of the House's proposed cuts this week. "I just can't seem to get any information out of the Legislature on this matter," he said.

In his keynote address Goldman said the central issue in his mind is whether "Government, large and traditionally bureaucratically irresponsible, can provide quality care for all its citizens."

Goldman, who was appointed to succeed Dr. Milton Greemblatt last spring as DMH commissioner, said he was able to make government work in San Francisco in the area of human services where he worked with the retarded.

"I want to find out whether it can be done here on the state level — where it has never been done," he said.

"This is the state where it can be done, at least theoretically. Massachusetts has time and again proven itself excellent in spirit and letter of the law.

"With our commitment to ongoing responses to all human service systems, we are at the hallmark of bringing justice and dignity to the lives of all our citizens."

Goldman labeled the coming week "a test of the Commonwealth to honor its laws" in providing adequate care for the disabled.

Mrs. Francis W. Sargent, in welcoming remarks, said active citizen participation is necessary to ensure imput for disabled persons.

"If progress is going to be made, your continued pressure is needed," she said.

Mrs. Sally Barnhart, of the Hampden County Association for Retarded Citizens, said prospects for improving the quality of care for the disabled seem promising.

"However, we have been excited before and have seen our proposals disintegrate in the midst of bureaucracy," she said.

"Our citizens should be supported in every possible way by the government. Gov. Sargent has a great deal of influence to exert."

Special workshops dealing with problems of epilepsy, mental retardation, cerebral palsy and other handicaps took place in the UMass campus center during the afternoon.

The conference was held to enable disabled people and other concerned members of the public to speak out on what they believe is needed in the way of special education, services, training and community residences.

A similar conference is scheduled May 4 at Boston State College.

State budget cut could set back Mental Health

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

The House's proposed $2-million cut of Gov. Francis W. Sargeet's $188-million Department of Mental Health budget could have "drastic results" in Western Massachusetts, officials here warn.

According to Dr. Jay M. Pomerantz, acting health administrator of Region I--which constitutes the four counties in this area--it could mean a $600,000 loss for the region's mental health facilities.

"The House action is definitely not in line with the spirit of the Belchertown state school suit," Pomerantz said Sunday.

Pomerantz said he did not see the adequacy of the Governor's budget request—identical to this year—since state schools for the retarded gained $3-million in legal concessions as a result of the Belchertown suit.

The House action would mean a $120,000 cut for Northampton State Hospital and $100,000 less for the Belchertown State School.

"The region is already 24 per cent behind the state in staffing and the administering of mental health services, Pomerantz said.

"It would completely do away with the children's money available to gear up for Chapter 766."

Surplus federal property at Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee and a proposed community center in Springfield could be jeopardized if funding is cut, Pomerantz said.

Leonard Waldman, legislative chairman of the area mental health board, said concerned citizen groups would be lobbying this week with Western Massachusetts senators.

State Mental Health Commissioner William Goldman Saturday at the University of Massachusetts called the legislature's action "very irresponsible."

Goldman was at the Amherst campus as keynote speaker for the Governor's Conference on the Developmentally Disabled.

"I hope the Senate will restore some sanity to the Department of Mental Health budget," he said.

"The pieces are already beginning to fall into place, and now the House is trying to knock the blocks out. It's just totally irresponsible."

A decrease in funding would halt the Department's progress in its goal to move the mentaaly retarded from huge institutions to community based centers, Goldman said.

However, Gov. Sargent has justified decreasing funding because of de-institutionalization. Since large institutions are cutting their population by 50 per cent, budget cuts are authorized, Sargent said.

University Dancers hold their annual performance

By ROBERTA MARTONE
MDC Staff

There was more than dancing in Bowker Auditorium as The University Dancers and The UMass Concert Dance Group gave their annual performance last week. In a program utilizing a wide spectrum of dance techniques, the performees also conveyed an understanding of theatrics and sheer pleasure in their work.

The opening number, "Oedipus's Lament", was one of the more serious numbers of the evening. The dance entailed a solo performance by David Grabau, who has been with The University Dancers for a year. Through the use of amazing muscle control and facial expressions, Grabau gave a convincing impression of a tormented Oedipus.

The second dance, "Awakening", provided a nice contrast to the first one. The number, performed by Donna Bryant, Donna Potter, Deborah Sweeny and Michelle Taylor, was set to the rhythmic music of Santana. Dressed in red and black tights, the girls executed a series of formations, splits and floor exercises, together and alone. The total feeling of the dance was fluid.

One of the more ambitious numbers of the evening was performed by Andrea Watkins, an associate director of the University Dancers, and David Smith, who has been with the dancers for three years. "A Channel Of Continuence" was not your ordinary duet. Based on two different sounds made by each performer, the dance revolved around the relationship between them.

The climax of the dance came when Smith was unable to voice the sound associated with Ms Watkins. At this point, the audience was confronted with a series of unnerving screams uttered by the dancers. However, the number ends on a more promising note with Ms Watkins and Smith performing their steps and sounds together. The curtain closed on their continuing movements.

A farcical number entitled "Collidescope" brought laughter from the audience. The curtain opened on a brightly lit stage across which the dancers proceeded to run, bumping into each other. The entire number

Ellsberg speaks on gov't secrecy

By ERNIE KING
MDC Staff

ASHBY — The practice of secrecy has grown up since World War II and has "changed the character of our government as defined in the consitution," Daniel Ellsberg said as he spoke before some 400 people Thursday night at the First Parish Unitarian Church here.

Ellsberg said every major institution in this country, the legislature, the courts, the press, the schools, had in the past been collaborating in what he called a "conspiracy of ignorance." He added that "This has given rise to ambitious imperfect men."

The practice of secrecy is one that is shared by every nation in the world, he said. Ellsberg believes that when states have the opportunity to keep secrets they will "lie and abuse that power to deceive their public."

Ellsberg contends that this power of secrecy has the ability to allow the rulers of the worlds' nations to act as courts. It can transform a president into a king and this is "close to what we have in this country today."

Daniel Ellsberg

"Openness, truth, Gahndian principles and the Quaker movement all have their risk - risk of error, risk of personal error, risk of moral error," Ellsberg said. He added that our government has tried to focus our eyes on the risk of openness and truth to divert our eyes from the risk of war and violence."

The American people voted for a man who promised that "peace was at hand" then had to watch him carry out massive bombing raids in South East Asia, Ellsberg said. "The American people have had as much control over that bombing as the Russian people had over the invasion of the Czechoslovakia," he said.

Ellsberg went on to say that "Watergate has had a cleansing effect on the nation." The courts are judging, the legislature is investigating and reporters are reporting. It is, he said, "The most hopeful phenomenon I've seen in years on the reality of government." But he warned that "we could slip back into apathy" if the public and our institutions let governmental misconduct slip through our hands.

Commenting on why he turned the "Pentagon Papers" over to the press Ellsberg said he was inspired by the "draft registers" and the "anti-war movement." He added, "They refused to cooperate, to accept the lies," meaning members of the anti war movement.

Ellsberg said that it was at the time of the secret wars in Cambodia and Laos. He said government lies were not just random statements but were all centrally related to the war effort. Ellsberg declared, "I decided that no one was ever going to tell me when to lie again."

Ellsberg went on to say he is fascinated by the "new breed of defendants." He said it is nostalgic for him to watch the evening news and hear about the trial of John Mitchell or the testimony of Richard Kliendiest. "They were my Attorney Generals," he said referring back to his trial.

He warned that they have only been indicted and that indictments are not proof of guilt. "They are still entitled to a fair trial, and the Grand Jury seems to feel that they are entitled to several of them."

Johnson says US involvement in SE Asia is not over

By MIKE ALLAIN
MDC Staff

Russell Johnson, a staff member of the American Friends Service Committee who has lived in Southeast Asia on and off for the past thirteen years, told an audience of about thirty persons Thursday night that United States involvement in Southeast Asia "is not over."

Speaking in Converse Hall in a slide presentation and speech presented by the Amherst College Religion Department, Johnson told his audience that South Vietnam, the Philippines, and Thailand all have corrupt dictatorships financed heavily by the United States.

He cited the practice of taking political prisoners as one of many reasons why despair and insurrection are the prevailing sentiments in certain Southeast Asian countries.

"In Cambodia and South Vietnam," said Johnson, "one finds examples of fathers killing their families, and then themselves, in despair."

"And while the inflation rate in South Vietnam has risen three-hundred per cent in the past year, the repressive apparatus of this dictatorship depends on the American taxpayer."

Johnson said he was told by a U.S. diplomat on a recent visit to Cambodia that "the U.S. is in Cambodia to help this country decide its destiny. We are dealing with its welfare, and not with American interests, as we are told."

In the Philippines, where martial order was declared in September of 1972, Johnson said, revolutionary feeling is so intense that the Muslim, Christian, and Maoist factions are gradually unifying in their zeal to overthrow the Marcos regime.

In Thailand on October 8, 1973, approximately 400,000 persons rallied in support of students who demanded that a new constitution be drawn up. On the next day the military, who were not provoked by the determinedly non-violent students, opened fire and killed six persons, Johnson said.

The bloodshed climaxed on October 14 — now referred to as "Bloody Sunday" — resulting in 300 deaths and 2,000 injuries. The ammunition and training of the military who carried out the massacre were provided by the United States government, he said.

SW lights up

By STEVE TETREAULT
MDC Special

Southwest will soon be bathed in lights.

Part of a Spring Mardi Gras to take place Saturday, May 4, spotlights will be placed on the five towers in Southwest, illuminating both the area and the heavens.

The Spring Mardi Gras festivity will feature a variety of activities, according to coordinator Clayton Chandler, including arts and crafts booths, game booths, food and beverages, as well as musical entertainment.

Chandler said a raffle sale is now in progress. Among its prizes are ten-speed bicycles, free dinners, and package store gift certificates. In all, over 60 prizes will be distributed.

The Southwest Environmental Concerns class, headed by Professor Raymond Worby, has sponsored several activities throughout the year to improve the area. They have planted trees and bushes in Southwest, and last semester sold small plants and flowers for students to keep in their rooms.

With this Mardi Gras the class hopes to improve the environment of Southwest by bringing people out of their dorms and together, in Chandler's words, "to have a good time."

Watergate committee cites "roadblocks"

IRS role questioned in Hughes donation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Watergate Committee's investigation of a $100,000 campaign contribution by Howard Hughes is focusing as much on the Internal Revenue Service as on the money itself, an informed source says.

Committee investigators have uncovered what they consider to be questionable procedures in the IRS's own probe of the billionaire's contribution. The money was given to President Nixon's close friend Charles "Bebe" Rebozo in two installments in 1969 and 1970.

The questions were raised in a nine-page memo sent by the committee's assistant chief counsel Terry Lenzner on April 15 to committee members. The Associated Press has obtained access to the memo.

The questions were raised in a nine-page memo sent by the committee's assistant chief counsel Terry Lanzner on April 15 to committee members. The Associated Press has obtained access to the memo.

In a statement issued yesterday, the IRS said it is not IRS practice to discuss publicly any pending investigation or whether it is engaged in an investigation. The statement said:

"The IRS flatly denies that it has engaged in any cover-up regarding the committee's investigation and asserts that it has been cooperating with the committee staff to the fullest extent consistent with the disclosure limitations in the tax laws.

The public disclosure this weekend of the contents of a memorandum from the assistant chief counsel of the committee is of particular concern to the IRS when, in fact, it has been informed by the chief counsel of the committee that the memorandum has not been reviewed by the chief counsel nor the members of the committee.."

Lenzner's memo also complained that the IRS had put "frustrating and debilitating roadblocks" into the committee's investigation of the contribution, by refusing to turn over material uncovered in IRS' own probe.

Rebozo has said he told only Nixon's secretary, Rose Mary Woods, of the contribution and that the kept it intact in a safe deposit box for three years before returning it to Hughes representatives.

Ulster violence claims 1001st victim

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — One person was killed yesterday, seven were wounded, and demonstrators tried to shout down the Archbishop of Canterbury as he called on Christians to seek peace in Northern Ireland.

The man shot and killed was a garage owner. He was the 1,001st victim of 4½ years of violence in the province, authorities said.

Reporting on injuries, officials said a couple was shot and injured, the legs of a policeman and a civilian were blown off, two other persons were wounded by guerrilla gunfire and a post office was bombed, seriously injuring a passerby.

Dr. Michael Ramsey, primate of the Anglican Church, was forced to halt his sermon until about 300 demonstrators were escorted from St. Anne's Cathedral in Belfast after a brief scuffle with ushers.

They identified themselves as members of the Rev. Ian Paisley's Free Presbyterian Church of Ulster, which opposes any deal with the Roman Catholic minority in Ulster.

"We are protesting about the Anglican Church's links with the Church of Rome," a member of the group told reporters.

The Ulster Workers Council, an organization which represents 300,000 Protestants, threatened to tie up Northern Ireland in a general strike "within the month" if Britain does not immediately crush the violence and turn its back on efforts to promote power-sharing with the minority Roman Catholics.

The council demanded dissolution of the provincial assembly and new elections on the basis of one man-one vote. Such voting would bar all but a handful of Catholics.

Meanwhile, the Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility for Saturday's killing of James Corbett, 20, whose wife expects their first child next week. An IRA statement called him a traitor. Corbett's death pushed the province's official death toll to 1,000.

A short time later, Judge Garrett McGrath was shot at his vacation home at Cushendall, county Antrim.

McGrath was one of two Roman Catholic crown prosecutors who resigned in protest over the "Bloody Sunday" shooting of 13 Catholics by British troops in Londonderry in January 1972.

Laughter greets Kennedy in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy was met with silence, laughter and open hostility yesterday, then was hustled out of the auditorium on the pretext that he wasn't feeling well.

Kennedy had asked the audience of Soviet university students and other spectators whether they thought Soviet military spending should be increased or decreased. His question was greeted first with silence, then with an explosion of laughter.

There is no public discussion in the Soviet Union of defense expenditures, and it apparently struck the audience as bizarre and funny that Kennedy would ask their opinion.

An elderly man in the audience angrily shook his fist at Kennedy and shouted, "That question is a provocation."

The man then stood up and told the Massachusetts Democrat: "We spend as much on defense as our country requires."

Kennedy, who often asks questions of his American student audiences, then asked the audience to vote by raised hands on which Soviet achievements they considered most important.

Obviously confused, the audience failed to respond.

After conferring with officials on the dais, an interpreter came over to the podium and announced that the senator had to leave because he was not feeling well. "I feel fine," Kennedy reported.

But he was hustled out of the auditorium shortly thereafter and taken to a meeting with Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko. Details of the meeting were not disclosed.

The 600-seat auditorium was filled, but many of the spectators were middle-aged or older.

A British professor who teaches at the university said a notice had been posted on the bulletin board last week that the speech was open to students and faculty. But he was not allowed in when he showed his university pass.

In his speech, Kennedy appealed to the Soviet Union to allow Americans to travel more freely within Russia. He said the United States would do the same for Soviet travelers.

The senator said Russia should not get upset when its domestic policies are criticized by Americans, an apparent reference to U.S. criticism of the Soviet government's policies on emigration. That policy led Congress to block the granting of tariff concessions and bank credits to the Kremlin.

"In general, I do not believe that one nation should interfere directly in the internal affairs of another," Kennedy said. "But I also do not believe in silence-whether on your part, or on ours."

Mideast fighting spreads to Lebanon

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An Israeli force stabbed into Lebanese territory and occupied a hilltop on the southwestern slopes of Mt. Hermon yesterday, according to Lebanese sources, as fighting between Israel and Syria continued for control of the strategic peak.

The witnesses said Lebanese troops lobbed several rounds of mortar shells on the Israeli force that occupied Shahar hilltop inside Lebanon early yesterday. They said the Israelis were still on the hilltop at dusk. There was no indication of the size of the force.

Lebanese sources said the maneuver apparently was an attempt by Israel to gain an edge against the Syrians in the fighting for control of Mt. Hermon, which straddles the Syrian-Lebanese border just north of the Israeli panhandle.

The Israeli command in Tel Aviv said earlier that its warplanes pounded gun and troop emplacements six miles behind Syrian lines Sunday after Syrian gunners opened fire with artillery on Israeli defenders dug into positions on Mt. Hermon.

It said a Syrian MIG also tried to hit Israeli positions on the Mt. Hermon peak but Israeli interceptors drove it off.

SAYS SHE'S BECOME 'ANTI—AMERICAN' — Melina Mercouri is shown during interview at a New York film studio Wednesday during which she said she has ecome "totally anti-American" because of apathy in this country about conditions in Greece. The film star said she regards herself as a homeless exile after seven years of campaigning against her homeland's ruling junta.

Connally denies politics involved in donation

BANGOR, Maine (AP) — Former Treasury Secretary John B. Connally described as a "typical campaign contribution" Saturday a $10,000 offer which he says he turned down.

The one-time Democrat told an airport news conference that there was no ruth in the allegation he took $10,000 to help a giant dairy cooperative.

A Washington source said Friday that Texas lawyer Jake Jacobsen notified Watergate prosecutors that he will testify that Connally accepted from him $5,000 in May 1971, and a second $5,000 in March 1972.

Connally said Jacobsen informed him in 1971 that he had $10,000 available to contribute to any campaign or committee of Connally's choosing. Connally said he turned down that offer.

"I would describe it as a typical campaign offer from a friend, which I did not accept. I said no thanks," Connally said.

Connally, in Bangor to address the Republican State Convention, said there was "nothing new" in the Grand Jury investigation into the alleged milk price fixing.

He declined to discuss his testimony before that federal panel, and wouldn't comment on whether he was informed he might be subject to investigation by the Watergate panel.

Prisoner wants to stay there

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Late last year, Bobby Ferguson asked Gov. Robert Ray to extend his prison term to a life sentence "so I can stay in the only home I've ever known."

Ray refused, but Ferguson has found himself another set of bonds: matrimony.

"I can't tell you where we're at because I broke parole," the 39-year-old said in a phone call to the Associated Press Saturday. "Just say it's an eastern state. I got married two days ago to a woman I was writing to while I was in prison. I can't tell you her name. But this is a good marriage. It's going to work."

He said his wife had three children and they were expecting a fourth. He added that he had a job at a factory.

Ferguson was serving a 10-year term for armed robbery when he asked for the life sentence. He explained at the time that his mother was an inmate in the women's reformatory when he was born.

Greece's military rule might remain unchanged

ATHENS (AP)-Greece marked seven years of military-backed rule yesterday, and indications were that the political situation would remain unchanged for some time.

In addition, soaring inflation, political repression, declining tourism and economic stagnation seem certain to continue.

There is no open talk of a return to democracy; it is forbidden in the government-censored daily press. The regime has categorically stated that "when the time is right" it alone will decide on the form of any future "political order."

The military took power April 21, 1967, by a coup d'etat. Another coup last November established Gen. Phaedon Gizikis as president and Adamantios Androusopoulos as premier of the current government.

While the army rules behind the scenes, the civilian cabinet appointed after the November coup appears unable to cope effectively with many of the country's outstanding political and economic problems.

Economic growth, which reached an all-time high of 11 per cent last year, has nosedived. Economists do not expect the country's growth rate to exceed 5 per cent this year.

Inflation last year reached 33.4 per cent - the highest among the 24 nations in the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development - and continues to climb.

Foreign investment is negligible. There have been no major foreign ventures in Greece in the past five years.

Travel agents report that tourism, the country's main source of foreign exchange, will decline by 25-30 per cent this year.

The only bright note in the country's economic future is oil. An American firm struck oil off Thasos Island in northeastern Greece. The find shows promise of providing Greece's annual requirements of nine million tons when production begins in about one year.

But a running dispute with Greece's traditional adversary, Turkey, over oil drilling rights in the Aegean Sea and over the unresolved Cyprus problem, creats a certain uneasiness.

Banks says he's wrong

WELLESLEY, Mass (AP) — Indian leader Dennis Banks said Saturday that he had been wrong to accuse The Associated Press of collaborating with the FBI because one photographer had passed information to law enforcement authorities at Wounded Knee, S.D.

One week ago, Banks, a leader in the American Indian Movement AIM, said at Harvard University that "we, AIM, think the AP is working hand in hand with the FBI to manage and suppress news."

He made the charge after an AP photographer, James Mone, testified at the trial of Banks and fellow AIM leader Russell Means that he, Mone, had given information to the FBI during the 71-day occupation of the Wounded Knee Indian village in 1972.

On Saturday, Banks said, "AIM may have acted a little hastily." By claiming all AP personnel were informants, Banks said, "I was committing a disservice."

Hermit of the Everglades

OCHOPEE, Fla. (AP) — Leon Whildon gave up a $72,000 a year job as an engineer to live in a wooden shack in the Everglades and have the freedom to walk around naked.

Whilden, who appears to be in his 70s, has led the cloistered life for the last 22 years on his 12 acres of subtropical jungle, usually without benefit of clothing.

Forest rangers call him the "Hermit of the Everglades," but Whilden, surrounded by orchids and rare flowers he raises, says he isn't sure about that title.

"Me, a hermit?" chuckled Whilden, who was born in Newberry, Fla., and raised in Copenhagen. "Well I like people, but I'd rather be by myself. Yet, hermits don't like women and I love them dearly."

The son of a diplomat, Whilden returned to Florida in 1949 and moved to a residential section of South Miami.

"I loved to go swimming naked as a jaybird," he said. "I had eight-foot high hedges around the pool so there would be no problem-until the neighbors complained and had the bushes trimmed to two feet.

"Then they began looking into my yard and started to complain about me."

Biedenkopf praises

DUSSELDORF, Germany (AP) — Kurt Biedenkopf, a leader in the Bonn Parliamentary opposition just back from talks in Washington, had praise Sunday for German-American relations.

Bedenkopf, secretary-general of the Christian Democratic Union, told reporters he agreed with U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's assessment that bilateral relations were "never so good as at present."

No chew, no eat!

LONG BEACH, N.Y.,(AP) — Carole Kaplan had her teeth wired together by a dentist two weeks ago as her way to fight the battle of the bulge.

The 5-foot-1 mother of four said she lost 15 of her 165 pounds in that time and expects to drop another 33 by June.

Mrs. Kaplan, 39, consulted her doctor about nutrition and has been supplementing her liquid diet with vitamins.

"I'm forced to eat like a chipmunk," she said, "but I love the results."

Opponents of gun control protest in Rhode Island

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Opponents of stricter gun control legislation say Rhode Island needs better enforcement of the present law, rather than tighter controls.

Several hundred persons — many sportsmen and gun dealers — turned out Thursday to raise objections before the House Judiciary Committee on a proposed revision of the state's present law. The large turnout forced the committee to switch its hearing from a state house room to the Veterans Memorial Auditorium.

The committee heard testimony from supporters of the bill Tuesday.

"Their motivation is total confiscation of all firearms," declared Michael Atamian, spokesman for the Rhode Island State Rifle and Revolver Association, the Federated Sportsmen Clubs of Rhode Island and the South Shore Sportsmen Association.

"We have an excellent law," he said. "What we need is better enforcement."

He dismissed statistics on gun deaths presented by gun control advocates, claiming, "They're using figures from other states and other countries to produce laws for Rhode Island residents."

Displaying a chart on accidental deaths from 1968 to 1972 in Rhode Island, Atamian said 746 persons died from firearm accidents.

The figures did not include gun deaths in crimes. "Nothing in the world stops the criminal from misusing firearms," Atamian said.

"If the do-gooders want to get on the stick," he said, "let's stop the drownings, the traffic accidents.."

Donn C. DiBiasioc, president of the Rhode Island Firearms Association, reviewed the law already in effect and said, "We are against further state gun control legislation."

He said the proposed law would not keep guns away from criminals anymore than the current law, which already bans sale of guns to convicted felons.

The proposed legislation would require that prospective firearm owners qualify at a target range and display of knowledge of the gun control act. It also would sharply increase the fee for carrying a concealed weapon and transfer authority to issue a concealed weapon license from the attorney general to local police chiefs.

Another section would let police destroy stolen guns which were recovered.

Long Island seen as oil tanker area

HARTFORD (AP) — A 10-year study of the East Coast found that the best place to unload supertankers carrying crude oil would be in Long Island Sound, three miles off the southeastern Connecticut shore, says a retired petroleum engineer.

Joseph G. Wilson Sr. proposes the offshore mooring and 40-inch pipelines connecting it to a new refinery on land that could handle 400,000 barrels of oil a day.

The mooring would be off Waterford in Block Island Sound and the refinery would be located "well back in the hills from the shoreline and near major highways," Wilson said.

State Energy Administrator Eckardt C. Beck said Wilson's proposal would need approval from the state Environmental Protection, Labor and Commerce departments and several federal and local agencies. Beck and local officials said they were studying the plan.

"The best deep water port on the entire East Coast, in my humble opinion, is the one we are proposing off Bartlett Reef," Wilson said in an interview Saturday. "This is the only location on the eastern seaboard where very large crude carriers can be moored at fixed berths in relatively protected waters."

The refinery proposed by Wilson would have the same capacity as the one proposed for New Hampshire by Aristotle Onassis. The city of Durham rejected the Onassis proposal.

Federal energy officials said last winter the lack of refineries in New England contributed to the region's petroleum shortages during the energy crisis. New England relies heavily on imported crude oil that has to be refined in other parts of the country and shipped to the Northeast.

Wilson, a retired Shell Oil Co. engineer who runs his own consulting firm in Old Greenwich, said the New London area would be an ideal petroleum distribution area because it is centrally located in the region and has highway and rail transportation facilities.

The Bartlett Reef site would not be endangered by other marine traffic, he said.

"The location is central to the New England market. It is outside the main shipping lanes.

"It does not involve ships swinging oil lines to single-buoy moorings in crowded shipping lanes or the use of long floating hoses," he said.

Wilson estimated the additional planning for the project would cost $16 million and the mooring and refinery itself would cost about $300 million.

He said the pipelines from the tankers would run to the refinery through Waterford or New London. Refined fuel would be shipped to users by rail, pipelines, trucks, barges and smaller tankers, he said.

"There are indications that the state and federal government will provide funds for deep-water marine facilities" like those being proposed, said Wilson. But he would not elaborate.

New Hampshire has Fast Day

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. (AP) — New Hampshire today is celebrating a unique holiday because the state's first chief executive died in 1681.

Today is Fast Day, a holiday that goes back to the death of John Cutts.

Cutts — or Cutt, depending on the history book cited — was named president of the Royal Province of New Hampshire by King Charles II.

A short time later Cutts fell ill and a day of fasting and prayer was declared because the colonial Assembly felt his death might bring bad times.

Nevertheless, Cutts died a few days after the declaration but his fast day survived.

Until the state legislature in 1949 decided on the fourth Monday in April, New Hampshire used to commemorate as many as three fast days a year.

The modern observation has changed over the years. Church attendance no longer is compulsory, and the 10-shilling fine for those who worked was lifted long ago.

New England's aware Reps.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressmen from Rhode Island and Massachusetts led New England in a nationwide survey of environmentally responsive congressmen.

The League of Conservation Voters said Saturday that Rhode Island's congressmen scored third in the ratings, which were based on 19 House votes last year that had important environmental implications. Massachusetts was fourth.

With 100 a perfect score, Rhode Island's delegation averaged 79 and Massachusetts 74. The rest of New England: Maine 66, Connecticut 59, Vermont 53 and New Hampshire 24.

Delaware and Hawaii were rated first and second in the third annual assessment by the league.

Mass. birth rate drops

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts birth rate is approaching its lowest level in 50 years, supporting estimates by state officials that enrollments in public schools will decline rapidly by the end of the decade.

Figures from the vital events section of the state Department of Public Health show the state birth rate at its lowest percentage per thousand Massachusetts residents since 1938, with the trend of fewer births increasing annually.

Gays in Maine

"Growing restless..."

ORONO, Maine (AP) — In the wake of two months of controversy, gay activists convened peacefully here this weekend in an attempt to explain their existence to a rural state and increase understanding among themselves.

"The eyes of the nation are on Orono" to see how a conservative state handles the homosexual issue, said the president of the Gay Activist Alliance of New York City.

Monty Manford also told the some 250 persons who registered for the first Maine Gay Symposium at the University of Maine that only when homosexuals embrace their feelings "can we be full, loving human beings."

In his official welcome to the gathering, Steven Bull of the sponsoring Wilde Stein Club said, "We are growing restless in our closets.

"We are here to demand what is rightfully ours. Hopefully the stereotype will be smashed and the prejudice ended."

Natalie Rockhill, coordinator of the National Gay Task Force, said Saturday in the symposium's keynote address, "We're not going to be turned back and...it's clear that what we have to do is go to where the power is.

"Until we are in control of the institutions of power, they will control us. People can no longer get away with thinking that we're invisible and not here. We are here, and we're becoming visible."

No incidents were reported during the two-day conference but campus police tried to trace the source of several hundred leaflets threatening violence against the homosexuals.

The university board of trustees' approval of the symposium earlier this year triggered a flood of protest, especially from key conservative legislators and clergymen.

The trustees defended the gays' right to meet as guaranteed under the first amendement.

Those opposed to the conference opined homosexuality was wrong and that the symposium would needlessly expose Maine people to sinful ways.

Some of the strongest pressure to block the conference came during the special session of the Maine legislature.

Several measures were introduced aimed at penalizing the university if the symposium were allowed to take place.

Once, in heated debate over the issue, the homosexuals were referred to as "a pack of queers."

Hurray Henry Ragin

To The Editor:
ARISE! STOP THE BUREAUCRATS!

On Monday at 6:30, in the CC Auditorium, there will be held a meeting to elect the president of the student government association. I urge all students to come to this meeting and let the elitist bureaucrats know how you feel. Come and yell and scream and have a good time. Let your representatives know how you feel. We will be holding a rally in the Blue Wall at 5:30. Please come.

POWER TO THE INDIVIDUAL!
Henry Ragin

Hurray Rick Savini

To The Editor:

The Student Government Association will be holding elections tonight for the position of SGA President. This election comes at a unique time in the history of the Student Government Association. We are faced with a multitude of complex problems, and the general apathy and mistrust of the students we claim to represent. From these elections must come a leader who will be able to progress forward from this present state of turmoil. We must have a President who can work to solve complex problems, and to inform the campus community with the issues which face us all. At the same time, the President must be receptive to new ideas which might be contrary to his-her own, and to be able to develop these ideas into viable alternatives for the student body. The President must have the ability to lead the Student Government Association into being a truly representative government of the students. It is my firm belief that the one person who can accomplish these tasks is Rick Savini, a candidate for the position of SGA President.

Rick has proven that he has the ability to deal with and solve large, complex problems effectively, through his serving as the Chairperson of the Rents & Fees Committees. He has worked hard to decrease student fees, while maintaining student service at the highest possible level. Rich has the ability to communicate effectively with people of many different backgrounds and orientations. Rick has never lost sight of the fact that the primary role of the Student Government Association is to serve the students, not servicing them.

Rick believes that the Student Government Association must become a strong, responsible entity which strives to increase student's control over their own lives at the University. For this reason I strongly urge all members of the Student Senate and the 7 Area Governments to elect Rick Savini President of the Student Government Association.

Paul J. Hamel

Boo Savini, yea Clancy

To The Editor:

Not being a professional politician, I am unacquainted with the amount of communication that should occur between politics and the press. What I mean to say is that you people on Monday are going to come out with an editorial supporting one of the candidates and I deeply feel that it would be an injustice for you to look only at one of my opponents, Rick Savini as I assume you shall probably do. My name is not nearly as well known as Rick's because I have not been a powerful figure in the Senate. Instead, this fall I came to the realization that political decisions are not made on the floors of any legislative chambers but rather behind the scenes. By virtue of that fact, I decided it would be best for me to save my breath in the Senate. The Senate has a bad case of verbal diarrhea and there was enough hot air as it was without me shooting off my mouth needlessly. I am afraid I have alienated some of the big boys in campus politics by not consulting them before I ran but rather going and talking to the approximately 250 people that will be voting. I have blisters on my feet from walking all over the five residential areas and from going to the Commuters and the Greeks and talking to the Senators and Area Government People who don't sit around the Senate Office playing whist. I seem to be the only one going and talking to these people. I took the time to see these people because I felt it was important to know their feelings toward student government. I would love to have you people on the Board of Editors walk around campus with me while I talk to those who will be voting in the SGA elections; not just those who are Wednesday night quarterbacks in the Campus Center. Maybe then you would give me some consideration. Thanks a million.

Hurray Kelly Erwin

To The Editor:

Kelly Erwin is running for President of the Student Government Association as a member of the Young Socialist Alliance and as a supporter of the Socialist Workers Party election campaign. As a socialist, Kelly feels that the problems facing students at UMass and the Amherst community, in general, can be solved only through a revolutionary change in society as a whole. She sees the process of making the University responsive to student's needs as an integral part of changing society so that it puts human needs before profit. She believes that student struggles are an integral part of larger struggles in society, and students can help to advance those struggles.

Across the country all working people have been affected by unemployment inflation and cutbacks in social services. Government claims that tuition hikes and cutbacks in university budgets are necessary to offset inflation-swollen costs of education is one aspect of this. Cutbacks in education are another attempt to make working people pay for the mismanagement of a capitalist economy. To combat this, Kelly's campaign calls for the Administration and state government to open their financial records for examination by students, faculty and employees. No tuition hikes! No cutbacks in education!

The problems of women in American society are reflected in the special problems that face women at UMass, problems which are not being effectively dealt with by the University. To meet the needs of women at UMass, Kelly's campaign calls for preferential hiring and advancement of women at all University levels; the establishment of an autonomous Women Studies Dept: University-funded free 24 hour child care; and full funding and facilities for the Women's Centers.

Presently, UMass is just one of the many institutions in American society that helps to maintain the oppression and exploitation of black people. To compensate for centures of racial and class oppression, the socialist campaign calls for open admissions for black students; full scholarships for all who need them at government expense; preferential hiring and advancement of blacks at all University levels. Kelly's campaign further states that the Dept. of Afro-American studies should be completely autonomous from the university administration. Decisions concerning curriculum, facilities and policies of the department should be made by the Black students and faculty.

As a socialist, Kelly's campaign calls for support of gay rights, support to the United Farm Workers Union boycott of scab grapes, lettuce and Gallo wines, and an end to ROTC and military recruitment. We ask all students who understand that it is necessary to combine the struggle for social change on campus with the struggle for change in the entire society, to join us and help us with the campaign. We ask all students and organizations, although you may not necessarily agree with the entire platform, to endorse this campaign as a viable alternative to current university and student government politics.

Anyone wanting further information concerning the campaign, or wanting to help, can contact campaign supporters at 253-7307, 546-7472, or 546-5711.

Stop leg traps!

To The Editor:

By next Wednesday, April 24, the Committee on Natural Resources and Agriculture will vote on BILL 51133 — to prohibit the use of leg-hold traps. The Committee represents strongly the interests of hunters and trappers. Unless the public shows strong support for this bill, they are sure to kill it. The best friend these men have is public indifference and apathy — then they are free to do as they please. Steel-jaw leg-hold traps subject animals to NEEDLESS INTENSE SUFFERING. The traps are indiscriminate. Animals of no value to the trapper are caught — called "TRASH". There are alternatives. For more information call 527-3842. Please write your state senators and congressmen immediately. Especially write to Rep. Steven T. Chmura, Chairman, Committee on Natural Resources and Agriculture, also, The Hon. Kevin Harrington, Pres. of the Senate, and the Hon. David Bartley, Speaker of the House. Write all of them at State House, Boston, Mass. 02133. Please write now.

Chicken feed

MANCHAUG, Mass. (PDQ) — President Nixon, speaking before the annual Rock Cornish Game Hen Growers and Chicken Farmers Association (RCGHGCFA) convention, said yesterday that he had a "secret plan" designed to end the recent string of Republican losses in special Congressional elections.

Nixon, interrupted on numerous occasions by thunderous cackling, called his opponents "chicken" and said that "this is one President that won't be rousted from his roost by weasels attempting to diminish the power of the Presidency."

The President's remarks were met with encouraging cries from the audience, including "you've been a Grade A President" and taunts directed toward members of the media, including "the yolk's on you."

The secret plan, which the President announced at the end of the speech, caused quite a flap in Vern's Lakeside AC, the site of the event.

In a radical departure from previous administration policy, Nixon said that in future elections up to and including the regular election in November, he would campaign for the Democratic candidates.

"There are some who would say," he said, "that this President isn't interested in the good of his party. There are some who would say that this President isn't willing to go out on the stump for members of his party."

"This should prove them wrong."

James Sparling, the Michigan Republican that the President most recently helped down the road to defeat, was bitter when informed of the President's decision.

"I've heard of locking the coop after the chicken has flown," said Sparling, "but this is ridiculous. Where was he when I needed him?

"Why if he had campaigned for Traxler (Democratic victor Bob Traxler), I might have won unanimously."

Other Republican reaction, though, was heavily in favor of Nixon's decision.

"Marvelous", said Senate Minority leader Hugh Scott, "This, coupled with secret opinion polls the administration has let me see, convince me that November will bring a Republican sweep."

"Keen," said Leslie C. Arends, Head Republican in the House, "The President has shown he has the good of the Republican party at heart."

"Yes," said Vice-President Gerald Ford.

But Capitol Hill Democrats had less than kind words for the new Nixon proposal.

"This is grounds for impeachment," said Robert F. Drinan, as he introduced a motion to excommunicate the President.

"Never in the history of American politics has such sabotage been attempted," complained House Speaker Carl Albert while on the floor. "If necessary, we won't have anyone run for anything and force the voters to not vote, thereby guaranteeing ties in each election."

Current polls show the Republicans trailing in 434 of 435 Congressional districts and in all Senatorial races. The only Congressional seat the GOP appears able to capture is the 5th Mississippi, centered in Pascagoula, where none of the population can read.

Post-speech reaction of members of the RCGHGCFA was genenerally favorable, except for Q. Foghorn Leghorn, who said he thought the speech "laid an egg."

Nixon's Waterloo

Napoleon had his Waterloo, despite the revisionists. Nixon has his Michigan Eighth District, despite the Daughters of the American Revolution. If there is anyone out there in the great heartland of silent America who needed more proof of the President's ineffectiveness, then certainly and hopefully this election should serve that purpose. And anyone who still believes a word of what comes out of the White House, without first checking with other sources, deserves what he gets, namely lies. It is positively ridiculous for the Knight Newspapers or anyone else to say that Republican James Sparling would have lost the Congressional election by even more votes, had not Nixon campaigned for him. Nice try, fellas, but we're not as stupid as you would hope.

Michigan's eighth district is a Republican district, period. Why, in the last election held, sixty percent of the vote went Republican. The issue this time was not Sparling, or his Democratic opponent and victor J. Bob Traxler, but simply Richard Nixon, and all that accompanies the name. The GOP was so fed up with him, that a great many never made it to the polls. The disenchantment with Washington is rampant, and it should be clear by now, even to the "Daughters" that Nixon is a liability. The White House, of course, will have you believe otherwise. When the obvious becomes so obvious as to startle the loyal, the White House still persists with its own interpretation of events. One snow job after another, for the past six years. You'd think to God that someone in the castle would have the guts to tell the king to put some Goddamn clothes on!

It seems apparent that the Administration is pulling one way, and the rest of the country the other. It is a wonder that the government functions at all. It may just be that the great rumbling bureaucracy rolls on, much like the caisons of old, despite the bumbling Presidency. If this be the case, then we may be both blessed and cursed at the same time. Blessed because of the inbred resiliency of our government, and cursed because of the basic ineffectiveness of any President. I suppose it could be argued that the blessings of our system outweigh the curses, for without the burearucratic caisson the horse would most likely run wild. The fact that it hasn't perhaps accentuates the differences between political systems around the globe. That is not a value judgement on my behalf, however, as I tend to think that a wild horse sometimes has a way of restoring a sense of purpose, particularly to those whose task it is to tame it. But tamers are hard to find these days, and when found, reluctant to act. Hence, the possible blessing. When one speaks of wild horses and the like, the proverbial image of the "banana republics" come to mind. Well it should be obvious to Americans by now, that with all our rules and regulations, and considering events in their proper perspective, all we are really lacking in this country are the bananas themselves.

But it is not my intent to subscribe to the theory that when the dust clears it will still be the same old Columbia. What exactly is the normalcy that we will be returning to, once the heavens stop falling upon Richard Nixon? Those who say that the U.S. will remain the same country once this is all over and done with, really know little about what we are. Our history has been shaped in turmoil, not in placidity. Hoover's Depression, Roosevelt's New Deal and War. Truman had the bomb, Korea, McArthur, and the buck stopped there. Ike had Guatemala, McCarthy, the plans for the Bay of Pigs. Kennedy and Berlin, Cuba, the brink, assasination. Johnson's civil rights, Dominican Republic, Vietnam, protest, more assasinations. Are any of these periods the normal flow of events for the United States? Of course they are, at any given moment we are what we are. Today is not ten years ago, and laurels are a thing of the past. We are what is on the front page in the morning, not what we hope will someday be there. We are at present a country without real leadership. This is not because of unattractive policy making, but rather because of serious doubts about the honesty of the President. We are a country not at all sure where we are going, or how we will get there. There is nothing to return to, only a hope for a future direction. In short, the world knows us as we are, today, this morning. That is not the most comforting thought. It is sufficient reason for the Congress, and us, to do something about it, and the really perplexing thing is that despite all the shenanigans, the bureaucratic caisson goes rolling along. But I suppose they didn't kill all the horses at Waterloo, either.

SGA elections tonight, but reform needed more

Tonight is the night of the Student Senate elections. Maybe you've heard it mentioned somewhere around campus, but if you have not it's not surprising. Tonight's election is just proof of how ineffective the Senate has become.

The reason for this ineffectiveness is clear. The number of senators has become too large. This has led to indeciveness and general disinterest which now characterizes the Senate. Senate meetings have become social affairs with members seen talking, laughing or even studying through the meetings. Senate elections too have now come to reflect the absurdity, just about anyone can become a senator just by signing up in their dormitory. In fact, candidates often have to be recruited to join the senate.

The largeness of the body has also led to the creation of a complicated bureaucracy resulting in a small elite who, through their power and influence, control most of the student affairs. This elite consists of the president, the speaker, the treasurer and a small number of senators who take an active role in policy making.

The Collegian believes that the Senate must undergo some drastic changes before it can be justly recognized as a legitimate governing board. Perhaps the most drastic is represented by the platform of absolution of the S.G.A. Although the idea is not taken too seriously maybe the liquidation would force a complete reconstruction of student government at UMass.

Letters to James W. Casson III

Waitresses do not work for fun

Re: James W. Casson III's letter

To The Editor:

I am not quite sure whether Mr. Casson is aware of it or not, but most people who work as waitresses or waiters do not do so for the pleasure of dealing with people and their various appetites. It is a gruiling, sweaty grind. I have worked almost every job imaginable and none approched the pressure and work-load involved with waiting. Whether or not Mr. Casson believes in gratuities is totally immaterial. By going to the restaurant he willingly subjected himself to the tipping system in order to be served. His waitress is much more of a victim of the system than he is. The really inexplicable point is that Mr. Casson is on the one hand affluent enough to spend twenty-four dollars on the meal, but on the other, is too poverty stricken to leave a sub-decent two dollar tip. All his rationalizations and verbal tips (what a clever pun on your part Mr. Casson!) won't do a fucking thing to pay that woman's rent. I suggest, if he truly believes in what he has said, that the next time he scrounges up enough money to go somewhere for a meal, he explain to the waiter or waitress before he orders, what the situation is; i.e., the tip will not reflect anything more or less than the amount of money you feel you can afford after paying the meal. Don't be surprised Mr. Casson, if you end up dining on your menu. After all, the waiter or waitress will get to you when he or she can, after serving everyone else, and after seeing how much time he or she can afford to spend on you. A tip is part of the price of the meal. If you don't like it Mr. Casson, go to the automat. Anybody's time is too valuable to waste serving you a meal for the type of remuneration you offer.

Anthony G. Cronin

P.S.

If you suffer under the misconception that waiting is an unskilled job, deserving only the $1.20 an hour salary it gets, I invite you to take it up some time, just for a few nights. You'd be surprised how fast you'll see the light.

Kalihi waitresses try hard to please

To The Editor:

Upon first reading your letter to the Editor in Thursday's Collegian I felt that a rebuttal would only be a waste of my time. However, I feel that you and other unwordly people like yourself need a lesson in the etiquette of our society.

You seem to feel that you, a poor student, are the only financially unstable person at UMass. You felt so put out by a waitress demanding payment for the service she performs. Well, sir, let me fill you in on the reasons for her reaction. First, you came into Kalihi Kai and ordered two dinners for two, a $9.50 meal each, even though your waitress informed you that you would be getting more than enough food for the four in your party. You did not have to choose such expensive meals if you knew that you could only afford to leave about a 3 per cent tip, and have to leave it in nickels and pennies.

Waitresses do not receive minimum wage as their salary, the law does not provide for them to receive $1.85 per hour. Their whole income is dependent upon tips. In this town 10 per cent is considered an adequate tip by most people, although the government assesses our taxes with a 15 per cent average. If you had a stero or television repaired and it took the serviceman 30 minutes to complete his work do you think that you could get away with not paying his fee of $10 - $12? I doubt it. Waitresses also perform a service for the paying customer and expect, as does the serviceman, to be paid for their time and effort. If everyone thought themselves above tipping their waitress then you, of poor little rich boy, would never have a place to go out to for dinner.

Most of the waitresses at Kalihi Kai are also students at UMass. Most are full-time students and full-time help working their way through school. These girls work harder than I'm sure you have ever thought of working, and have to put up with a lot of crabby and often obnoxious customers in order to earn $20 for a 10 hour day. You may suggest that we get a different job, but maybe you haven't tried looking for one in the Amherst area. They are hard to find .. but atleast we are doing something about our "poor student" status.

Kalihi Kai was not built to be a place for the cheap Sat. night dinner date. It is trying to bring some form of class back into the Amherst area. Its bands give shows every weekend for the enjoyment of the appreciative customer. We want it to be a place where people who want to enjoy a night out with entertainment can come and really have a nice time. Mondays and Wednesdays are set aside for those of you who must starve because of your budgets and need a $2.99 special to pig-out on. But we draw the line on customers who come in for a free meal. Leaving no tip is as prevalent as bad tips but the worst are those who don't even pay their checks. Most customers don't realize that if they walk out on a check the waitress must pay for the meal from her own pocket. Why should we not only not get paid for our work (and it is the customer who pays for our labor, not the employer) but have to pay for a client's meal as well? Sorry, I for one will not do it.

If you are really so concerned about leaving a decent tip for a waitress use our take-out service, or don't come to Kalihi Kai. You only make it bad for the ones who know how to appreciate class.

And one more think. I wrote this as clearly and concisely as possible so you and other superstudents won't need your Thesauruses to understand this letter.

Your Waitress,
Mary Sullivan

Casson's letter: comments

To The Editor:

In response to Mr. Casson's letter of last Thursday, re: "Tipping," let me make some general comments. The restaurant industry is unique in a variety of ways, it is mostly service, the vast majority of business occurs within a few hours necessitating special compensation, labor planning and motivation techniques. It does not lend itself to much mechanization at any point, hence it is labor intensive and the expectations of customers are greater and more demanding, among others.

It can never be an excuse that a person is too poor to tip adequately — if you cannot afford to tip you cannot afford to eat out! No one thinks of going to a clothing store or a supermarket and saying, "I'll pay for the product and a reasonable profit but not for the workers' wage," but that is what one does, in effect, when they omit a gratuity. Also the excuse of poverty only says "because I'm poor someone else will get short changed too." While I agree that big business is, in general, a rip-off and that the accepted method compensation in the service industries (i.e. tipping) could be improved, the person to respond to, in kind, is not a $1.25 per hour waitress!

Lastly, I completely agree that the tip should relate to the quality of service but before "stiffing" a waitress, customers should assure themselves that it was, in fact, the fault of the waitress. A bad maitre'd, an unqualified chef, even poor busboys or dishwashers can result in poor table service and, in these events, a table server should not have to bear the brunt. If a customer is dissatisfied with certain aspects of the dining experience but the service itself has been adequate, bring complaints to the attention of management but pay for the service.

Casson: eat at Ponderosa

To The Editor:

In regard to Mr. Casson's letter concerning the Kalihi Kai restaurant and tipping I have a few simple suggestions. First if you find that you're poor, move out of Brittany Manor and into a dorm or live home. Second may I suggest that when you dine out you stick to Ponderosa Steak House, McDonalds, The Hatch and Marie Shapoltsky's East Side Deli, where tipping is not required nor expected, and the needs of your socialists can be easily met without the fanfare of capitalistic extras. Third, Go to Stop and Shop and buy simply Super which is inexpensive and will give you all the needed protein to carry on with your busy living schedule. But most important you should realize that a waitress is generally paid $1.11 per hour and depends on tips to live. Her tips are also spread between a bus boy, Bartender, and often Maitre'd.. Not only does the waitress take your oder and bring you your food, but she is also responsible for setting your table, getting to work to serve you, and keeping her uniform clean, these are all additional expenses.

As for designating yourself poor, poor people do not go out to dinner and spend $24.83 for dinner, for what I would guess were three or four people.

My one last remark concerns your remarks that restaurants large and small push added costs onto their customers. The food business is probably the most competitive business in this country and you can be sure that management is keeping it's prices as low and competive as possible, and if they don't, chapter 11 isn't far off. As for the quality of the food being poor, this is not the fault of the waitress and should not be blamed on her, call over the manager and tell him what your complaints are and you may get a strange surprise such as a cancelled check or a round of free drinks. And one tip for you is that all over the world from Rio to Bagdad, money is considered the tip not some confuscious saying.

Music from St. Mark's

Music from St. Mark's will be performed by the UMass Collegium Musicum, co-directed by John Maggs and Charles Lehrer, in a concert Tuesday, April 23, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on the University of Massachusetts - Amherst campus.

The works on the program were composed for the services at St. Mark's in Venice between 1550 and 1650 by some of the greatest composers of the day, Adrien Willaert, Cipriano de Rore, Alessandro Grandi, and Claudio Monteverdi.

The Collegium Musicum is a group of instrumentalists and vocalists who study and perform ancient and seldom programmed music.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

Legal Studies presents forum

The Legal Studies Program is sponsoring a Forum on Massachusetts prisons with members of the New England Prisoners Association, Tuesday evening, April 23, at 8:00 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium. The New England Prisoners Association is an organization of ex-convicts and others concerned with prison reform. The Program will begin with a film "3000 Years and Life" made inside Walpole State Prison and a discussion led by Russell Carmichael, Director of New England Prisoners Association.

More music

A program of music from the 20th century will be featured in a recital by Leopole Teraspulsky, cello, and Nigel Coxe, piano, Wednesday, April 24 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The concert will include performances of Benjamin Britten's Sonata, Opus 65, for Cello and Piano, Paul Hindemith's "Capriccio, Phantasiestuck, and Sherzo," Opus 8, for Cello and Piano, and Zoltan Kodaly's Sonata, Opus 8, for Solo Cello.

Leopold Teraspulski, a native New Yorker, has studied at the Manhattan School of Music and in Prades with Pablo Casals. The latter has written of Teraspulsky that "he does honor to this generation of remarkable cellists."

Mr. Teraspulsky has toured throughout the United States and Europe and is a frequent participant at the Casals Puerto Rico Festivals and the Aspen Festival.

Pianist Nigel Coxe has recently performed with the BBC Welsh Orchestra and in a series of sonata recitals with Pina Carmirelli at the Brattleboro Music Center.

Attention staff

Last Tuesday, the Collegian staff voted to adopt three Constitutional changes, including the creation of a ninth editorial post, a Black Affairs Editor.

The recorded vote was 50 Yes, 5 No, including 18 written absentee ballots and 37 counted hands.

On voice vote, the staff members present voted to waive the Constitutional requirement for a quorum.

These actions have been challenged as violating the Constitution, especially by waiving the quorum requirement.

It is therefore necessary to call a referendum vote to validate these actions by getting a written vote of a quorum (50 per cent of the staff plus one).

The three Constitutional changes in question are at the bottom of this page.

Also included is a fourth motion, passed by the Editorial Board on April 21, to further define membership on the Collegian.

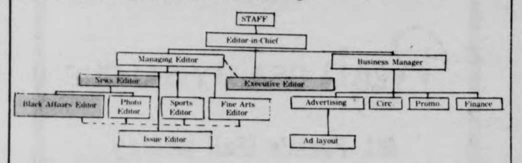
HERE ARE THE THREE AMENDMENTS:

1) To amend the constitution of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Article III, Section 3, Paragraph A-1, by adding the words "Black Affairs Editor".

2) To amend the Constitution of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Article IV, Section 2, paragraph A-3, by substituting 7-9 for 6-8.

(This changes the majority necessary for removal of an elected officer by the Board of Editors and applies only in this case).

3) To amend the Constitution of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Article III, Section 4, by deleting the entire article as it now stands and substituting therefore the following:



▨ KEY: Changed from present Constitution.

This flow chart has three changes: the Executive Editor is moved out from under the office of Managing Editor and reports directly to the Editor-in-Chief while maintaining a working raltionship with the Managing Editor; the News Editor is moved up slightly so that the Photo Editor and the newly created position, Black Affairs Editor, both report directly to the News Editor; and the ninth position of Black Affairs Editor is shown on the chart.)

Eligibility — any undergraduate whose name appears on a list of staff members to be submitted by each department head from time to time on call of the editor-in-chief but in any case no longer than 24 hours before any staff meeting or election. Criteria for determining membership shall be left up to each department head but shall be submitted in written form to the editor-in-chief at the start of each semester.

Local impeachment drive just building up steam

The first organized action to promote area and national efforts to impeach President Nixon got underway last night at Amherst college.

Sixteen representatives of the five colleges and area communities met at nine to approve a leaflet for distribution calling for an impeachment at 8:30 Friday night on the Amherst Town Common.

Frank Dorman, 46, one of the local representatives, also said he has chartered a bus to take Amherst impeachment supporters to a Washington rally this Saturday. He said that the cost of the ride would be $14 per person.

Doran Fredrickson, 18, a UMass junior living in Thatcher House, said he would act as UMass coordinator for the Amherst and Washington efforts.

Fredrickson said he would man a table on the Campus Center Concourse from 11 to 3 daily to accept registrations for the buses, and get signatures on a statement that asks U. S. Rep. Silvio Conte (R-Pittsfield) to publically favor impeachment.

"I got a bus, it's got 49 seats on it and only 9 people have signed up", Dorman said, "but we'll charter as many as it takes to get down there."

The Amherst-based organizing is part of efforts by the "National Campaign to Impeach Nixon", 414 M. Street, NW. in Washington to organize massive demonstrations simultaneously in Washington, Chicago and Los Angeles next Saturday.

The national group has so far relied on individual contacts with former peace activists around the country to establish recognition and mass support, according to Herbert Epstein, a spokesman for the group contacted by The Collegian in Washington yesterday.

"We have a very, very loose network," Epstein said, "there's no heirarchy."

Epstein said the Nation Campaign was organized in late December after a small Chicago conference of about thirty-five impeachment advocates from thirty-seven agreed that some sort of "action" was necessary to make sure Nixon was ousted.

"We're just responding to the mandate of the conference in Chicago," Epstein said, adding, "impeachment is only the first step, then there must be conviction by the Senate ... it's a long hard battle."

Epstein said the turnout in Washington, Chicago and Los Angeles Saturday will depend on a number of factors, among them:

—How President Nixon responds to a Jaworski subpoena for 64 White House tapes;

—How the media responds to a planned Thursday press conference by the group in Washington;

—the weather on Friday and Saturday.

Eqstein said if President Nixon defies the Jaworski subpoena, the current will be strong for a massive rally Saturday, especially if Congress takes no definitive action to counter Presidential defiance of a subpoena.

Dorman, the local organizer for the march on Washington, is head of the Western Massachusetts Clergy and Laity Concerned, and has an office in the First Congregational Church of Amherst. He has been active in the Vietnam peace movement.

Dorman has already chartered a single bus for the trip to Washington, to leave at midnight Friday and return at midnight Saturday. He is planning to charge $14 for the trip. However, interested UMass students should contact Fredrickson to reserve a seat on the bus.

More buses can be chartered if the need is apparent, according to Dorman.

The Amherst-based impeachment activity has been simmering for weeks with no apparent mass interest. But the posting of localized posters printed by the National Campaign to Impeach Nixon and a half page advertisement in yesterday's New York Times have sparked interest.

Nixon's dilemma

Latest subpoena the toughest

By DON McLEOD
ASSOCIATED PRESS WRITER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Of the subpoenas served on President Nixon in the year of Watergate investigations, the one issued by the special prosecutor last week may be the toughest to fight.

It differs from the ones served previously by the prosecutor and by Congress in that it seeks material to be used as evidence at trial rather than for an investigation.

NEWS ANALYSIS

But a more significant difference is that it is not part of a probe of the White House or Nixon himself. It seeks evidence that the prosecutor says Nixon has and which is necessary in the trial of third parties.

One of the most fundamental precepts of American law, dating from its ancestral British common law, is that no man has the right to withhold his evidence from a trial of justice.

The pre-eminent American authority on evidence, John Henry Wigmore, has written, "for three centuries it has been recognized as a fundamental maxim that the public has a right to every man's evidence."

The Supreme Court has quoted Wigmore a number of times in recent decisions, including those which said reporters must reveal their news sources to legal authorities needing the information for evidence.

There are exceptions, of course. The best example is the constitutional provision that no one may be required to give evidence against himself. Even in the trial of a third party, a person may refuse to give certain information if it would incriminate him.

It is significant that three of the defendants have joined Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski in support of the latest subpoena against the President.

The subpoena seeks tapes and back-up materials covering 64 presidential conversations. It is asked for use in the Watergate cover-up trial of former Atty. Gen. and Nixon campaign manager John N. Mitchell, ex-White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman, former chief domestic adviser John D. Ehrlichman and four others scheduled for trial Sept. 9.

Nixon's lawyers, in other cases, have raised the claim on executive privilege as an implied constitutional power which would exempt him from the government requirement of every man to give his evidence.

But U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica disallowed this claim last year in ordering Nixon to turn over materials to then special prosecutor Archibald Cox. The U.S. Court of Appeals upheld Sirica.

Nixon had Cox fired, but eventually gave up the subpoenaed materials rather than take further appeal to the Supreme Court. Sirica heard arguments on specific terms the White House wanted withheld from the grand jury and honored them.

Cox was seeking information for a grand jury investigation, which presumably could have been aimed at the White House or Nixon himself. The case for sustaining the subpoena would be even stronger when the material is sought for trial of a third party.

More than just dancing

consisted of various antics including hand stands, feet shuffling and nose thumbing. The curtain closed on a line-up of the dancers sticking out their tongues at the audience.

"Light Centers and Returnings" displayed a use of advanced dance techniques. The theme of this dance was the old romantic triangle, with outstanding performances by Andrea Watkins, David Smith and Robert Chiarelli. Amid a series of leaps, jumps, and lifts, Ms. Watkins flys, almost literally, from Smith to Chiarelli, ending in the arms of Smith. Several other dancers watch the actions, giving the impression of a chorus in a Greek tragedy.

After a ten minute intermission, the curtain opened on a relaxing number performed by Wendy Laakso, Rebecca Brown, and Jean Ida Hoffman, in which the performers literally "let their hair down". Usually a taboo in dancing, the loose hair was an effective addition to the flowing dance movements of this number.

Anyone who saw the Alwin Nikolais dance company would appreciate the next number which was a tribute to Nikolais and his unusual lighting techniques. In the tradition of Nikolais, the dancers exhibited various elasticized movements and formations amid a barrage of different colored lights. The "electronic" background music and painted leotards were also reminiscent of Nikolais.

"Different Shades" brought to mind a folk dance, while at the same time using a lot of classical ballet techniques. Dressed in red pinafore outfits, Wendy Laakso and Genevieve Nass performed complicated jumps, leaps, and extensions in the ballet tradition.

It is often said that the best is saved for last. In Thursday night's performance, this was certainly the case. The last dance, "Sept", was superb performance of seven individuals working both together and alone. The dancers executed a series of jumps, turns, and twists to the jazz music Ellis which could only be performed by someone who "knew his stuff".

All these performers certainly did, and the end result made for an evening of varying dance techniques ranging from the most modern of contemporary dance to the most classical of ballet.

Washington pandas hit by spring fever

On the one hand: the ravishing Ling-Ling, a cuddly, 240-pound bundle of sheer allurement, mature for her 3½ years and possessed of all the wiles of the female sex. She's playing, for the moment, a bit hard to get.

On the other, the impetuous Hsing-Hsing, a rogue of a fellow who in months past wouldn't give the lady next door a second look. Now, all of a sudden, he has decided there's more to life than lolling around his pool nibbling bamboo, or, true to his adolescent ego, showing off his athletic prowess to humans by standing on his head and doing shoulder rollovers.

Despite such raffishness, the betting is that Ling-Ling will, in the end, find him irresistible.

That, at least, is the assessment of National Zoo Director Theodore Reed, a man of an admittedly dubious record as a prognosticator in such matters but who opened the gates to the pandas' courtship Saturday with hopes held high.

For an hour or two on each of the next 10 days, those gates will agian be lifted in the chill of dawn with Reed and his staff anxiously looking on to see if the budding romance follows the most natural of progressions.

It didn't Saturday, though the 1 hour, 40 minutes that Ling-Ling and Hsing-Hsing spent in one another's company produced plenty of nuzzling, cuddling and general sweet talk in a sort of woofing tone that never before had been heard from either animal. In short, the scientists were satisfied that the romance to off to a good and serious start.

If mating occurs, Ling-Ling should deliver her cub in about 5½ months.

There have been five panda breedings in China, but never elsewhere. St. Louis once had a mature pair for four years, but the female never went into heat. Hsing-Hsing and Ling-Ling were given to the United States during President Nixon's 1972 visit to China.

That they have the mating urge is evident aplenty. She's been off her feed in recent days, and the once-casual looks they exchanged have become long and lingering. When the gate was lifted Saturday, it was Hsing-Hsing who crossed the line — keeping intact the tradition of the male calling upon the female first. Later she paid a brief visit to his place.

The mating sessions are encouraged in the early hours because pandas are high-altitude, cold-weather animals who can become easily taxed in temperatures exceeding 70 degrees.

Dukakis - Sarges record "outrageous" transfer from Norfolk Prison to Belchertown State School, Dukakis called it "a tragically belated response."

Daniels is the former Belchertown state school resident serving a life sentence on a murder conviction. Sargent made the announcement on the eve of a meeting with University of Massachusetts students supporting Daniels' release and a re-evaluation of the case.

"After 15 months of deafening silence from state government, the prospect of an upcoming election has done what hundreds of concerned citizens could not do: move an insensitive state administration to try to help this unfortunate man," Dukakis said.

"We badly need a state government which can respond to the needs of its people in something more than 15 months. The case or Russell Daniels or someone like him should not require an election campaign to resolve."

Dukakis said he hoped that by January of next year an administration would be in the state house which would make mental institutions "what they should have been decades ago: the best in the nation."

He warned that "the process of deinstitutionalization must be implemented with care and with the kind of network of community-based facilities which can genuinely improve the lives of our retarded citizens."

Criticizing the Sargent administration for creating a "cruel numbers game" by speedy deinstitutionalization, Dukakis said the institutions muct be maintained until community services are adequate.

Text of Sarge's speech

About 75 people heard Governor Francis Sargent's post-dinner speech in Campus Center room 163 Saturday night. In the speech, which lasted some 15 minutes, the State's top executive said he believed Russel Daniels lost his rights unfairly. The speech, in its entirety, follows.

For the last few years this state has been going through an historic transformation. We have totally revolutionized the way we help our elderly, our sick, our disabled, our mentally retarded.

A decade ago, large, impersonal institutions represented the core of this state's efforts to help its people. But in recent years our thinking has changed.

This Conference represents an important step in our effort to move away from institutions and return people to their families and to their communities. We have at last come to recognize that we must allow the developmentally disabled to participate fully in society — for their absence makes both they and us the poorer.

Today, you have considered the many facets of de-institutionalization and the many problems confronting the developmentally disabled.

I understand the frustrations you feel..Members of my staff have listened and told me of your specific concerns.

To insure that your views and concerns are acted upon, I am today directing the state Developmental Disabilities Council to assume three responsibilities:

First, to prepare a report of this Conference and of the one to follow in Boston for release to the public.

Second, to integrate your recommendations into the Annual State Plan, so that your concerns can help guide the spending of federal dollars in this area.

And third, to continue the precedent of these conferences and to conduct such meetings annually.

As your discussions here today have shown, the challenge of community-based care for the developmentally disabled is enormous. It is easy to close buildings; it is far more difficult to replace them with comprehensive services at the community level.

Certainly, we cannot abandon those who remain in institutions.

We must insure the best possible treatment for these individuals. We must continue to use Medicaid reimbursements and federal standards as tools to improve both the facilities and the care available.

But, however we strengthen our institutions, we must work to overcome whatever obstacles remain to block community-based care.

Everyone here knows that there have too often been frustrating delays in payments for community services.

However, I am hopeful that this problem has now been solved. The recommendations of the Special Task Force on De-institutionalization will cut through the red tape and speed up approval of contracts and the payment of funds.

Progress has been real in other areas, too.

The state is now preparing individualized treatment programs for the ten thousand developmentally disabled persons in our care. Teams of experts are examining each case and tailoring treatment to each person's needs.

Because we are making this effort, Massachusetts will, within two years, receive between twenty five and thirty million dollars in new annual funding from the federal government.

Massachusetts I think is showing that community based care is possible. We are proving that a balance can be struck between institutional care and community services for developmentally disabled.

For as we expand our community based programs we will also be improving the quality of services offered by our institutions.

There is another major challenge which lies ahead. This Fall. Chapter 766 is scheduled to take effect.

Much has been said about and against this educational law. But I believe that this milestone legislation represents a vast opportunity for the people of this state.

Already it is recognized as the most far reaching law of its kind in the nation: In the justice and humanity of its intent...in the breadth of its coverage..in the comprehensivemess of its services pledged...in the extent of parental involvement.

Certainly, many issues remain to be settled — not the least of which is funding.

Yet, whatever the problems we must keep this law, and not appeal it though some are screaming for it.

We must accept our responsibility to educate every child — even if it costs more than we initially expected.

Chapter 766 is based on the simple but essential principle that each individual has a right to achieve his full potential...that each disabled person has a right to treatment...that all children and all adults have a right to share the privileges, opportunities and risks of the real world to the fullest extent of their abilities.

A few minutes ago, I finished a meeting with a group which is concerned with one specific case...with one individual, who they believe and I believe, has lost his rights unfairly.

As Governor, I cannot legally discuss this case in detail because it is now before the courts. But you know the situation, for the person comes from this area.

The case of this one man deeply troubles me. It brings home once again the terrible problems that daily confront the developmentally disabled. Their rights are always in jeopardy since they themselves cannot fully protect them.

How shall we guarantee these rights? Who should be responsible? State agencies? The Courts? The Police?

I do not know all the answers. But I believe its time we found them..and moved for more.

To that end, I am tonight announcing the creation of a Special Commission on the Civil Rights of the Retarded. I shall place on it lawyers, judges, civil rights advocates, and parents.

I charge this commission with one task: to recommend reforms — legislative or administrative — that will guarantee to the disabled those same rights that you and I may take for granted.

A decade ago, Massachusetts was locked into a policy of institutional care. Thank God that policy has ended.

A new one, community-based care, has taken its place. Now, we must make this policy really work.

A society can be judged in many ways. But I believe the highest test to be how it helps those who cannot help themselves and cannot stand alone.

Massachusetts has accepted the challenge of this, the most difficult test. I believe we can meet it.

Governor agrees about Daniels

"Perhaps we are moving too fast in de-institutionalization ... but it certainly would have been easier to sit back and do nothing."

However, when asked to justify his proposed 186-million-dollar Department of Mental Health budget for fiscal '75 — identical to last year despite 3-million dollars gained in concessions by the state schools because of the Belchertown suit — Sargent replied "This is the move toward de-institutionalization."

"We are setting up community based centers as quick as possible. Some of the large hospitals are being reduced by 50 per cent."

State Mental Health Commissioner William Goldman has said that even the same amount of funding for the department will prevent new programs from being implemented.

The House voted last week to cut DMH funding back $2-million. Goldman called the action "insane and irresponsible."

One student asked the Governor to request Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn to review the Daniels case.

"I'm not sure the attorney general would want me to assign him that ... but I will speak with him," Sargent said.

The Governor said he would respond to the students' demands in writing "as fast as we can."

"I'm not going to give you the long waltz number on it."

Would you hire you?

Of course you would.
You work hard. And you're good at it. Like most Americans.
But, if all of us did just a little better, we'd wind up with better products, better services and even more pride in the work we do.

America. It only works as well as we do.

Valerie Maynard

Art show at New Africa House

By RUDY JONES
Black News Service

"Art has always been my way of communicating because basically I am a very reticent person" says Valerie Maynard, the artist whose exhibitions are opening at the New Africa House Gallery today at 2:30 - 6:00 p.m.

Miss Maynard, whose chiseled face reflects the strength and beauty within her and looks like one of her own pieces of sculpture, will show 26 graphics and 14 pieces of sculpture. Her first medium was drawing and oils and though she thought about sculpting, she felt she had to be older with more experience.

Then in 1968 while working as a counselor and artist in residence in Saxton River, Vermont, she met many sculptors and talked extensively with Haitian sculptor, Phillipe Smith. She then started working in stone.

"Rufus" and "Emergence", which are in the exhibit, were among her first pieces. Her graphics which include lineolum, woodcuts, etchings and serigraphs exhibit the same strength as her sculptures.

"The advantages of graphics is that they are easier to transport ... and you can't make many of them whereas in sculpting ... there is just one copy," she said. Valerie, who has never studied art in school because she was too busy creating it, spent her childhood in Harlem and is committed to executing her art for public works projects.

She wants to give her work to communities of peoples but insists that the work must be of a permanent nature ... she does not want to execute her art on a building that might be torn down in a couple of years.

"The places where I put my work as well as the medium which I choose must be permanent." Consequently, the young artist who believes that "as the work evolves, so will the places in which I put them" has just completed her first Public Works Project--- a mural for a Welfare Services building on 126th Street and Third Avenue in New York in an area called the Harlem Triangle. The work is a mural, done in ceramics and is a picture that has Black people of all ages represented.

Even though it outlines real people, the mural represents the continuum of the spirit and depth of Black people ... the past as well as the future. For the past 6 years, Valerie has been involved in trying to free her brother, Anthony Maynard, who was unjustly jailed for murder. James Baldwin, who wrote about the Maynard case in "No Name In The Streets", as well as James Wescher and other noted personalities, have aided Val in this celebrated case or yet another Black man who is a victim of American justice, she says.

One of Maynard's lifelong dreams is to found a School of Art where there would be no specialization, no political indoctrination but concentration on all forms of self expression. Valerie Maynard, whose works have been exhibited naturally, says African and Chinese art capture the essence of the spirit.

"My art is my own, my own way of seeing things that I inherited from my very first mother and father centuries ago and I am influenced by those cultures," she says. Her advice to young people is that "Art takes a lifetime — it is not competitive. "The more everyone does, the more beautiful the world."

Health Careers Night a success

University Health Services recently sponsored their second annual "Health Careers Night", an affair which gives undergraduates of the Five College Community an opportunity to realistically explore various careers in the health field.

Nearly 200 students took advantage of the opportunity to meet with and talk to health professionals, academic department representatives, and representatives from the Student Development Center. The informal small group interaction provided a good setting in which students could learn from people who have had the experience in a particular field.

Health Services professionals were present to discuss their experiences in the fields of physical therapy, medicine, dentistry, social work, pharmacy, laboratory science, health education, health administration, medical technology, nursing, nutrition, and environmental health. Academic department representatives spoke about core and departmental requirements, courses available, and their experiences teaching in their fields. Representatives of the Student Development Center were able to answer questions their role in a student's career planning, what services the Development Center has to offer in the area of counselling, and employment prospects in various health fields.

This event first took place last year when the Community Health Education Committee of the Health Services staff sponsored the event in an effort to aid students who were interested in exploring career possibilities in health, and students who had already chosen a major for a health career. Last year's event was well attended, and this year had even more students turn out. Hopefully, "Health Careers Night" will become even more successful in the future.

Our See-Thru Meat Tray...clearly better in every way

More than a year after we introduced our see-thru meat tray, it's still bringing compliments from our customers.

The tray is an open paper grill that lets you see both the top and the bottom of the meat you're buying. It also allows refrigerated air and oxygen to reach the meat, protecting its original freshness longer than other see-thru trays. And our grillwork tray is completely biodegradable, too!

Of course, you can freeze meats just as they come in our see-thru trays. For best results, we recommend you place the package upside down in your freezer. Seal it in freezer wrap when storing more than two weeks.

To thaw frozen meat, remove film wrap and allow package to stand bottom side up about 15 minutes to help meat release more easily. If you're in a hurry, run bottom of package under hot water a few seconds, or place it in a warm (150°) oven a few minutes.

Ms. Caucus accepted at BU Law School

BOSTON (AP) — That liberated female cartoon character in the comic strip "Doonsbury" who has been rying to get into law school has finally made it.

Boston University Law School bowed Friday to the request of a student petition asking Dean Paul M. Siskind to "reconsider the application of Ms. Joan Caucus...and send her an outright acceptance."

More than 300 of the 1,000 law students signed the petition drawn up by Jon Berk, 24, and Rick Brody, 26, second-year law students at BU.

Ms. Caucus, the creation of cartoonish Gary Trudeau, had applied to four law schools.

"This is frightening," Trudeau told radio station WEEI in an interview Saturday. "Joanie has taken on a life of her own apart from the comic strip."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The most intelligent persons are the easiest to fool. The "signs of intelligence" are said to be Gemini, Libra and Aquarius. True, these persons can be fooled in the magician sense, but they are not so easy to deceive—and there is a difference. Where deception is concerned, the most vulnerable are Cancer, Scorpio and Pisces.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on money, collections, personal possessions. New Moon position highlights consolidation, accounting, awareness of inventory. Second thoughts regarding tax matters also are evident. Review statistics. Aquarius, Leo, Sagittarius persons could figure in important ways.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Get going! Start in new direction with different outlook and project. Emphasis is on personality, how you look and effect you have on others. Maintain confident air. Be direct, specific. Those who mean the most to you will respond.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Areas previously dark will receive benefit of greater light. Doubts, fears can be erased. Utilize ability to ask and investigate. Take nothing for granted. Another Gemini—and a Virgo—could aid in getting the story behind the story.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): New associations, friendships provide spice to your life. Domestic adjustment is indicated. The way you live is subject to change. You feel more vital as wishes are fulfilled. You also mature and your decisions will move on target to greater extent.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take a stand. Protect principles. Erase self-doubts. Aim high—one who can pull strings is watching and willing to lend helping hand. Pisces. Virgo persons are featured. Spotlight is on ambition, prestige, achievement, promotion.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): New Moon aspect coincides now with travel, study, review of potential. You learn and seek to broaden horizons. Open lines of communication. Become more familiar with language, foreign and your own. Write, read, call and correspond.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Lunar position spotlights inheritance, taxes, partnership, money proposals. Deal with one who plays cards close to chest. Show admiration for discretion. You will gain added recognition—and you will earn it. Steer clear of persons who talk, talk and do nothing but talk.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Highlight independence, inventiveness. Start project. Bring forth creative resources. Deal with Leo, Aquarius individuals. Accent is on public relations, partnerships—and marriage. You learn what opposition is thinking and planning to do.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Use intuition. Trust hunch. Heed inner voice. Learn by teaching. Rise above the petty—show that you understand overall theme, picture. New outlook indicated where employment, fellow workers and health are concerned.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): New Moon position coincides now with romance, creativity, dealings with offspring, other young persons. Personal magnetism soars. Popularity quotient is high—you socialize, win friends and influence people. Sagittarius, Gemini persons are likely to be involved.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emphasis is on rebuilding, planning for structure with solid base. There are restrictions. Recognize them—work around barriers. Pacing is more important than usual. Slow and steady rather than attempts at sensational bursts—that is a winning ticket.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Movement, messages, journeys are apt to be on agenda. Questions and answers are featured. Relatives, close neighbors are featured. Your opinions are sought—and received in a variety of ways. There is no area of general agreement, but communication lines are active.

Netmen fall to MIT, then laugh, 9-0 at AIC

By GLENN POSTER

7-2 and 9-0. The first was a loss, the second a win. On Thursday the UMass tennis team traveled to Cambridge to battle the Einsteins of MIT. It was a waste of precious gas as the Minutemen escaped with only two singles victories. Top seed Bob Schpeiser drew the defending New England sincles champ and, needless to say, lost. However, Bob was pleased with his own performance showing more than was expected against a top-flight opponent.

Another factor in the loss was the Minutemen were playing on clay courts for the first time all year — they hadn't even practiced on the clay surface. Mark Brass, the number three singles player, told everyone on the team how much he loved to play on clay. Well, Brass was so anxious that he was the first singles player off the court, losing and breaking his undefeated string. John Archer played his first singles match for the team and lost probably from lack of experience. Archer took his first set and then went into a tie breaker in the second. On the last point of the tie breaker Archer was aced. He lost his momentum in the third set.

The two UMass singles winners were Don Douglas and Fred Braley. Douglas played exceptionally well. But Braley had to struggle. Fred lost the touch on his serve in the middle set and had to resort to an underhanded delivery. His ground strokes were falling beautifully though, and he managed to hang on and win in three sets.

American International could state that their match on Friday against the Minutemen was a debacle. For one thing it was held at two different locations — on the three AIC courts and on the Blunt Park City Playground in Springfield. UMass took every match played to account for the final 9-0 whitewash. Only one doubles match went to three sets. Because of the terrible AIC team, Coach Kosakowski got a chance to look at some new faces in the doubles noncompetition. Dave Abramoff was paired with John Archer in the number one slot. Kevin Garahan and Peter Liveroni played number two. And Archie Henderson and Kevin Sullivan made up the third seed.

The team will try to find Chestnut Hill without getting lost as they put their 5-2 record on the line against a fine BC team today. UMass hasn't had much luck against the Eagles this year and hopefully things will change.

Women's softball team opens today

By DAVE VARG

If you like fierce rivalries, such as B.C. vs Holy Cross, Army vs Navy, U.S. vs Soviet Union; if you appreciate a game where emotions run high and victory is ardently sought, be at the north campus diamond this afternoon at 3:00 p.m. as UMass takes on Springfield college in the 1974 softball season opener.

Springfield has dominated the series in recent years. But even though this opponent has typically emerged victorious, UMass has always given them a good fight. The team has always stayed close but never snatched the win.

The hopes for this afternoons contest could lie with the physical condition of starting pitcher Vicki Lentine. "Blaze ball" (as Shortstop Fruzzetti calls her) was destructably effective in last Saturdays intro-squad game, allowing only one run while working seven innings. But, the underhand ace has been hampered by a nagging ankle injury. So, if she's able to throw with her normal velocity and control, Springfield may be in rouble. And if her wandering knuckle ball is working, Springfield will be in trouble.

Softball is a great deal more competitive than most people realize. Coach Oglesby is constantly flashing some sign to her offensive players during a game. The hit and run, the steal, double steal, the sacrifice, the bunt, the suicide squeeze are all important parts of the game. Oglesby frets over strategy decisions during a contest as much as any athletic coach. The major reason for this is because runs are so hard to come by in softball. A well executing team that is capable of hustling and scratching across a couple of runs will be a winner.

This is pretty much the type of team that UMass has. They have a competant defense some capable pitching and a lot of hustle on offense. They don't hit many home runs and they may not tear too many ball covers off, but they reach base and they put runs on the scoreboard. They execute well and cause the opposition to make errors.

BC relays his first test

Grigus second in decathlon

By SCOTT HAYES

A pole vaulter and two high jumpers from UMass entered the decathlon at the BC Relays, attempting to come up with respectable performances in ten events, some of which the athletes tried only once or twice before. For Dan Grigus, John Osborne and Pete Ryan, the two day test ended in dissimilar ways. Grigus outlasted Scott Davis of Coast Guard and BC's Kerry Leppo in the battle for second place behind Abe Davis. Osborne wound up seventh and Pete Ryan was forced to drop out of the competition with a sprained ankle.

After the first day of competition, Abe Davis of Springfield held the lead with 3560 points. Grigus was in third, 316 points in back of Leppo, who totaled 3405.

Davis won the first of the second day events, the 110 meter hurdles. Leppo finished second. In the discus, Leppo had a bad throw, and Grigus moved in on him.

Then, in the pole vault, Grigus' specialty, Davis and Leppo managed only 9-6 while Grisus cleared 13-2. Points are awarded by comparing the performances to the world record mark and giving points accordingly. With the pole vault advantage, Grigus moved ahead of Leppo, as did Scott Davis of the Coast Guard.

In the next to last event, the javelin, Grigus opened up a 200 point margin on Leppo, but Davis moved to within 70 points of Grigus.

That left just one event remaining, the 1500 meter run. Abe Davis had already clinched first by this time, but there was a three-way battle for second. The final scoring was A. Davis 6272, Grigus 5975, S. Davis 5935 and Leppo 5921.

It was the first decathlon for all three athletes. Grigus had UMass on the scoreboard even before the rest of the team arrived Saturday morning. Those points were the first of many for the red-hot trackmen, who have come into their own halfway through the season.

Crew nips Terriers at finish

By BOB ESTELLE

The varsity crew came from behind to win a close race with Boston University last Saturday. This was a grudge race for both teams. Two years ago, the Terriers beat UMass by ten seconds and the Minutemen won last year's race by 20 seconds. In addition, B.U.'s coach, Hugh Foley, was the assistant coach of the 1972 U.S. Olympic Team. UMass coach Mike Vespoli was a member of that squad.

There was a slight tailwind on the Charles when the race started. B.U. pulled ahead by a length at the start but the Minutemen came back and had a one-seat lead halfway throught.

At the three-quarter point in the race, the Minutemen had a three-quarter length lead. Then B.U. started to sprint. UMass, having emphasized their own sprint during the past week of practice, was able to counter the Terriers' move and won the race by a three-quarter length margin. The winning time was 6:02.5 while B.U. finished with a 6:04.4 time.

The junior varsity lost their first race of the season to B.U.'s JV by only nine-tenths of a second. The winning time for the Terriers was 6:22.

The first freshman boat also went down for the first time this season when an oarsman lost control of the oar at two key points in the race. Before the second mishap, it was still a close race but afterward, the Terriers pulled away and won with a time of 6:19.5 while UMass has a time of 6:27.5.

Next Saturday is the big race for the crew. They will meet the Coast Guard Academy in what will be the most exciting race of the season.

Last year, of course, UMass won the Dad Vail. The Coast Guard finished a close third. This matchup will be the toughest race that the Minutemen will have all year long.

EAST STROUDSBURG, Pa. (AP) — Marshall Avener, formerly of Penn State, posted the top score of 107.25 Sunday as six men qualified in the U. S. Gymnastics Federation's Eastern Regional trials.

John Crosby, formerly of Southern Connecticut, was second with 105.55 points. The top six scorers from a field of 16 qualified for the U. S. Gymnastics Association championships next month at Berkeley, Calif.

Batsmen salvage one out of three

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

It was just "one of those weekends" for the UMass baseball squad. As you lie basking in the hot sun in Amherst, the hitters travelled around New England, playing three games in three days; three games which Coach Dick Bergquist summed up in one line, "With a couple of breaks we could have won all three."

Instead, the Minutemen were defeated twice by New Hampshire, 2-1 (at home on Friday) and 4-3 (in Durham on Saturday), but came back to turn the tide on Holy Cross (in Worcester) yesterday in yet another one run game, but coming out on top this time, 5-4.

The Minutemen have gradually come out of their hitting slump as they sprayed around 24 hits in the last two games.

One hit, however, stood out from among them all. It came in the ninth inning yesterday with the score tied at 4-4.

After Johnny Seed beat out an infield hit (after two were out), DH Rick Hansen (two hits, 3 RBI's on the day) dropped a Texas League single over first base into short right, Seed wheeling around from first (on the hit and run) to score the fifth and winning run. The hit snapped a four game losing skein and hopefully will be an omen of things to come.

Rich Baye struck out 10 while going the first 6 plus innings. John McManus picked up where Baye left off striking out 3 in the last two innings and chalking up the victory.

In Friday's loss to UNH the Minutemen looked like the Chicago White Sox of old as while Jeff Reardon was hurling a stylish 3-hitter for Umass, Minutemen hitters could do no better, only mustering 5 of their own.

UNH won it in the first inning as after Reardon filled the bases on walks, Timmy Burke slammed a line shot down the right field line to score New Hampshire's two runs.

UMass scored its only run in the fifth, without the benefit of a hit as shortstop Steve Miller was having trouble on a couple of routine ground balls leading to the unearned run.

Saturday's game was a horse of a different color, as both teams were unable to capitalize on numerous scoring opportunities, nobody being able to come up with the big hit.

One big exception was in the last of the ninth, (the score tied 3-3) with left-hander Steve Merrill on the mound for UMass (he came in for Allegrezza and stopped a threat in the eighth). Timmy Burke (Friday's hero) led off with a line single. After Merrill retired the next two batters on fly outs, Rick Crosby singled, putting runners on the corners.

The stage was set for Dennis Lade who delivered a long fly out of anyones's reach in right field, to easily score Burke from third for the fourth run and a sweep of the home-and-away doubleheader.

For the 4-6 Minutemen, they'll have Dartmouth to contend with at Earl Lorden Field on Tuesday for a double header, a team which in the words of Bergquist "is very much improved from last year."

Bruins surge, win 8-6

By DAVE O'HARA
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP(— Johnny Bucyk scored three power-play goals in the first two periods and the Boston Bruins unloaded their heavy artillery for four more scores in the final frame Sunday for an 8-6 victory over the Chicago Black Hawks.

The truimph tied the National Hockey League best-of-seven semifinal playoff 1-1 with the third and fourth games moving to Chicago Tuesday and Thursday nights.

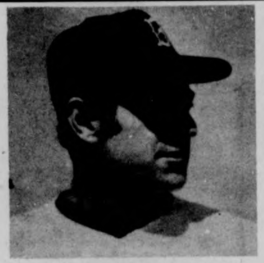
Bucyk, a veteran who will turn 39 in May, scored at 6:44 and at 11:56 of the first period. Both times he was set up by defensemen Bobby Orr and Carol Vadnais, while the Bruins pressed a man advantage.

He completed the third play off hat trick of his career with another power-play goal at 17:34 of the second period, tying the game 4-4. Again he was fed by Orr, who had taken a pass from Vadnais.

Phil Esposito broke the deadlock by converting a Wayne Cashman pass early in the third period. However, Chicago's Dennis Hull scored his second goal of the game and his sixth of the playoffs on a long slap shot from outside the blue line during a power play at 5:12, again knotting the score.

Then the Bruins nailed down the decision with three goals in less than four minutes.

Bobby Schmautz triggered the outburst by cashing a passout from Bucyk at 7:56. Don Marcotte scored at 8:40, and Gregg Sheppard made it 8-5 at 11:53.



DICK MCAULIFFE scored the winner

Sox squeak by Indians

BOSTON (AP) — Dick McAuliffe scored from second base on a wild pickoff throw by Cleveland pitcher Milt Wilcox in the 10th inning Sunday, lifting the Boston Red Sox to a 6-5 victory over the Indians.

McAuliffe, who ignited a four-run rally in the ninth inning with a leadoff walk, started the 10th with a walk off Cecil Upshaw and Upshaw then fielded Bob Montgomery's bunt and threw late and high to second. Wilcox relieved and promptly heaved the ball into center field, allowing McAuliffe to score.

Trailing 5-1, the Red Sox rallied in the ninth against Cleveland starter Jim Perry and three relievers to tie the score. The walk to McAuliffe and singles by Danny Cater, Cecil Cooper and Doug Griffin — the last two off Ken Sanders — produced a run and left the bases loaded. Tom Hilgendorf retired Bernie Carbo on a forceout and Carl Yastrzemski on a sacrifice fly, each delivering a run and making it 5-4. Rico Petrocelli then greeted Cecil Upshaw with a game-tying double.

Celts last out Knicks

By BERT ROSENTHAL
AP Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — John Havlicek, Boston's tireless veteran and captain, broke loose for 36 points, carrying the Celtics to a 98-91 victory over the New York Knicks Sunday and a commanding 3-1 lead in their National Basketball Association playoff series.

The Celtics can clinch the best-of-seven Eastern Conference series and oust the defending NBA champions from the playoffs by winning the series' fifth game Wednesday night at Boston.

Havlicek, in his 12th pro season and the Celtics' all-time leading scorer, hit for 12 points in the crucial fourth period when Boston shook off repeated New York thrusts.

With Boston clinging to an 84-81 advantage midway through the final quarter, Havlicek struck for three straight field goals, boosting his team to a 90-83 lead. Then when New York closed to within 92-91 on a jumper by Bill Bradley with 44 seconds remaining, Havlicek sank a layup with 26 seconds left, putting Boston safely ahead.

Jo Jo White added two free throws for Boston with nine seconds to go and Paul Silas got the game's last two points with two more foul shots with one second left.

Trackmen capture BC relays

By SCOTT HAYES

The seats in the Peter pan bus flaunting the nameplate "U of Mass" were being filled slowly. Members of the track team waited patiently to depart from BC's Alumni Stadium at Chestnut Hill after Saturday's competition. As co-captain Jack Maloney came walking toward the bus, flanked by smiling coaches Ken O'Brien and Mike Muska, a cheer went up from inside the bus. The reason for the elation was in the hands of the team captain. It was a trophy that symbolizes the winning team of the Boston College Relays.

In winning the ninth edition of the BC Relays, UMass nipped Dartmouth 56½-50, after the Big Green challenged for the lead all afternoon. The trackmen picked up an assemblage of medals, which are awarded to the members of the first place relay team.

Tom Wilson and Phil Broughton keyed the victory by finishing one-two in the 3000 meter steeplechase. The tracksters went into the steeple with just a 3½ point lead over Dartmouth. Wilson, the fourth place finisher a year ago, took the lead after Chris Peisch and George Walker of Dartmouth jumped out to an early advantage.

The first lap of the steeplechase illustrated the danger of the water jump. Three runners stumbled on the initial water obstacle and one fell completely into the chilly water.

Wilson held and widened his lead, but two of the three runners between Broughton and the leader were wearing the green of Dartmouth. Broughton took advantage of his height by taking the hurdles almost without effort while other competitors were stumbling over them. Broughton passed Peisch and Walker of Dartmouth as well as Mark Duggan of Boston State.

Broughton's kick clinched the win for UMass. The team members were lined along the top row of the stands overlooking the water jump. Encouraging shouts from the rest of the team as Wilson finished his last lap and Broughton moved into second, filled the warm air.

Wilson set a new BC Relay record, eclipsing teammate Bill Gillin's mark set a year ago. Wilson was timed in 9:01.7 while Broughton ran the testing event in 9:17.9.

The meet exemplified what Coach Ken O'Brien has been saying all season long — that depth can, and will win meets.

John McGrail initiated a very successful day for the distance men, who were competing without the services of leader Randy Thomas, out with a bad knee.

McGrail went right out in the three-mile, the first event of the day on the track, but his lead was shortlived. Steve Hamel of Northeastern took the lead for three laps before Bob Sevene took charge for two laps. Tom Maguire moved into first with five laps left, and battled Sevene until Boston State's John Goodwin moved in front of the pack. McGrail put on a kick to overtake Goodwin and earned first place points although Sevene finished ahead of the field. Sevene was competing for the Greater Boston Tack Club, a non-scoring entry, so McGrail's 13:56.5 was the official first place time. Maguire took third in the exciting opening event with a time of 14:03.2.

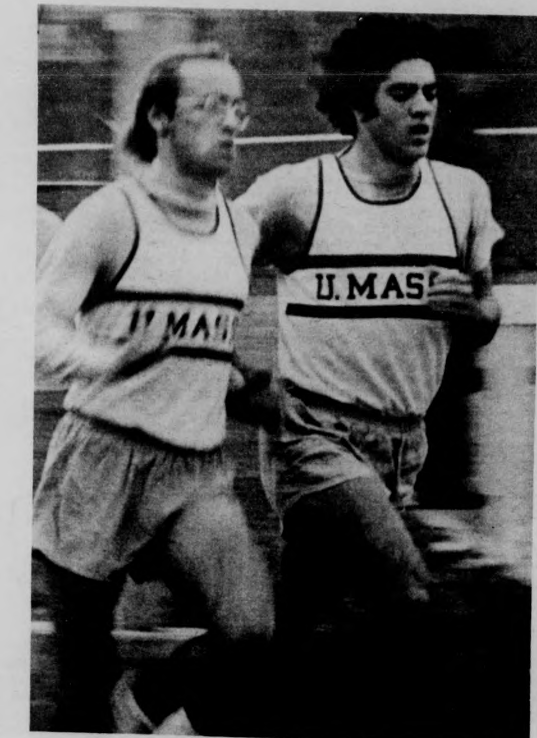
The next event, the shuttle hurdle relay, resulted in another UMass win. Jim Hennessey, Curt Stegerwald, Pete Famulari and Alan Suprenault combined for a winning time of 61.7.

The 440-yard relay team tied for fourth and then Curt Stegerwald captured third in the 440 intermediate hurdles. The two-mile relay team placed third, and after seven events, the team had a total of 27½ points, more than last year's output for the entire meet.

The distance-medley relay team of Jack Maloney, Steve Crimmins, Bill Gillin and Devin Croft came up with outstanding performances to win with a time of 9:58, which might qualify for the Relay Championship of America at the Penn Relays. Croft highlighted the race by passing BC's Keith Francis on the gun lap and passing NU's Mike Buckley with 110 yards to go. Croft, who was faced with the task of running anchor almost side by side with the two super runners, came through with an exceptional mile time of 4:11.4.

The jumpers were simply overwhelming in winning both the long and triple jumps. Ken Adamson won the triple jump at 47-6 and took third in the long jump while Bob Adamson captured fourth and fifth in those respective events.

See related decathlon story on inside.



DEPTH IN THE DISTANCE EVENTS, exemplified by this battle between Paul Segersten and Tom Maguire in the six-mile, pushed UMass to their first BC Relays title Saturday.

No state position for a full time gymnastics coach

Editors note — This is the third article in a series by the Collegian Sports investigative team on the announced phase down of the men's gymnastics team by the Athletic Department.

By RICH SEVIERI

It is the general policy of the Athletic Department to review an athletic program when the position of head coach in that program is vacated.

The position of men's gymnastics coach was vacated two years ago, as Eric Kjeldson who was then coach asked for a leave of absence to pursue a doctrates degree. Two weeks ago the Athletic Department announced the decision they had reached on the fate of the men's gymnastics program. Tom Dunn, who was Kjeldson's interim replacement would not be rehired for the '75 season, and the men's gymnastics program would be phased down considerably.

"The decision was made some time ago, even before I came here," said Athletic Director Frank McInerney. "Eric Kjeldson who was coaching, left on sabatical. The school brought in Tom Dunn to replace him for one year. When Eric returned he decided he was not going to coach gymnastics. That meant there was no longer a state position for mens gymnastics coach.

All salaries of athletic coaches are paid by the state the same as the faculty. Since there was no state position of men's gymnastics coach, Dunn's salary of $8-$10,000 came from the athletic trust fund. The trust fund is money held in trust in case of a bad year at the football stadium.

The decision on phasing down the gymnastics program was held back two years ago so that scheduling and scholarship obligations could be fulfilled. And so new Athletic Director McInerney could have some time to investigate the situation.

"After my first year I was sort of puzzled, not necessarily puzzled," said McInerney correcting himself. "I just didn't want to see the gymnastics program phased down without searching out every possible avenue. The unfortunate situation was absolutely no, there was no position available for gymnastics. We have to phase down because there is no position."

The House of the state legislature has passed 47 new positions for UMass Amherst. If passed by the Senate those positions will go to the Office of the Provost, who divides them among the departments. Dean Bischoff of the Physical Ed. Department acted upon McInerney's recommendation not to pursue a gymnastics coaching position, and to begin the phase-down. With the University facing cutbacks in several areas, and new positions as tight as they are, the chances of the Athletic Dept. receiving a gymnastics coaching position were slim. "The state is no longer allowing any growth, in fact they are cutting back," said McInerney. "If it happened 5 years ago the state would have created a position but because we are on a zero growth pattern there is no position."

With all athletic programs facing cutbacks due to inflation cutting the buying power of the $30.00 student athletic fee, the phase-down of the gymnastics budget, one of the 5 largest, comes at an opportune time for the Athletic Dept. The biggest slice taken out of the gymnastics budget will be travel costs.

"There's no other program in the department where we get so involved with traveling," said Associate Director of Athletics, Robert O'Connell. "Take a look at your league. Out in western Pennsylvania you have Pitt and Penn State, Temple in Philly, Army and Navy, Syracuse and Cornell up in Ithica."

"Travel cost is getting brutal," interjected McInerney.

"If they go to a New England schedule with little traveling, or they only have one team and cut the JV, along with the money for recruitment the budget will be cut drastically," said lame duck coach Tom Dunn.

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Madison, N.J. — Garber's Gorillas had a field day, offensively, but not defensively, as they bombed Farleigh Dickinson University by a 21-13 score on Saturday.

After the opening faceoff, Fairleigh Dickinson scored two quick goals. UMass straightened out and came back with eight consecutive goals. Attackman Peter Connolly netted the first one on a strong shot from the left side of the cage. Jeff Spooner collected the assist on that one but the play started on an excellent pass from goalie, John (O.J.) Rutledge. Midfielder Terry Keefe showed some hustle as he scopped up a loose ball, passed it to teammate, Harry McVey, who fed it to Jeff Spooner for the tying goal, and McVey scored the go ahead goal.

UMass continued the outburst with the scorers being, in order, John Martin, Steve Pappas, Jeff Spooner, and Andy Scheffer (2 goals). Scheffer's first goal was a strange one. The Dickinson goalie, bringing his stick back to pass, dropped the ball into his own net. Scheffer, being the closest man to the ball, was credited with the goal.

Fairleigh Dickinson scored two more goals to bring the score to 8-4 at halftime.

UMass came out running in the second half. Jeff Spooner scored the ninth goal for the Gorillas after only 33 seconds had elapsed. Steve Pappas assited on the goal. The Gorillas continued firing at the Dickinson netminder and they scored another six goals. In that period, Peter Connolly netted three goals while Spooner got two and Bill Arnold and Harry McVey scored one apiece. At one point in the third period, the Gorillas had a 15-6 lead.

The Gorillas wouldn't stop scoring in the fourth quarter either. They scored another six goals in that period with Hirsch Seidman getting the hat trick and Vin LoBello, Andy Scheffer, and Steve Pappas getting singles.

JEFF SPOONER - 4 goals

FDU battled back in vain. At one point they had closed the score to 15-12. However, UMass just pulled away.

This game was played sloppily. UMass had seventeen penalties in the game, 11 of them coming in the second half (3 in the the 3rd quarter, 9 in the 4th). At one time in the fourth period, UMass was down by three men but a good defensive play by Billy Blaustein allowed them to gain possession of the ball to nullify the penalties, without FDU scoring. Coach Dick Garber said, "It was a good game offensively, but not defensively." Garber also praised freshmen Terry Keefe and Steve Pappas and Vin LoBello. UMass plays B.C. Tuesday night at 7:30 at B.C.'s Alumni Stadium.

Circus atmosphere

Savini elected SGA President

By ROBERTA MARTONE
MDC Staff

The circus came to town, again, last night. But this time, it wasn't Barnum and Bailey, it was the elections for next year's SGA president, in the Campus Center Auditorium.

After two hours of cheering, foot stomping, and confetti throwing, Rick Savini, a chairperson of the Student Senate, was elected Student Government Association with a total of fity votes.

In his post, Savini will be a guiding factor for the use of more than $600,000 in undergraduate fees collected on tuition bills, and will serve as a full voting member of the UMass Board of Trustees, the final policy-making body of the university.

For openers, Nick Apostola, outgoing SGA president, rode in on a bike, dressed in a graduation cap and gown, and smoking a cigar, while "Hail to the Chief" played over the PA system.

Next, Ben Clancy, a write-in vote for the office and also a member of the Student Senate, spoke on his own behalf, with the Henry Ragin cheering section in the background.

Clancy said he thought highly of all the other candidates, but felt he was the only one "qualified to take all the shit the job entails."

Kelly Irwin and other spokespersons representing the socialist viewpoint, were next at the podium. John O'Keefe speaking on behalf of Ms. Irwin, said he felt she was the only candidate who would deal with the specific problems of the University and the community. "This election is a farce," Ms. Irwin said, "Apostola has turned it into a circus."

Ms. Irwin also promised if elected, "to make a lot of trouble for the administration." More specifically, she stated such goals as probing into the financial records of the University, increased funding of RSO groups, and greater preference directed to Third World and Women's needs.

Henry Ragin and supporters followed. Endorsing Ragin, Matt Tackeff, a Collegian commentator, said, "Ragin can't promise a chicken in every pot, but he can promise pot in every classroom. Everybody knows we are all here for higher education."

Nick Apostola also endorsed Ragin in a speech given in both English and Rumanian.

,"This election proves what I've been saying all along," Ragin said. "You're all too serious. Student Government is a circus.", as five people danced bare-assed behind him, with the letters RAGIN spelled on their posteriors.

The final speaker was Rick Savini. "Anybody that can pull together Matt Tackeff and Nick Apostola deserves to be SGA president," he said, "However, I think we have a lot of problems here."

Savini discussed his plans to stop impending budget cuts of RSO groups, to appoint the Third World two voting seats on the executive committee of the Student Senate, and to make SGA serve the people.

After a delay due to Henry Ragin's challenging of a delegation for illegal voting procedures, he questioned the voting eligibility of the Orchard Hill members present at the election, the voting began.

The final outcome was: Savini: 50.3 votes, Ragin: 7.4 votes, Clancy: 15.5 votes, and Irwin 15.6 votes.

After his victory, Savini said: "I'm really happy. I took the Third World and everybody. I want to thank everybody. Next year is going to be the best year SGA has seen in a long time."

Board hike coming?

By MARK KELLEHER
MDC Staff

An approximate $20 per semester rise in the board plan is being recommended to the Board of Trustees, by Food Services. It is estimated that the 10 meal plan will go to $308 per semester with the 15 meal plan going to $345.

According to Acting Director of Food Services, Art Warren, all the colleges and universities in the nation have reported board increases for next year."

Warren attributed the rise to large food price increases of which a 16 per cent increase is projected for next year. The employees of Food Service are scheduled for an 6.3 per cent cost of living increase this year with an anticipated 8 per cent next year, subject to legislative approval.

Two-thirds of the cost of the meal plan goes toward food and labor.

When asked if he saw any leveling off of board increases in the future Warren replied that, "unless the level of service changes and the amount and kinds of food wanted changes then it should continue to go up." Warren added that although he wasn't an

Collins urges carcass probe

By FRITZ GUERTSEN
AND MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

UMass officials Monday said animal carcasses buried near North Village are not "a serious health hazard" — but Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, called it "a situation of valid concern."

Collins said the situation deserves "immediate attention" and added he will request an investigation by the University this week to ensure that the animal wastes are properly disposed of in the future.

Recently, residents of the appartment complex have charged the University with "dumping" dead animals on University property in their neighborhood. Dogs have brought back rotting flesh and bones — a horse head in one instance, they said.

"I was contacted last Friday regarding this matter. I went down to see for myself and found an animal skull and what looked like a leg projecting from a pit," Collins said.

"It does seem to me a situation of valid concern to area residents, and I will work with UMass to correct the situation. I will provide a report concerning this at a later date."

Bernard L. Hilton, Stockbridge farm superintendent, dismissed the possibility of any health hazard and blamed the problem on Amherst for not enforcing its leash laws.

"If the dogs were tied up like they're supposed to be, none of the animals would have been dug up and dragged all over the place," Hilton told the Collegian.

"We won't be burying around North Village anymore, I guess, because of this whole affair. We'll have to find a new place and I won't tell anyone where that'll be."

Robert P. Gleason, Director of Environmental Health and Safety at UMass, recalled a similar problem two years ago when the hacked-up carcass of a cow was discovered in a pit in the same vicinity with a minimal amount of dirt over it.

"At that time," he said," I recommended that the practice of burying animals at that site be discontinued. I hadn't heard of any problems since then so I assumed that everything had been settled."

Gleason and Hilton both absolved the Physical Plant of the responsibility for burying the animals, but pointed to the Stockbridge Farm itself.

David Johnston, director of Public Safety, called the situation "deplorable," but said his department has no jurisdiction in the affair at all.

Yesterday, the Collegian learned that the animal pit had been plowed over. However, some tenants expect "more positive action" by the University to ensure the practice is never repeated.

A mad, mad tea party

By KAREN LYNCH

Being present at an SGA presidential election is like falling down a hole and winding up at the Madhatter's Tea Party.

The cast of characters reads like something out of Lewis Carroll. The only alien figure was a Senator dressed up like Abe Lincoln, but why not?

The whole show really began when President Nick Apostola entered the hall on a bicycle to a recording of the Tabernacle Choir singing "Hail to the Chief".

With the Ipana smile of a Cheshire Cat, Apostola backed Ragin. In Rumanian yet. And before he faded away, 5 bare asses paraded on stage, spelling out R-A-G-I-N.

Daffodil-decked Ragin, who does not take himself or the Student Senate seriously, ran on a platform of abolition and dope. (With the money you save from the SAF tax, you can buy three ounces of good dope!)

Someone kept shouting "Get serious", but Ragin and his supporters had a good time anyway.

Kelly Erwin was upset. She went so far as to venture that "This election and the SGA are a farce." (Off with their heads, off with their heads!)

Erwin backed a strong student union, and student's control over their own lives.

Hear, hear!

However, one Senator saw a problem in that Erwin and Cindy

Residents react to carcasses: "Ecch!"

By LARRY CARPMAN
MDC Staff

Five out of six residents of North Village, where animal carcasses have been spotted on front yard lawns lately, called the situation "gross" in Collegian interviews yesterday.

"That's pretty raunchy, isn't it?" said Bill Cook a North Village resident who is majoring in Landscape Architecture and Landscape Planning.

"Putting dirt on the dead animals isn't the way to solve the problem," Cook said. "All I can say is that's one place to keep my son away from."

"It's amazing," said Christopher Leighton.

"It kinda' scares me being a new father," he said. Leighton has a six week old son.

"It's disgusting to think about the disease," said Leighton."

When asked if he would choose to live in North Village again Leighton replied: "I would still live here ... mainly 'cause it's cheap, I guess."

"The situation is really gross," said Joanne O'Connell. "I saw what looked like some dead cats about a month ago and at the time my own cat was missing. I thought it was her," she said.

"It's gross, that's all I can say, it's gross," she said.

Dick Moynihan, a resident of North Village for three years, said: "That's bad that they just dump them (the carcasses) out there."

Moynihan, the father of a six month old son, was concerned about the possible health problems the dead animals may cause.

"I would like to find out more about it to see if it is a real health hazard," he said.

Many residents interviewed noted the large population of dogs as a big factor for having the carcasses scattered throughout the apartment complex.

Board to be raised?

economist he doesn't anticipate such large percentage increases as has been the case the past two years.

In the case of financial hardship resulting from the increased charges Warren predicted that more work study money would be available plus more student help in the commons.

He warned though that "unless students or parents income increases proportionately to the cost of living, students must make the decision they can no longer afford seconds or decrease the expensive items on the menu."

"More options should be made available for at a minimum cost for those students who don't want to be in an unlimited food or menu situation like we are now."

In terms of what Food Service has done itself in cost cutting Warren said that portion control has been instituted in the serving of food. Portion control means in laymans terms that you get only what you ask for on your dinner plate and nothing else.

There is also a new program where most foods are now prepared on the premises. Taking advantage of equipment long laying dormant the cooks now prepare as much of the food as possible themselves, with the assistance of a special training team and an ongoing training program.

"The employees like this more themselves," Warren said and he believes there has been a marked improvement in the quality of food because of this.

When asked what students as individuals could do to cut down on costs Warren said that theft should be brought to an end. (As mentioned at a previous Food Service meeting it is costing $18,000 for replacement silverware alone this year.)

Also Warren added, "we need more input from the student on what they want in the dining commons.

Campus info desk almost set

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

"What this campus has needed for a long time is a centrally located desk where students can obtain information and assistance of whatever kind they need," said Bud Wilkes, Retail Services Manager of the Campus Center, "and starting next Wednesday, there will be one."

The Campus Assistance Center will be located where the Information Desk is now, on the concourse level of the Campus Center, right outside the Blue Wall.

The Center is a joint undertaking by the Campus Center administration and the Student Affairs Office at Whitmore, explained Wilkes, who will be in charge of the center.

"The Center will be consolidating the efforts of many of the offices on campus," said Wilkes, "and will be offering students information and assistance in such areas as financial aid, veterans' affairs, Five College programs, registration, and so forth.

"We've found that there's been an awful lot of duplication of effort among the various offices on campus and we hope to cut that down as much as possible."

Students will be able to pick up financial aid forms, registration material, and other forms at the Center.

The Center will be staffed with students (those already at the Desk) as well as professional staffers from different offices on campus. (See Wednesday's schedule elsewhere on this page.)

"We'll be having different people every week," said Wilkes, "and we hope eventually to train our student staff to be able to at least refer any and all problems to the proper places."

Randy Dahl of the Commuter Affairs Office will handle the weekly scheduling of professional staffers. The schedule will be published regularly.

"The professional people," said Wilkes, "will be available for counseling as well as information. We have an office also for those students who wish to have private talks about their specific problems."

The Center will continue to handle everything that it did in the past, such as Five College information and refunds for the machines.

A booklet listing all of the agencies on campus along with important names, addresses and phone numbers will be available at the desk for student perusal.

The hours of the Center will be 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Friday, although the professional staffers will be there from 9-5 and occassional evenings.

The Center will run from this Wednesday to the end of the semester, and will also continue in a somewhat different form through the summer months, said Wilkes.

"We hope to learn from our mistakes in the next six weeks," he said, " so that we'll have everything ironed out for the Fall semester."

The entire operation will cost $12,000 annually, which Wilkes says will be divided evenly between the Campus Center and the Student Affairs office.

"The present information desk costs us $9000 a year," said Wilkes, "so that the $6000 that we'll be paying each year represents a savings of $3000."

Any complaints or suggestions relating to the Center should be made to Bud Wilkes, who can be reached at his office in Room 818 or the Campus Center or by calling 545-0585.

WE KNOW things are kind of tight at the moment, but who's idea of financial aid is this?

Financial aid

Expansion brings new emphasis

This is the first in a six part series on financial aid at UMass.

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff

"Before fall semester, 1973, there were essentially just two people processing 7,000 UMass student applications for financial aid," Richard Dent, Director of the Office of Financial Aid, said in a Collegian interview.

"Financial aid was just not a high priority item during the growth years of the University," Dent continued.

With the enactment of the administrative plan to level off the University's student population at 25,000 and with what Dent calls "the internal reallocation of resources" however, new emphasis has been placed in the area of student financial aid.

During fall semester, 1973, five new members were added to the Financial Aid Office's professional staff.

Dent was appointed director in September, 1973.

Lynn Santer, who has worked in the office for eight years was appointed as one of two associate directors. His special area is student loans.

Carl Brown was appointed associate director in December, 1973, and is also coordinator for the Committee for Collegiate Education of Black Students (CCEBS) program.

The three other newly appointed staff members are: John Warlick, whose special area is work-study, appointed September, 1973; Delores Lewis, who works in coordination with social service agencies and the women's task force, appointed November, 1973; and David Sackett, who is in charge of planning and budgeting, appointed, November, 1973.

All of the professional staff members review applications for aid. Each member of the professional staff also works two days per week at the main desk in the office.

Six secretaries and 15 students make up what Dent calls the "support staff" of the office.

Dent said that 60 to 70 per cent of his staff's time is spent on counseling those students seeking financial assistance.

"With a staff that has tripled since September we find it easier to individualize," he said.

Last month, the professional staff of the Financial Aid Office released a statement of goals. Goals listed are briefly as follows:

1.) Serve as an advocate for financially needy students on campus and in the state and federal legislative process.

2.) Strive to increase financial aid funds.

3.) Increase efficiency and sensitivity of Financial Aid Office operations.

5.) Establish a Student Employment Office.

6.) Establish training program for Financial Aid Office staff and other interested parties.

8.) Improve interfaces with those other University operations that either serve the aid office or are served by it.

9.) Review all policies and programs of the office.

10.) Provide for more student involvement in the aid office operations (advisory committees).

Applications for financial aid are now available in the Financial Aid Office, 243 Whitmore. The deadline for filing applications has been moved up to May 3.

Trustees to receive women's studies proposal

By ROBERTA McCANN
MDC Staff

A proposal establishing a Women's Studies Program at UMass is scheduled to come before the Board of Trustees for final approval in May. The Faculty Senate approved the program on March 21.

The proposal would establish a two year pilot program in Women's Studies leading to the development of a full major in Women's Studies by the Fall of 1976. Starting next Fall, the program would offer a Certificate in Women's Studies for the completion of a minor concentration of 18 credits and two seminars.

"Students in the program would earn the Certificate in Women's Studies in addition to their regular departmental major," the proposal, written by the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women subcommittee on Women's Studies, states, "or earn a BDIC major in Women's Studies."

The past few years have seen a rising interest in Women's Studies courses at UMass and across the nation. In the Spring of 1973, there were at least 90 institutions with some type of Women's Studies Program. There were 15 degree granting programs, also.

At UMass, courses on or about women have been filled to capacity.

A recent course survey revealed at least 60 different Women's Studies courses offered during the past two years in the 5-College area. Students at UMass are already majoring in Women's Studies under the Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration and University Without Walls programs.

"The program we propose is therefore scarcely a new departure," the proposal states, "Rather, it would coordinate and give direction to the intense interest, the extensive resources, and the range of informal programs that already exist at the University, as well as the neighboring colleges."

Women's Studies courses would include courses on the study of sex roles, the history of women, political theory as it applies to women, women writers, novels about women, the psychology of women, women in the economy and the family. Presently, courses on these subjects are offered by individual departments and the residential colleges.

"The Women's Studies Program will not be an isolated department," according to Deborah Felton, a Junior BDIC major in Women's Studies and staffperson at the Everywoman's Center who has been working on the proposal, "All courses that are pertinent material on the study of women will be crosslisted from their departments and Women's Studies. We are not taking any courses out of the departments and putting them in Women's Studies. Women's Studies students will be dispersed in all the classrooms."

The proposal requires that students complete at least 18 credits in Women's Studies through courses, independent study or field work. Students would also be required to take two seminars. The first seminar is an introduction on "Issues in Women's Studies" and the second, to be taken towards the end of one's study, is an integrative seminar for students to share their experiences and work together on a group project.

Each student in the program will select and work with a faculty sponsor to plan an individualized plan of study. A BDIC degree in Women's Studies will remain. However, a BDIC student would be required to take the two Women's Studies Policy Board.

The eleven-member Women's Studies Policy Board will consist of a Women's Studies Program Coordinator, three students, three faculty sponsors, two UMass staff members and two community resource persons. The Board will determine overall academic policy and program direction, evaluate the program, and develop a proposal for a degree-granting major in Women's Studies to be placed before the Faculty Senate for consideration.

The Women's Studies Program Coordinator would supervise the program and implement Policy Board decisions. The Coordinator would also encourage departments to support Women's Studies courses and, possibly, develop more courses. There will also be a Curriculum Committee to decide on new courses not sponsored by departments or the residential colleges.

The proposal suggests that the Women's Studies office be located near the Everywoman's Center in Goodell Hall.

"We would very much like to see the Coordinator's office nearby," the proposal states, "to take advantage of general support services, and for lounge and library use of EWC."

In order to inform and interest students, the Women's Studies Program expects to have information sessions at summer counseling, to distribute a booklet on the program in the 5-College area and the introductory seminar on Women's Studies.

McGrath, newly elected SGA Speaker, are both from the same garden, idealogically speaking. That could mean very little separation of powers, a dangerous thing in any governmental organization.

Ben Clancy spoke like a man late for a very important date. Part of the problem were the rude interruptions from the Ragin clan. (Were they ever having a good time).

Previous to the elections Clancy had suggested that it was virtually impossible for an unknown Senator to run for SGA president and win. He was right.

Victorious Rick Savini seemed like the perfect choice. Conservative. Well spoken. Been around a long time. Ready and willing to deal with the administration and the legislature.

Some folks in the Senate feel Savini will change the SGA. Some wonder if he can.

It could mean a radical revamp of a now ineffective body. Or it could mean the same old thing.

But even if it's the same old thing, there will always be next year's election to look forward to.

Ragin will probably be there. And he'll probably be running for president. He usually does.

And that's someone who sure does know how to have a good time.

Love, Alice.

As Syrian fighting continues

Sadat looks to west for support

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Artillery fired along the Syrian-Israeli front and on strategic Mt. Hermon yesterday while Egyptian President Anwar Sadat sought ties with Eugrope and praised American peace efforts in the Middle East.

Israeli forces claimed full control of disputed Mt. Hermon amid artillery and long-distance tank battles raging for the 42nd day on the Golan Heights front.

Syrian MIG jets penetrated into the October war bulge during the fighting, the Israeli military command admitted, but a spokesman denied Arab claims that the Syrians and Israelis were still struggling for control of the strategic mountaintop.

''We are sitting on it and we are controlling it,'' the command spokesman said.

The Israelis have built a zigzag road to the 9,200-foot summit and television pictures have shown Jewish troops posted in caves and sandbagged dugouts on the snowy summit. Israeli tanks also were perched on the top.

The biblical peak, captured by Israel in the October Mideast war and registered with the United Nations, was abandoned during the bitter cold winter there. It commands a view of the entire Golan battlefield and the Syrian capital of Damascus 25 miles away.

In Cairo, President Anwar Sadat announced that Egypt and West Germany had agreed to form a ministerial commission to promote political, economic and cultural cooperation and added, ''European-Arab collaboration is essential at the present time.''

Sadat took the occasion to praise the efforts of U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to bring peace to the Middle East. He said the U.S. government had shown great understanding and urged European governments also to seek Mideast peace, adding:

''We want peace. We want to eliminate all sources of war.''

In an interview with the New York Times, Sadat said the Egyptian government's decision, announced last Thursday, to stop depending solely on the Soviet Union for weapons was made because Moscow sought to use this dependence to influence Egyptian policy.

He said he would welcome arms talks with the United States, but officials in Washington indicated that while economic aid would start soon, there were no plans to supply arms.

Kennedy and Brezhnev express optimism on US-USSR detente

MOSCOW [AP] — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy and Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev expressed optimism yesterday that ''substantial progress'' can be made to curb the arms race and maintain peace between the superpowers.

During a four-hour meeting, Brezhnev said he would like to visit the United States again - ''on business''.

In a brief statement, the Massachusetts Democrat said he and Brezhnev expressed ''the deep commitment of their two countries to maintaining peace between them, bringing the arms race firmly under control, and to working out productive relations in a host of other areas.''

Kennedy, on a one-week visit to Russia, said he and Brezhnev were optimistic ''substantial progress toward these goals could be achieved.''

Before the meeting, newsmen asked Brezhnev about the status of Soviet-American detente. ''Matters go well, They're all aimed at peace. Why shouldn't we be satisfied.'' he replied.

Kennedy said the talks in Brezhnev's study touched on several subjects, including the Middle East, economic cooperation, trade and emigration.

It was understood that the optimism expressed in the statement did not refer to the sensitive question of Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union - an issue tied to U.S.-Soviet trade.

Liberal wins easily in Colombia election

Though he had been the favorite in opinion polls, his lead of 1,790,000 votes to 1,088,000 for Conservative candidate Alvaro Gomez Hurtado, came as a surprise to practically everyone. Returns were still coming in yesterday from outlying districts. The final result of Sunday's election will be Colombia's joint rule again by both parties for four more years.

To ensure both parties gradual and peaceful return to individual programs, the constitution ordered equal representation for them in the coming four-year presidential term regardless of the winner in the election.

Before a champagne celebration Sunday night with his campaign staff, Lopez, a 60-year-old lawyer and former foreign minister, said he was ''ready for carrying on the mandate of the Colombian people.''

Premier named to replace Meir

TEL AVIV [AP] — Israel's ruling Labor party yesterday named Yitzhak Rabin, former chief of staff and ambassador to Washington, to replace Premier Golda Meir and try to form a new government, party officials announced.

Rabin, a veteran of war and diplomacy who entered politics only last year, defeated Information Minister Shimon Peres for the nomination by a party vote of 298 to 254, officials said.

''The old generation is passing the flag to a new generation,'' declared Finance Minister Pinhas Sapir, strong man of the Labor party and a veteran colleague of Mrs. Meir, who announced her resignation 12 days ago after weeks of government crisis.

The nomination still left Rabin far short of forming a new coalition government from Israel's divided and bickering political parties.

He has a little over six weeks to succeed, and then surrender to another candidate or leave Mrs. Meir as caretaker premier until new elections could be set.

Would have cleared Watergate, says Ford

NEW YORK [AP] — Vice President Gerald R. Ford said yesterday he would have pushed the Watergate investigation harder if he had been in the White House when the scandals first broke.

In a question-and-answer session at the annual meeting of The Associated Press, Ford also called on President Nixon to ''do anything reasonable'' to clear up the Watergate controversy, including maximum cooperation with the House Judiciary Committee's impeachment probe.

Ford said he hoped Nixon would, within the next 72 hours, turn over the revelant material asked by the committee from the White House.

A subpoena issued by the committee seeking tapes and documents from the White House falls due Thursday morning.

In response to a question about what he would have done if he had been president at the time Watergate broke, Ford said Nixon obviously was not kept properly informed by his suboridnates and that he-Ford-would have demanded better information.

''Whether there should have been a more vigorous prosecution of all the details, that's a matter of judgment,'' Ford said of the White House investigation. ''In my judgment, I would have given a sort of nudge to my employes as hard as I possibly could.

''Some of the people who should have known obviously did not give him the whole story.''

Ford said neither he nor Nixon knew anything about the burglary and bugging of Democratic party headquarters in Washington's Watergate complex during the 1972 presidential election campaign but had idscussed the ramifications of the case frequently.

''I have indicated to him on a number of occasions that I thought he should do anything reasonable in order to clear up the problems that have developed subsequent to Watergate itself,'' Ford said.

''I have consistently said the sooner any and all relevant evidence was made available, the better the Congress could consider, and the American people evaluate, whether or not he was involved prior to, at the time of, or subsequent'' to the Watergate break-in, Ford said.

''I hope and trust that some time in the next 48 or 72 hours, the White House will cooperate to the maximum in making available to the House Committee on the Judiciary the relevant material that the committee has requested,'' Ford said.

The committee's subpeona seeks tapes and documents covering 42 White House consverations in connection with its Watergate impeachment probe. The White House has indicated it will turn over what it considers ''relevant.''

VA administrator Johnson plans to resign in June

Sources said Johnson planned to make the announcement next week that he is leaving the administration after five years as head of the agency which provides benefits to 29 million veterans.

Johnson's operation of the massive agency has come under sharp criticism from some members of Congress, but administration sources rejected suggestions he was being fired as VA administrator.

One well-placed source said Johnson had planned for more than a year to return to private life this June.

There was no immediate comment from either White House or VA spokesmen on the plans of the former Iowa businessman who once was national commander of the American Legion.

Johnson conferred yesterday afternoon with White House staff chief Alexander M. Haig, who earlier in the afternoon had met with a delegation of congressmen on problems in the VA.

According to Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., Haig assured the congressional delegation that ''an announcement regarding the future of the Veterans Administration which will be of enormous importance'' would be made within the next 10 days to two weeks.

Cranston, who has called for President Nixon to fire Johnson, would not elaborate on the nature of the pending announcement.

26 story wall falls

NEW YORK [AP] — A rumbling early morning explosion brought down a wall of a 26-story commercial building yesterday and shook hundreds of residents out of their sleep on Manhattan's East Side, not far from the United Nations.

At least 93 persons were injured in the blast and fire or by shattered glass.

The diplomatic missions of Nepal, Indonesia, Burundi and Laos, located in and around the wrecked building were severely rocked.

The Fire Department believed the blast came from an accumulation of gas leaking in the brick-and-steel structure at 312 E. 46th St. The building is situated midway between First and Second avenues and faces on both 46th and 45th streets.

Ten persons were hurt seriously enough to require hospitalization and three of them were listed as critical. Another 65 persons received treatment, mostly for lesser cuts, bruises and smoke inhalation. Eleven policeman hurt in rescue and search operations also needed treatment.

Many of the injured were residents of the Envoy Towers, a luxury high-rise apartment building right alongside the commercial structure.

The Envov Towers was evacuated and among its dazed occupants a newsman counted three dozen persons, children included, bleeding from head and body cuts sustained when windows blew in.

The blast also buckled a number of doors and some residents had to break their way out.

Flint killers caught

FLINT, MICH. [AP] — A two-state trail of killings and terror ended yesterday in a residential neighborhood of Flint when two escapees from a state prison farm surrendered meekly to police.

The two men, identified by police as Joseph A. Molonare, 29, and Gordon L. Stockenauer, 26, were wanted in connection with three killings — two in Wisconsin on Sunday and one in Michigan early yesterday. Authorities said they were captured near the home of Stockenauer's girl friend without a shot being fired.

Molonare and Stockenauer were among four men who escaped Saturday from the prison at Marquette in Michigan's Upper Peninsula where they had been working in a minimum security area. Both were serving sentences for felonious assault.

Police said Molonare and Stockenauer abducted Charlene Beaudin, 33, the mother of five children, after she left work Saturday night at a Marquette restaurant. Police said the fugitives also abducted William Klingenmaier, 21, or rural Carney, Mich., after Mrs. Beaudin's car was abandoned.

Mitchell trial ends

NEW YORK [AP[— Testimony ended yesterday in the federal criminal conspiracy trial of former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and onetime Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans as the court proceedings entered their 10th week.

Federal Judge Lee P. Gagliardi scheduled closings arguments for today and Wednesday, and indicated the jury of nine men and three women would get the case late Wednesday.

In all, 59 witnesses were called, three of them appearing for both sides.

Among final rebuttal witnesses called by the government were blonde Washington Post reporter Sally Quinn and ousted White House counsel John Dean III.

High oil co. profits predicted

By JOHN FITZHUGH

NEW YORK [AP]-Analysts predict big profit margins-perhaps 50 to 100 per cent above last year-when major oil companies reveal their first-quarter earnings.

The latest profit figures will follow strong gains for the fourth quarter of last year and appear certain to renew debate in Congress over some form of a windfall profits legislation for the oil industry. The giants of the industry will report earnings this week.

Federal energy officials have already said the oil companies' earnings for the three-month period ended March 31 will be ''embarrassingly high'' or ''whoppers.'' Sen. Henry Jackson, D-Wash., has characterized the anticipated profits as ''almost obscene.''

Though a few smaller companies have already declared their latest earnings, the big firms are to report this week. Exxon, Mobil, Texaco and Gulf - the big four - plan to make their announcements either today or tomorrow. Standard Oil of California and Shell Oil will report Thursday.

I'd go along with the predictions that place earnings 50 to 100 per cent above the first quarter of 1973,'' says Robert Hinckley, an analyst who follows the oil industry for W. E. Hutton & Co., a Wall Street firm.

''On balance this should be another fantastic quarter for the oil industry,'' says Alan Habact, a securities analyst with the brokerage house of Bache & Co. ''I'm looking for large earnings gains, particularly from those with strong domestic operations.''

Whereas 1973 was a year when the companies made most of their profit from international operations, other analysts also see the domestic scene as the strongest money-maker in 1974.

This is because of the rise in domestic crude prices, they say. Crude oil which sold for $3.90 a barrel a year ago now costs $5.25 a barrel if it comes from an old well, and up to $10 a barrel if it springs from a new one.

Sawhill defends price rise

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

WASHINGTON [AP] — John C. Sawhill, the new federal energy chief, defended the higher fuel prices that have settled in around the country and indicated yesterday they would pay off in increased supplies.

''Prices higher than in years past and substantial but reasonable profits are seen to be vital to our future well-being,'' he told the Senate Commerce Committee. ''Where price elicits new supply, it serves a useful economic function and benefits consumers with increased supply, which ultimately results in lower prices.''

Sawhill, appointed last week to the nation's top energy post, predicted that the oil industry's financial statements for the first quarter of 1974 would show a continuing rise in profits, which increased dramatically in 1973.

He also predicted, in comments made to reporters after testifying, that the price of gasoline would not rise ''more than a few cents'' per gallon.

''Prices are now in the low 50s,'' he said. ''I wouldn't expect them to go over 60 cents.''

They already have reached that point in some areas of the nation.

Sawhill criticized the proposed Consumer Energy Act which would, among other things, create a federal oil and gas corporation.

''It's been through the genius of our private enterprise system that we've been able to gain control over most of the reserves,'' he said.

Continuing the administration's arguments for eventual deregulation of the price of natural gas at the wellhead, Sawhill said such control ''causes uncertainty and reduces investment in domestic exploration and development.''

Senate proposes to dismantle AEC

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON

WASHINGTON [AP] — A Senate panel is putting final touches on a bill that dismantles the Atomic Energy Commission, promotes energy research and atomic safety and aims to keep nuclear materials out of the hands of terrorists.

Attempting to find long-range answers to the energy crisis, the measure terminates the AEC and divides its activities into two new agencies.

One, the Energy Research and Development Agency would explore new energy technology with the goal of making the United States self-sufficient in energy within 10 years.

The other, the Nuclear Safety and Licensing Commission, would regulate reastor and nuclear safety in the nuclear power industry.

Although the measure is a companion to a bill already passed by the House, a Senate Government Operations Committee unit made substantial additions.

One change, the creation of a Bureau of Nuclear Materials Security, was written into the bill after testimony from a nuclear physicist that terrorists able to obtain 15 pounds of plutonium could build a crude atomic bomb small enough to carry in a car but capable of killing tens of thousands.

The proposed bureau would oversee all aspects of safeguarding commerical nuclear materials against theft, threats, accidents and sabotage.

The Senate version of the bill, which will be presented to the full committee later this month, also would create an Office of Nuclear Safety Research with its own personnel to confirm the safety of licensed nuclear reactors.

Expenses will soar for air conditioning

The average homeowner in Massachusetts will have to pay about $19 more this summer to air condition one room of his house, according to utility figures.

The increase is for extra fuel charges alone and does not include any rate increases granted to power companies.

The only way to offset the expense is to put up with a hotter house or buy a more efficient air conditioner, consumer spokesmen say.

A medium size air conditioner that's of average efficiency runs about 900 hours during the summer and uses about 1,35 kilowatts of electricity, according to the Electric Council of New England.

In Boston last summer, that would have cost $42 this year, assuming that the fuel adjustment remains the same as it is now, the bill will be $61. This does not include a $13.5 million rate increase granted on Tuesday that Boston Edison said will raise bills slightly.

Electric rates vary across the state because utilities use different proportions of expensive residual oil to generate electricity. For customers who use electric air conditioning, a single kilowatt-hour from Boston Edison cost 3.15 cents last summer and 4.55 cents now.

The size of individual air conditioning bills depends on the size of the unit, how much it's turned on, how efficient it is and how high the temperature is.

A new law gives the state authority next year to require air conditioner makers to specify their products' efficiency on store display models.

However, John Neely, an assistant to the state secretary of consumer affairs, said this may not be required if makers begin to list efficiencies voluntarily this year.

Buying an efficient machine can substantially cut operating costs, Neely said. ''In some cases, it would be possible to save as much as 50 per cent in power consumption.''

However, more efficient air conditioners are also more expensive to buy.

But with higher power costs, it's probably worth the money, Neely said. ''The long-term savings from buying a more expensive unit would more than make up for the extra price.''

Neely said that if dealers go along with the voluntary postings, the ratings should begin appearing on air conditioners in stores about June 1.

Medical school proposed at UMaine

PORTLAND, Maine [AP] — It will be relatively cheap, may not require any new walls and attract an important industry to the state. It will deliver basic health care to a quarter-million residents of Maine who are now neglected.

That is the assessment of a proposed medical school for Maine by the doctor who is attempting to develop the network of medical facilities, classrooms and doctors.

Dr. Robert Coon believes the presence of a medical school will greatly increase the quality of health care in the state by offering continuing education for all Maine's physicians.

Coon, assistant chancellor for Health Science Education at the state university, has been working on a detailed fact finding mission for several months. He will present the medical school proposal to the trustees and the state legislature later this year.

His findings so far are these:

—The medical school will require little or no new construction, and will cost an estimated $2 million to $3 million per year. Constructing a comparable facility would cost taxpayers an estimated $200 million.

—The school must concentrate on producing general practitioners, family doctors, which the state desperately needs.

—Doctors now practicing in the state say the school would allow them to continue their medical education, thereby improving the quality of health care. This also would make the state more attractive for doctors considering settling here.

—The school must meet the needs of Maine's isolated interior residents. Dr. Coon believes that the 750,000 Maine residents who live within the coastal corridor have adequate medical care.

—If trends in other states such as Vermont and Minnesota are accurate, a medical school complex would draw industry already attracted by the state's natural beauty.

Coon, 53, is a pathologist who came to Maine specifically to study organizing a medical school. A native of South Dakota, he was on the faculty of the University of Vermont Medical School for 18 years.

He said the school he envisions for Maine should meet the approval of both the legislature and university trustees.

Coons says the school would accept 16-24 students for the first class in the fall of 1975 and expand to 45-65 students at full enrollment. Ninty per cent of the students will be Maine natives.

During the first five years of the program, students will be farmed out to the Vermont or Tufts medical schools for their basic training. Later, that training will be offered at the UMaine campuses in Orono and Portland-Gorham, which are upgrading their science curricula.

The third year of studies will e a clerkship at the Maine Medical Center which now trains nearly 140 medical students and young doctors.

Harrington uncertain

BOSTON [AP] — The president of the Massachusetts Senate said yesterday he is ''no longer sure'' of his position on the state's 1965 Racial Imbalance Law.

Senate President Kevin B. Harrington, D-Salem, has previously supported the statute which prohibits public schools from having an enrollment which is more than 50 per cent non-white.

In an interview, Harrington said, ''I'm no longer sure of my position.''

He said his waivering opinion is based on the fact that the school balancing plan scheduled to take effect in Boston this fall would leave thousands of black students in racially imbalanced schools.

Harrington also said he believes that the federal government soon will move in and mandate a metropolitan plan for balancing Boston schools.

''I believe the intelligent position should be supportive of federal intervention,'' Harrington said.

The Senate, meanwhile, upheld Gov. Francis W. Sargent's veto of a bill providing for a referendum in Boston on the school busing issue.

The bill, which dealt specifically with pupil reassignments, had been declared unconstitutional by the state Supreme Court.

The referendum, as proposed under the bill, would have been binding on school officials.

Maine train to open

OLD ORCHARD BEACH, Maine [AP] — Passenger rail service between Boston and Portland may be resumed in June. But would be limited to weekends at first.

''It looks very good,'' said William J. Hennessey of West Bath, president of the Midcoast Route 1 Association. ''We're definitely going ahead with Saturday, June 15.''

Hennessey told Chamber of Commerce officials here Sunday the plan calls for a train carrying 350 passengers to leave Boston at 9 a.m. and arrive in Portland at 12:45 p.m. Buses would then carry the visitors both north and south.

The $50 fare would cover the train trip, meals and lodging. Special activities also would be arranged, such as clambakes and historic tours, Hennessey said.

'76 money coming

BOSTON [AP] — Fifteen communities throughout the state will receive a total of $50,000, in small matching grants, according to the Massachusetts Bicentennial Commission.

The grants - which exclude 127 other communities - will be used for bicentennial projects and will not exceed $7,000, officials said. The grants must also be matched by local funds.

Yesterday's announcement came as the Bicentennial Commission prepared to seek $2.5 million from the legislature, which last year cut the appropriation severely.

Some 69 applications were disqualified on technical grounds. Forty-four more were rejected in the initial screening and fewer than half of them were funded.

The award to West Falmouth, for instance, was for $182.94 for an oral history of the villlage.

''We just sat down and approved projects until we used up the $50,000, said Susan Schruth, program development director.

The 15 communities are Boston, Brewster, Brockton, Cambridge, Egremont, Erving, Fall River, Hudson, Leicester, North Andover and Lawrence, North Reading, Pembroke, Sheffield, Wareham and West Falmouth.

Logan service up

BOSTON [AP] — A two-week old strike by Canadian airport firefighters has contributed to a record number of passengers passing through Logan International Airport, officials said.

More than 27,000 persons arrived at Logan over the weekend, 7,000 of them Canada-bound persons who had to switch to buses, according to the Massachusetts Port Authority.

Gun control shot down

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Senate overwhelmingly turned thumbs down yesterday on legislation outlawing handguns.

On a 33-4 vote, the Senate refused to overturn an unfavorable committee report on a bill banning the weapons.

A motion to reconsider the action was scheduled for debate today.

Dance must be UMass major

To The Editor:

I would like to restate Ms. Signorella's recent call for a Dance Department on the UMass campus in her excellent editorial. While she and several other dancers are BDIC majors, I have remained in the school of Physical Education in order to be certified as a teacher in dance.

While the school of PE should not be belittled, we the dancers feel that an independent department could better serve all concerned: the faculty, the students, and the community.

Having more time and freedom to choose a more relevant, arts-oriented curriculum, dance students would be taking a step toward gaining recognition for themselves as artists in dance.

With an independent department, we would also be able to serve the community through better classes for non-majors and through higher quality performances in our semi-annual home concerts and as UMass representatives on our concert tours. And a high quality performance means a happier audience means better performance and so the circle goes.

The time has come for this campus to recognize dance as a Fine Art.

Amnesty not new in U.S.

To The Editor:

In response to Thursday's editorial by Collegian News Editor Mike Kneeland; I'm one college student who is ''fashionably'' in favor of granting unconditional amnesty to Vietnam War draft dodgers. Mr. Kneeland, in his argument against amnesty cites the danger of precedence. He argues that if amnesty was granted to Vietnam War draft dodgers, then we would not be able to count on ''our'' armed forced in future situations, since the decision to desert would become an easy decision to make, given the expectation of future amnesty.

First of all, Mr. Kneeland, why not check your history books? If you had done any research at all, you would have seen that there is already a precedence for amnesty. After the Civil War, which was the bloodiest war this nation ever fought, President Lincoln granted a general amnesty to deserters and rebels. Amnesty was also granted to draft dodgers after America's controversial involvement in World War I. In neither case did the granting of amnesty weaken the effectiveness of America's armed forces.

If unconditional amnesty is not granted, then a far worse precedent will be set. The ''leaders'' of this country may again compel American men to give their lives in an illegal and immoral war. The American people did not ask for our involvement in Vietnam. Our representatives in Congress did not even declare the war, which, under the Constitution, they must do.

If we must prosecute the people who were made criminals by the war, let's prosecute the real criminals: the Johnsons, McNamaras, Lairds, and Nixons. But even that would be little compensation for the needless and senseless death and destruction inflicted upon the people of Vietnam by Americans and upon the people of America by our ''leaders''.

If the men who fled the draft because of the Vietnam War were faced with a World War II type of situation, as that was the only war in the past hundred years which America became involved in for ''just'' ends, then I think that most of them would have chosen to serve. But why condemn someone for refusing to risk his life for a repressive totalitarian regime such as that of South Vietnam?

MassPIRG alive, diverse

To The Editor:

An article appearing in last Friday's Collegian caused some unfortunate confusion which I hope can be cleared up by this letter. I am referring specifically to the article headlined, ''Nader-Inspired Group Dying of Apathy'' which reported some of the organizing problems of the Connecticut Public Interest Research Group. Since Friday, some students have approached me to express their regret over Mass PIRG's troubles. Obviously they, and I'm afraid others, were confused by the story.

I want to assure all UMass students that the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group [Mass PIRG], far from withering in apathy, is alive, active and growing. Last year, nearly 30,000 students on 13 Massachusetts campuses contributed $4 each to support Mass PIRG's activities. [Over 65 per cent of the UMass student body contributed through the fee mechanism included on the semester bill.] Successful organizing efforts this spring should add another four to six schools. Presently, the Mass PIRG Board of Directors [composed entirely of students] employs a full-time staff of eight, including two lawyers and an environmental scientist. Working long hours for low salaries, these dedicated young professionals, with the volunteer help of numerous students and faculty, have built the PIRG into a force to be reckoned with in the various legal, legislative and governmental forums of the state.

Recent projects have ranged from significant lobbying efforts for a moritorium on nuclear power plant construction in Massachusetts [Ralph Nader's speaking tour was part of this effort] to the establishment of a student run, Small Claims Court Advisory Service to a successful lawsuit blocking construction of a four lane interstate highway through the Berkshires.

This year, approximately 75 students from this campus alone involved themselves in PIRG — citizen action projects. They found that, through the development of certain skills and dogged determination, the system's weak points can be found and students and citizens can make a significant difference. Student apathy and cynicism have stalled some PIRG's — but not in Massachusetts.

For more information on Mass PIRG, call 256-6434.

Ji's words misunderstood

To The Editor:

Recently Mahatma Trivenanand, a close disciple of Guru Maharaj Ji spoke here. The articles about his talk that appeared in the Collegian displayed a gross lack of understanding of the message he was attempting to convey.

Guru Maharaj Ji's Knowledge, the subject of his discourse, is not a philosophy or doctrine. Guru Maharaj Ji has spoken many beautiful words and he certainly encourages peace on earth and loving your neighbor, but his words are not the Knowledge. Maharaj Ji's Knowledge is an intuitive experience of that peace, that ultimate energy within. When one receives the Knowledge, one hears no intellectualizations about peace and God — one learns how to directly meditate, to concretely experience God first hand.

It is unfortunate this message — that the way to directly tune into one's own love-energy is being offered — has been missed. Many people talk of love and write about love but mere readings or talks, inspiring though they may be, can't give you the full experience of God's love. It is his ability to impart direct Knowledge of the loving part of our nature that makes Maharaj Ji so special. I encourage everyone to open themselves to this experience, truly beyond words, which is available freely to all.

The commercial ripoff

''I think I'll keep her'' beams the man in a mononic monotone, staring at his plastic wife; the subservent mate who has proven herself to be a competent ''housewife''. If nothing else the women's liberation movement has heightened our sensitivity concerning the abuse of individuals and their sense of dignity, by an abstract media machine more concerned with selling products than helping people live productive lives.

The examples of exploitation by the Ad industry, have been as numerous as they have been extreme. The way that they portray Blacks on T.V. you'd think that ''success'' to Afro-Americans was moving into suburbia, and getting your clothes ''whiter'' than your neighbor. The media machine has only recently made a ''major'' ideological decision and let Blacks be portrayed on the T.V. with ''natural'' hair styles. Rather than show the utilitarian aspects of their products; companies spend millions building these kind of delusions. The woman who watches herself protrayed as plastic peroxide item has every right to become enraged. The Black American who sees himself or herself portrayed as the ''Black equivalant'' to White Middle Class imagery is totally justified to feel gutted.

Television commercials have always specialized in bad taste. While there are obvious exceptions to this statement; (commercials that contain natural wit, and are interesting to watch,) for the most part T.V. commercials leave a very bad taste in my mind.

There has been a significant switch in ''tactics'' concerning advertising. I refer to this as the ''common man neurotic''; the man that we are supposed to ''relate to'' because he is just another ''ordinary Joe''. You've seen him. He's the State Farm Agent who stumbles over the lines that he is reading as he looks at the camera. His mid-western drawl seems confident but not cocky. No he's not a hot shot. You can tell by the commercial that he is ''level headed''. If you were driving through Topeka, Kansas and your car got smashed by some farmer, why he'd be there. That's right..you can be sure he'd be there. The commercial lets you know that he is a State Farm Agent; a level headed ''family man'' (''If ah bay a noo automobeel ol a washin' ma-sheen'' he says, ''and ah don't get good servisss, ah don't laik doin' business with the seller, no matta how good tha product'', he concludes).

So you watch this ''State Farm Agent'' tell you how much he cares about you. He's realiable; he'll be there. There are several such ''Agents'' (or are they actors?) who alternate on this new ''State Farm Insurance'' Ad campaign. All seem to blend into the image of middle class, mid-west America. The guy who searches through the paper for a ''good family movie''. Hair trimmed, face bland; yet they are not ''happy''. They have settled into their ''sense of secure mediocrity''; you can be sure that they won't do anything unrealiable to risk it.

There are other ''beauties'' that come to mind, drifting out of the imaginations of bored (or smashed) Advertising Executives. There is the new V.W. ad were the somewhat squeemish young man explains to you how ''insecure'' he feels. But that now that he has bought his Volkswagen with a ''twelve month'' and so many miles guarantee, he feels like he has a security blanket worth of protection. As he puts the security blanket over his back, it always struck me that he would look a bit more appropriate sucking his thumb.

The commercials roll on. The new Alka Seltzer routine. Glib lighting. Ordinary people. Dark background. Again mediocrity and candor are the theme. ''Look'', a somewhat decaying oldish woman begins ''I don't take Alka Seltzer for everything'', she says with a knowing look (the same look that woman on park benches seem to give each other when reassuring themselves about what they never did when they were younger), ''But when I feel sick, I take Alka Seltzer, if that doesn't work, I go see a Doctor, because I know that I have done everything possible to myself already.''

There are more and more commercials. The themes are fairly consistent, and are meant to trap the viewers, who for the most part escape their daily realities by watching the illusions of the tube. For those who make Television a ''passion'' and a reality in itself, there must be a saturation point where your mind either totally rebels against this sort of thing, or totally succumbs to it.

As an infrequent viewer, I am often saddened by these images of reality. I wonder, are they trying to portray an American reality, or create one. Are there thirteen year old girls who feel that without Helena Rubenstein and ''Nair'' they will be undesirable? Are there young men who feel that without a new ''Ford'' they won't ''make it''? Are there people who feel inferior because they don't live up to the image of what America is, or should be?

I sadly conclude with an affirmative, and feel somewhat out of place in a country that seems to create ads with the misconception that we all think and feel like Dick and Pat. And whenever I hear someone singing the ''Schaefer jingle'' or the ''Doublemint song'', I am reminded that subliminal seduction is an Art form in the hands of the selfish; and that it can sell anything from a sanitary napkin, to a President.

The four letter word

obscenity-[ob-sen'-i-ti] - The quality of being offensive to taste; foul; loathsome; disgusting.

And what are you going to do this summer?

Of all the enjoyable pleasures that the warm weather may bring, there lurks in my mind an obscenity. Talked about by the middle class, discussed by graduating college students, and put way in the back of the minds of ultra-rich there exists but one four letter word which may be too gruesome to handle. And that four letter word is work.

Blecch.

Of all things that I could possibly spend my time with, I will have to dedicate myself to that Protestant ethic which will dictate my waking and playing hours.

Blecch.

I came to college in the hopes of finding some sort of interesting employment if and when I decided to graduate. But I have to work so that I can continue to pay for my education at some nit-picky job that keeps me too busy to study. That's obscene.

I love to travel. I could become a flight attendant for the airlines so that I could see the world. But when you stop over in Rome for 48 hours, well, that's obscene.

I'd love to be able to stay in the Pioneer Valley for a while. But in order for me to pay my rent, I'd have to get a job. And the availability of at least interesting jobs are few and far between. Even applying for a job pumping gas for $1.85 an hour is impossible to do in a college town. Some gas stations have waiting lists of over one hundred names. Now that's obscene.

Of the few friends that are happy in their employment, very few are even qualified for the job in the first place. They had a friend who knew the boss or something like that. Which all goes to prove that it's never what you know, but who you know. That's why there are PhD's working as janitors. That's really obscene.

Work is a four letter word because it implies prostitution. Getting money for something that you really don't want to do, but have to, because it pays, is prostitution, work. Work is an obscenity because it wastes the youth that you will experience only once in your life. Why work your ass off so that you can retire at 65 so that you can do nothing? You're doing nothing now. But you have to work because you need the money now. And that's horribly obscene.

But given the choice between poverty and a full stomach, especially during the approaching warm weather, I'd rather be working on getting a tan.

QuasiRickWiz

By DEAN TUCKER

Not since Quasimodo marched with the parade of fools in the ''Hunchback of Notre Dame'' has the world been treated to a scenario like the SGA Presidential elections last night.

And the odd deal is that Quasimodo won the battle just as if he had rescued poor and defenseless Esmeralda from the gallows.

We are the victims, he is the saviour.

Ha, ha, ha.

It is a joke that would jar Chaplin. From the beginning when outgoing Apostola did an incoming astride a bicycle in a not bad imitation of Grouch Marx portraying professor Wagstaff in ''Horse Feathers''; to the end when Quasimodo Savini swung from bureaucratic oblivion on a string of ridiculous cliches with help from the human cliche Pat McGrath, the entire affair took on DeMille as its spiritual big brother.

The SGA is Hollywood. It has a cast of thousands contributing nothing but their bodies. It is the Wizard of Oz, dragged out once a year for the po' folk to see when they need a laugh, then put in a can and left on a shelf.

Savini, President, I can see him now hiding behind the title as if it were the curtain in the Palace of Emerald City. He is running his bureaucracies: ''pay no attention to the man behind the curtain! The Great and Powerful Oz has spoken.''

But I won't stop paying attention, I'm looking at you behind that curtain, you prick.

You and your silly executive committees, yuk, and you even have the chuztpah to throw a few crumbs to the third-world. If you keep them from starving and quiet you won't have to listen, yuk, they won't scare you with Mau Mau, you'll have them happily fattened with tokenism.

Last year an inept fool reporter talked about ''A Good Fucking High'' and wrote how the noise and carnival of Henry Ragin's platform helped obscure most of the practical concerns of the electorate.'' His is always a good laugh. One more for the records. Mary Keane can add Nick Apostala and Quasimodo Wizard Savini to her list of obits for this year's records. Nick's should be a death of joy.

But before Henry Ragin and good luck QuasiRickWiz there is the beauty of the body politic to consider:

The place was littered with folks. Ragin's corner had the ghost of Phineas T. Barnum over them like a cloud of marijuana smoke. A conservative newspaperman, Matt Tackeff called for his nomination. Confetti, daffodils, people from the press hugging, kissing, laughing ... cheering for the once a year show that makes the press feel its senate coverage for the year is worth the waste of our talents.

Ah yes! my citizenry, (said the man with the nasal voice and bright red nose) if I had my choice between governments and newspapers I would surely choose the latter.

But if I had my choice between an audience with Rick Savini and Oliver Hardy I would surely take the former. New dimensions to pomposity ... Dandy Dana tries to follow Henry Ragin, yuk, coming from against the wall (where pols must always be) in the back away from the group. An entourage of political groupies, 'Mazin Molly among them, are surrounding Savini, sunburned and in need of a bagful of valliums to calm his nerves. QuasiRickWiz speaks: Funds cut, Executive meetings BDIC to fall, Southwest a slum (what are you gonna do Quasi, turn it into a Filenes?) UYA might get broiled ... we all might if the heat of this governmental sunburst doesn't fade.

Kelly Erwin ... beat a dead horse slowly. Politics in a can, full of additives, bad for the system. She beat a dead horse, remember:

When I was dumb I used to wait
On politician and give him a plate
And listen to his twaddle when my mind was dry
And scream, scream, scream, the party-line cry!

Clancy ... Clancy's great look at him skate ... he was ''eternally grateful for the opportunity'' ... When I was the last kid to get on the Bozo show years ago so was I.

And then the rumblings ... Apostola the clown, Bozo himself. Disgusting ... ''idiots, assholes ... we must move,'' yessir we surely must, away from this feeling that bureaucracies can cure bureaucracies. Just one more fix and I won't feel so bad about missing the one I did this morning. Yuk.

Ragin was the main man. The show was his, he won, Savini gets $37.50 a week and a chance to outdo Apostola next year. Casting is in early April.

The folks who have to listen to this clown while he excuses himself for spending their money must wait a whole year before getting another show. I won't know til next year, when I see QuasiRickWiz outperform Apostola's Oscar winning goodbye whether or not he was really the fool he looked to be while Henry Ragin brought the house down.

Maybe next year when elections come, this writer will remember a trip he took to the infirmary one Friday night while his girlfriend attended a cocktail party at which Savini did his best to duck the crowd. (I'd have gone myself but elitist groups don't mix).

Maybe that shyness will be gone next year. Hope I hope, yuk.

Maybe Savini will show up in better costume than Apostola, maybe I can believe in him after all.

But until then: The only UMass hero is Henry Ragin! Yes!

Political analysis:

Dukakis may be gambling

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

For a governor hopeful who has been reluctant to take a strong stand on major issues so far, Democratic candidate Michael Dukakis made a daring move this past weekend.

He took a swing at the Governor. And if it's proven a cheap shot, he will pay.

Sargent, while at the University Saturday, was beseiged by students' firm questioning on his human services policies.

In what could be described as a rather intense atmosphere where the Governor was grilled for nearly an hour, he chose to acknowledge his administration's failure.

A day later Dukakis chose to use it as political dynamite. He blasted Sargent's record. He called it "outrageous," and may have been sticking his neck out when he referred to the proper means of delivering human services as "no secret."

How astute a move it was politically can only be judged by evaluating what Mike Dukakis can offer as answers.

He went on record as saying his personal record in human services reflects the cosponsoring of all major reform legislation.

Dukakis also added his decision to run for Governor is because "I got sick of passing legislation which was not implemented by various administrations."

All power to him.

Promises are nice but seldom kept in the game of politicking. Dukakis' strong commitment to revamping human services could turn out to be just sheer rhetoric.

And if it is, Dukakis—just as Sargent—should not be allowed to get away with it. Otherwise, he's on solid turf.

Library to house pollution papers

The University Library of the University of Massachusetts in Amherst has been established as the Western Massachusetts repository for documents from a new federal water pollution control program.

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) announced Friday that the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has agreed to send the library all relevant material concerning the National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System (NPDES), which aims to cut pollution in United States waterways by requiring permits and clean-up deadlines for polluters.

Dr. Edward Calabrese, MassPIRG Envirnomental Research Director, said the EPA was responding to complaints by his group and by the Connecticut River Ecology Action Corporation (CREAC) that western Mass. citizens could not participate effectively in the program due to lack of essential information. The 1972 amendments to the federal Water Pollution Control Act, which authorized the permit system, require that pollutant discharge applications be subject to public review.

Permits issued under the NPDES program regulate the content and amount of effluent which may be introduced into public waterways and commit the permit holder to reduce pollutant discharge in specified steps to meet a goal of "no pollution" by 1985.

Calabrese said that Mass PIRG's Clean Water Action Project was organized last year to encourage meaningful citizen participation in the national water clean-up effort.

The repository, under the supervision of documents librarian William R. Thompson, is the Government Documents Collection on the 21st floor of the University Library. Hours are: Mon.-Thurs. 8:30 a.m.-5:00 p.m.; Fri. 9:30 a.m.-5:00 p.m.; Sat. 1-5 p.m.; Sun. 6-10 p.m.

Student ruled 'out' on pot charge

NORTH ADAMS [AP] — The Board of Trustees of State Colleges has upheld the decision of North Adams State College officials to remove a student who faces marijuana charges.

The board this week refused to overturn a February ruling dismissing Edward J. Lima of Gloucester, who had appealed the dismissal to the trustees last week.

Lima was dismissed after a quantity of marijuana was allegedly found in his dormitory room Feb. 26. He faces court charges of possession of marijuana and possession of marijuana with intent to distribute.

Lima had contended the dismissal should be voided because he was denied the right to counsel during the college's administrative proceedings in the case.

On Friday night the university community witnessed the inspirational and highly musical performance of "Lady Day" A Musical Tragedy. Lady Day written by Aishah Rahman with Archie Shepp as musical composer, emerged from the life of the late great singer Billie Holiday. The presentation brought together several talented vocalists along with the Voices of New Africa for a date long awaited.

Under the directorship of brother Horace Boyer the group harmonized incredibly well on many well known favorites such as "God Bless the Child" and "Rest Enough".

Lady Day sensitively interpreted the noteworthy achievments of Billie Holiday. Yet while the musical rendition offered a varied maneuver of rythmic exercises, it did so without smothering in sentimentality. Lady Day portrays a meaningful perspective of black lifestyle. Unlike the current theatrical performance of the story of Billie Holiday, "Lady Sings the Blues", it can be clearly regarded as a cause advanced exclusively by black people in the interest of the black community. The dynamics of the struggle of black people in America reveal that we Blacks have never gotten anything important for ourselves unless White people somehow thought it was something they needed. Lady Day is obviously a progressive change from an old institutional trend which is both vigorous and fascinating.

Lady Day: A Musical Tragedy was a sensational success at its first performance on Broadway in 1972. It captured many positive reviews and was recognized as an amazingly symbolic drama. The New York performance of Lady Day was directed by Paul Carter Harrison, as was the presentation on Friday evening. Paul Carter Harrison is a name placed among respected company for some time. His rich creative imagination and profound understanding of the black experience account for many fine productions which have proven to be a vital force in relevant black theatre. Perhaps one of the things which made Lady Day so unique was the fact that Billie Holiday was portrayed by five black women. Not only did this method of portrayal prove to effectively deal with each phase of the life of lady day, it characterized a vital link in the personality of all black women.

Aishah Rahman, author of Lady Day: A Musical Tragedy is currently functioning in the capacity of Coordinator of New Africa House. She is also author of a number of plays and short stories. We are fortunate to have the talent of such an ingenious playwright as sister Rahman serving our community. However, I am certain to speak for the masses when I say that in reviewing such an enthralling and spectacular event such as Lady Day we must equally pay tribute to each fine segment of talent. In our endeavor to create a society in which all things are shared, I can only say to all who participated in the making of Lady Day a second success; your greatness has not only done much to transcent many prejudices of our day, but has offered relevant food for thought.

"Lady Day" is the story of Billie Holiday, written by Aishah Rahman with musical composer Archie Sheep.

Review

"Mojo" portrays complex relationship

The one act play "Mojo", written by Alice Childrens and directed by the upcoming qualitative director, Mungu Abudu, a graduate student in the Theatre Dept., completed its final performance on Sat. April 20.

The studio theatre in Old South College was well attended by a Pan-African audience.

The story was a tale of the complex relationship between a Black man and woman. The play explored in a dramatically exciting manner the many obstacles, economic and phychological that the society places upon Black people and Black relationships.

The triumph is such a love, that overcomes poverty, white women a child that is unknown to its father and even at the very end the possibility of death, is the triumph of life, love and Black people. The set was outstandingly executed and the play was directed with a concise, sharp tempo, leading to the climax and then mellowing out.

The audience was treated with some very superb acting by Pat Grundy, who portrayed a middle aged Black Woman and Ralph Hawkins portraying her ex-husband.

DVP lecture series

Poet-journalist Robert Cohen will speak on "A Setback Turned Into Victory - Development In Cuba Since 1970," tonight at 8 p.m. in Herter 231. The program is a presentation of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Cohen, 29, origainally from New York who now lives in Cuba, is the author of Rebelion en Estados Unidos and has published his poems and articles on liberation and revolution in a number of magazines including the New Yorker and Poetry.

"The impact of the Vietnam war, the Black struggle in the United States and finally naked oppression in Latin America led toward a more radical view of the world and the realization that the only solution to these problems is socialist revolution," says Cohen.

Cohen was forced to leave Mexico in 1968 because the views of his magazine, The Plumed Horn, differed from those of the Mexican government.

He and his family have lived in Cuba since 1969.

You're serious about photography.
So is the Canon F-1.

To you, photography is more than a hobby. You may never want to become a professional. Yet, your photography is as important a means of self-expression to you as your speech. You demand the same excellence in your photographic equipment as you do of your photographic skills.

The Canon F-1 is the camera that can fulfill any photographic task to which you put it. It can stand up to your ability in any situation.

Naturally, a great camera like the F-1 won't ensure great results. That's up to you. Yet—it's nice to know that your camera can grow with you as a photographer.

Part of the reason for this is the F-1 system. Since it was designed in totality, it offers total performance. There is nothing "added on" in the F-1 system. Everything works as it was designed to, and integrates superbly with everything else. You'll spend less time worrying about operating the camera than in shooting. And that's what creative photography is really all about.

Controls fall into place under each finger. It's no accident. Professionals who depend on a camera for their livelihood have a deep regard for the F-1's handling. It's amazing how much a comfortable camera can improve your work.

Sharing these lenses and many of these accessories are the new Electronic Canon EF, with fully automatic exposure control, the FTb, now improved with all exposure information visible in the finder, and the TLb, great for a second camera body or for getting started in Canon photography. Canon. For serious applications. For serious photographers.

Isn't it time you got serious?

Dear Aggie...

Dear Aggie,

I have a problem which has been building up for a long time, and now I can't do anything but think and worry about it all the time. My girlfriend and I have a good relationship but lately she keeps saying that she would love to wear her socks to bed. I may be old-fashioned, but I just think it's wrong and that two people who respect each other don't need that sort of thing.

What should I do? What if she insists?

Anxious

Dear Anxious,

Listen, if she wants to wear her socks to bed, then let her. The weather's getting warmer and if she wants to wear socks to bed in the spring, then she must have cold feet. And if her problem is cold feet, then I'm sure if you wear your jock strap to bed, her problem will be solved.

I suppose that's kind of extremist, so before you do anything like that, ask her nicely if she can do without the socks. If she can't then try the above.

A NOTE: I'm sorry, Shu. I didn't have any choice.

Aggie

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The most romantic signs are Aries, Leo and Sagittarius. Leo often is referred to as the "grand lover of the zodiac." The intellectual signs are Gemini, Libra and Aquarius. However, Aquarius is on the borderline—friendships often develop into meaningful, serious relationships. Gregarious Aquarius can be counted on to do what is unexpected. Where there is Aquarius, there is excitment. Where there is Leo, there probably will also be wine and song—and members of the opposite sex. Sagittarians are more likely to write books about love and romance rather than to be direct participants.

- - - - -

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Check apparent minor points. You could make discovery which proves profitable. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio persons may be involved. Money is spotlighted, along with special collections and a program of deferred payments.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You are able to get what you need. You may not know it, but you are on right track. Gemini, Virgo persons figure prominently. Your judgment, intuition now are on target. Fresh viewpoint provides stimulus for initiating important project.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Family member confides secret. Keep confidences; don't cast first stone. What is behind the scenes may be more important than what's up front. Know it and act accordingly. Visit one who is temporarily confined to home, hospital.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent is on examination of your own desires, motives and goals. You may be expecting too much from wrong sources. Be more selective. See situations, individuals as they really are, not merely as you wish they might be. Keep guard up on romantic clinches.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Business, practical issues, career, income are featured. Capricorn, Cancer persons are in picture. Prepare and present—don't wait to be told what to do. One in position of authority is ready to flash green light once you show the way.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What you do now has long-range effect. Know it and don't play games—the stakes are for keeps. Catch up on messages, calls. Write, develop ideas into viable concepts. Aries, Libra persons are drawn to your sphere of activity.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Love and money could meet—and you might benefit. There are a lot of ifs and buts—don't expect something for nothing. Overall, you find where you stand with one who means much to you. You also deal with bright, dynamic, creative people. Take your vitamins!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Take it easy—don't rush, push or try to force your way. Defer to wishes of partner, mate. Improve public image. Strive for a more secure position. Check legal documents. Aquarian may be sidetracked in attempting to open doors for you.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Highlight versatility. Emotional wound is on the way to healing. Know it and start living in the sense that you are vital, alert and creative. Give a boost to your self-esteem. One who does care will appreciate token of your affection.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be willing to take some things apart in order to rebuild them on more solid structure. Message will become increasingly clear. Young persons figure in picture. Changes occur and they are beneficial. Member of opposite sex confesses confusion.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Communications in the household may leave something to be desired. One who seems arbitrary, stubborn and is sulking may actually be crying out for affection. Know it and be mature enough to respond in constructive manner. Delay is no reason for panic.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Relatives figure in more important ways than is usual. Key is to be diplomatic without being weak. Keep grip on situation at hand. Taurus, Libra persons play key roles. Be flexible. Fixed position now would not be practical.

Golfers prep for YanCons in tri-match

By MDC STAFF

The undefeated UMass golfers put their three match winning streak on the line when the face AIC and UConn in a tri-match this afternoon at 1:00 in Springfield.

Coach Fan Gaudette will be experimenting with his lineup, trying to find the best combinations for the Yankee Conference Championships this coming Friday at Stowe Acres C.C., Stowe, Mass.

In last Thursday's tri-match with BC and Holy Cross, a transfer student playing in his first match was team medalist for the second match in a row. In the Minutemen's first match of the year at Yale it was Howard Terban with a 76. Against BC and Holy Cross, Ken Stawcz made an impressive debut with a 79.

Stawcz fought back from a disastrous start to post his 79. He was 10 over par after 10 holes, then found a groove and played the final 8 holes in 3 under par.

This is the golfers' busiest week of the season. On Wednesday they travel to Worcester for a tri-match with Amherst and WPI. Thursday will find them back on the road again.

"We're going to go down to Stowe on Thursday to get in some practice," said Coach Gaudette. "If we didn't we would have to leave about 6:00 Friday morning."

Gorillas still 9th in national ranks

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. [AP] — Maryland easily held on to first place but Washington & Lee moved up to challenge Johns Hopkins' hold on the No. 2 spot in the latest major college lacrosse rankings announced today.

For yet another week, Maryland's NCAA champions, 5-0, claimed every first-place vote from coaches polled by the U.S. Intercollegiate Lacrosse Association, amassing a perfect 200 points.

Johns Hopkins, 6-1 held on to second with 188 points in the balloting, but Washington & Lee, now 8-0, began threatening the Blue Jays with 181 points.

The Generals, ranked No. 4 last week, advanced to No. 3 on the strength of a 13-11 triumph over Virginia, which dropped to fifth place in the rankings.

Cornell, 6-1, displaced the Cavaliers in fourth place with 165 points in the voting to Virginia's 164.

Rounding out the top 10 were Navy, 152 points; Hofstra, 136; Rutgers, 134; Massachusetts, 116, and Brown, 112.

Completing the top 20 in order were Penn, 102; Army, 81; Princeton, 79; Bowling Green, 70; North Carolina 66; Air Force, 54; Penn State, 32; Duke, 24; Yale, 22, and Bucknell, 14.

JV's stay undefeated, beat QCC

By BOB HIGGINS

The junior varsity baseball team scored ten runs in the first inning Friday, and then coasted to a 11-0 thrashing of hapless Quinsigamond Community College.

Jim Bedard pitched two-hit ball through the first five innings, and Dave Tewhill did the same during his four innings of relief work for the Minutemen.

Things started bad for Quinsigamond in the bottom of the first, as the Minutemen sent 14 batters to the plate. John Kearney started things with a single. Charlie Johnson followed with a perfect double play grounder, but QCC fouled it up and two men were on. Steve Wright followed with a bunt which was fielded by the pitcher, who soon found that there was nobody covering first. This loaded the bases for Bill Tremblay, who singled up the middle. The center fielder promptly threw the ball over the third baseman's head and Tremblay ended up on third. Three runs had scored on three errors, and it was far from over.

Jim Cullen tripled, Mike McLaughlin doubled, and Tim Foltz and Paul Abramowicz each singled as three more runs scored. After Kevin Crowley grounded out to second, Kearney and Johnson doubled. Wright then doubled but was thrown out trying to stretch it into a triple. Bill Tremblay grounded to third to end the inning.

The rest of the game went along pretty smoothly. While Bedard and Tewhill were mowing down Quinsigamond batters, the second QCC pitcher (the first didn't survive the first inning) was doing the same to the UMass batters. The Minutemen, no doubt relaxed with a ten-run cushion, mounted a couple of small threats, but were held in check. The final run was scored in the eighth on an Art Wienslaw single, a walk, a fielder's choice, and an error by the QCC center fielder on a routine fly ball.

Women attain recognition

By KATIE KING

Up until about seven years ago female athletes entering UMass quickly found that their chances of participating in well rounded intercollegiate athletic competition were quite slim. The opportunities for those members of the "weaker sex" anticipating athletic involvement just didn't exist—not surprising since at the time society generally frowned upon female participation.

In result, a sizeable number of talented, forgotten, woman athletes simply sighed and hung up their cleats, thus accepting this surpressed role that society dictated as passive, quietly discontent women existing in "a man's world", where sports were no exception.

It was their own acceptance of the female role that proved to be the women's primary downfall. Since the women athletes sat back, never initiating any organized demands or complaints against UMass's athletic program budgeting (which provided minimum funding of women's sports), the university continued its athletic policies which catered to the men's needs. Women athletes remained unnoticed mainly because they didn't make themselves noticeable—thev lacked the necessary leadership that the University would respond to.

With the onset of the Women's Liberation movement within the past five years came the demands of the women athletes. As society slowly began encouraging the oppressed female to express herself athletically, the demand to provide athletic opportunities for women increased on former athletic policies, such as the one that existed here at the university, whose eyes were closed to female participation.

Within the past five years the athletic program here at UMass has continually been challenged by, and has responded to, the leadership provided by women athletes who felt that the women were not getting their fair chance, and who did something about it. Programs born from such leadership include most all of the present women's varsity sports such as gymnastics, softball, tennis, basketball, crew, and most recently, field hockey (1973). By providing the once missing leadership, the women are getting reasonable treatment from the athletic department by the women's definitions. If a woman athlete on campus feels that she is being cheated out of her fair share by the athletic policy, then it is her fault, since the opportunities will exist only if women demand them.

What this all leads to is the obvious conclusion that the fate of women's sports lies in their determination and self-initiative. It may be unfortunate, but it is true, and reasonably inevitable. Women's athletic participation is presently a cultural phenomena, it hasn't been completely accepted by society. Until society fully accepts the role of the woman in sports, it will be up to her to make herself known. Once she does, the university will meet her demands.

Public letter to the AD

Dear Mr. McInerney,

I've been an alumnus of the University for almost two years and now I am able to reflect upon and analyze what four years at UMass meant to me. Getting straight to the point, a great deal of my time at UMass - as a member of the men's gymnastics team - was spent in Boyden's auxiliary gym. I am unable to dispute the athletic department's claims of insolvency nor interpret any "political" maneuvering that may have influenced your decision to wind down the gymnastics program. But, the guys who spend three hours a day in that gym come out of there with a hell of a lot more than chalk dust on their hands. Competing perhaps in the strongest league in the nation, building a quality program over the past six years that few schools can surpass, and experiencing steadily increasing student support permitted me to leave Amherst with many good friends and a respect for athletic discipline. That's important, both to any student-athlete and to the University.

Should the Athletic Department's actions go as planned, please consider this letter a request to eliminate my name from any related athletic drives at the University. For gymnastics is the only sport at UMass with which I'm able to identify. The anger of the underclassmen on the team has undoubtedly been brought to your attention. The protest and disappointment, however, does extend beyond the UMass campus.

Sincerely,
Len Aubrey

Depleted tracksters face Dartmouth

By SCOTT HAYES

Just three days ago, the UMass Track team edged the Big Green of Dartmouth at the BC Relays. Today, the squad travels to Hanover to face Dartmouth again, this time head to head in a dual meet.

Things will be different this time, however. The best of the distance men will be given a well-deserved rest after running some of the fastest times of the season at Chestnut Hill. Another reason for the day off is the upcoming Penn Relays, to be held on Friday and Saturday. "Asking the kids to come up with three top performances in a week would be too much," explained Coach Ken O'Brien.

Some of the firepower the trackmen have used so successfully in compiling a 6-1 record and a relay championship will be deleted.

Dartmouth, as proven at BC, is a very strong team. Enjoying strengths in the distances and weights, the Ivies toppled Northeastern 100-86 earlier in the season. It will be interesting to see what Dartmouth does with its top athletes — whether they too will be rested in favor of the Penn Relays or compete in an effort to come up with a victory.

UMass will be at a big disadvantage, but the meet should turn out to be a good battle. Dartmouth boasts some pretty exceptional individuals and should they be competing today, the tracksters will have plenty of competition. Dartmouth won the two-mile relay at BC, as well as the javelin, and with competitors like Bob Cummins, Don Starr, John Carmony and Kurt Reimann the weightmen will have their hands full.

The Minutemen will be entering the meet as the underdogs, and team members Bill Cooke, Kevin Hall, Ed McAlleney and Davie Sewaed will get a chance to prove themselves. Weeden Wetmore and Chet Myslewicaz will attempt to fill in adequately in the mile, while Phil Broughton and John Scheer will see action in the two-mile.

RELAY RAMBLINGS — The javelin team, led by Jim Shea, took fourth place at the Relays, behind URI, NU, and Dartmouth with a total distance of 520-10.

Devin Croft, the hero of the distance-medley victory, said he hesitated when he went by BC's Keith Francis and thought he might be outdoing himself. The bearded junior not only beat Francis, but also put on a burst of speed to pass NU's sensation, Mike Buckley.

Despite suffering an opening round lost to Chilly's Army, the team it eventually met and defeated in the finals, Osibisa tenaciously fought its way to the championship of the FIVE COLLEGE SHOOT-OUT. Their charge was led by tournament high scorer Leon Saunders, jump shooting Seabern Hill, speedy Charles Council, stuffing Tom Gillams, board-man Everett Jenkins, fast-breaking W.G. The champs, and the other teams, that competed in the benefit tournament, were honored at a sumptuous awards banquet given by the Third World Community of Hampshire College.

So, congratulations to Osibisa, and thank you to those of you who attended and donated to the cause of the Third World Preschool and Daycare Programs. The children appreciate your generosity and those who teach the children thank you for the acknowledgement of their diligent efforts.

SC crushes softball team

By DAVE VARG

It was one of those situations where defeat seemed simply intolerable. It had been so long since UMass had beaten Springfield the thirst just had to be satisfied.

When they blew the J.V.'s off the diamond by the score of 13-3 they laughed. UMass boiled. Starting pitcher Vickie Lentine said she was psyched.

Time and time again in the early innings, fine defense kept the opposition off base. First baseman Terry Pudlo turned a foul ball that should have been out of play into an exciting out. Barb Doucet made a magnificent catch on another foul ball that she shouldn't have gotten near.

Then suddenly the bubble burst. Springfield tore UMass apart in the 4th inning. It seems as if they went around the order three times. When the inning ended Springfield had taken a commanding lead, 6-1.

In the 6th inning Springfield added five more runs to their total and for all intents and purposes had the game out of reach. UMass had fallen again to their western Mass. rivals by a convincing score, 11-1.

But amid this unhappy encounter some bright spots can be observed. UMass found out the hard way where they need work.

Grapplers shine in tourney

By JOHN BOCK

In a post season tournament held at Springfield College a contingent of UMass wrestlers (past and present) captured first in three weight classes in a very respectable showing.

Senior Steve Benson averaged three season losses to Jim Urqhart of URI as he bested him 3-1 in the finals at 177.

Last year's team captains Dave Amato and Carl Dambman won at 126 and heavyweight, respectively. Amato, now assisting the University of Rhode Island, beat two time New England Small College Champ, Al Strillachi of Hartford, 3-1. Amato was University Champ at 118 in 1973.

Dambman was part of an all Amherst team that dominated the heavyweight class. He pinned UMass' 1973 NEUWA Heavyweight Champ George Ireland in the finals. Ireland beat Amherst College Coach Henry Littlefield in the semi's (Littlefield finished third). In the process Dambman beat Springfield's College Division All American, Tim Smith.

Batmen look to regroup in non-leaguer vs. Dartmouth

By MIKE BROPHY

Dartmouth invades Earl Lorden Field today looking to stregthen its 8-7 record and, according to Coach Tony Lupien, will use two righties although he could not name them as of Monday afternoon.

''We've just come off a rough weekend when I used most of my pitchers in three games against Brown and Yale,'' said Lupien during a telephone interview.

UMass, on the other hand, is in much the same boat coming off a three game weekend series in which they dropped their two opening Yankee Conference games to UNH in a home and home series.

The Minutemen did, however battle back on Sunday's affair with Holy Cross to take a 5-4 decision after trailing most of the way.

Both coaches are looking for their teams to do well but hesitate to throw their best as these are not league encounters. ''We have to treat them as regular games but have to save our best for league play, of course,'' said Lupien.

UMass rapped out 23 hits in two days over the weekend including great performances from Rich Hansen as well as Pete Backstrom. ''We have the potential,'' said Bergquist, ''so now all we have to do is put it together. I think this is the first time in my eight years here that we have ever lost four in a row (referring to the four games preceding the Holy Cross encounter in Worcester on Sunday afternoon.'')

Jeff Reardon, who pitched a nifty three hitter in losing on Friday, will get the nod for game today as Bergquist was impressed with his control during his last performance. Reardon's record now stands at 1-1 with an average of five strikeouts per game.

As far as the second game is concerned, Bergquist is undecided as to whom he will start. Jerry Erb or John McManus are his top choices as both looked good in their recent outings.

''We have everything in front of us at this point,'' said Bergquist yesterday, ''and I am sure we can, and will, win this conference after all. We are putting it together now. And it is not too late.''

Late score:
Sox-4, KC-1

Gorillas clash with Eagles

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Garber's Gorillas will clash with the Boston College Eagles tonight at 7:30 at B.C.'s Alumni Stadium.

The game will provide a new twist for the UMass lacrossers because it will be played under the lights as well as on artificial grass. In another game on artificial turf this year, UMass was defeated by Hofstra, 7-6. The artificial surface should make for a faster game. The ball will bounce faster and higher and will roll farther. B.C. may have an advantage by being more familiar with the Astroturf, but the turf will certainly aid the UMass fastbreak.

The Eagles, now cruising with a 6-0 record, blasted MIT, 12-4, and UConn, 10-4, but they just squeaked by Boston State and New Hampshire by respective 10-7 and 12-10 scores.

A large portion of last year's B.C. team, which made it to the USILA tournament, has returned.

UMass coach, Dick Garber said, ''They have six good midfielders - McCarthy, McGrath, Brasman, Connolly, Bitter, and Brevins. They also have two good attackmen - Wally Cox, from Framingham, Mass., and Ed Sullivan, from Long Island.''

B.C. has a decent team but they will have to try to slow down the Gorillas, who bombed Fairleigh Dickinson, 21-13, on Saturday. In the five games they have played, UMass has averaged nearly 13 goals per game. Two of the big guns for the Gorillas are Harry McVey and Jeff Spooner. McVey has collected 12 goals and 17 assists while Spooner has 13 goals and 9 assists.

UMass has not played B.C. in regular season, but in a round-robin scrimmage this fall (30 minutes against each team) against both B.C. and the Brine Lacrosse Club, they beat B.C., 6-4.

The Gorillas did not play to their full potential against Dickinson. They picked up seventeen penalities in the game, 9 in the fourth period. They made some mistakes both defensively and offensively.

Earle Barroll

Rough road for Dr. A

Well, the ABA had its draft last week and selected everyone from the most highly sought after high school player to a 36-year-old NBA veteran to a New York Knick who has already announced his retirement in favor of the general managership of an ABA team.

One of those picked was Al Skinner, that coming in the eighth round by the New York Nets, which prompted his coach Jack Leaman to say, ''He's a much better player than the eighth round. Then again I kept telling everyone that Julius Erving was a great player.''

And I likewaise invited Al's assistant coach and the guy who recruited him and coached Erving in High School, Ray Wilson to comment, ''I don't think being an eighth round choice is indicative of Al's ability.''

Anyways, these are the same Nets who sent Artis Gilmore and Dan Israel and the rest of the pompous Kentucky Colonels back to Lexington after a four game sweep in the Eastern Division finals.

And yes, these are the same Nets who will probably win the ABA championship when they and the Utah Stars from the West begin the finals this week.

And yes, these are the same Nets, publicized as a team that starts five guys who never went further than their junior year in college, and together compose what one basketball digest rates as the third best team in ALL of basketball.

And yes, these are the same Nets who begin with Doctor and end with J and have given Al Skinner at least the opportunity to realize what he missed out on his sophomore year when Julius Erving was $500,000 richer, driving his Lincoln Continental, a babe in the arms of Virginia Squires owner Earl Foreman and asking Charlie Scott if he knew what an assist was.

Those were the days when Julius had just completed his junior year, Al his freshman and everyone on campus was getting set for the NCAA the next season. Why not? Erving and Skinner at forwards. You could have Leaman at center and Kelley and myself at guards and you would have at least made the semi's of the NIT.

''That might have been the best all-around team ever at UMass,'' said Leaman. ''But you can't live on that and Al learned his lessons well from that 14-12 season to get where he is today.''

You're probably asking yourself if the possibility of playing with Erving on the Nets is THE incentive for Al Skinner. ''Honestly,'' he says, ''the real incentive for me is to play professional basketball. If I want to play more after college, and I do, the pros is the next step. Playing with Julius will be a pleasure, not a motivation.''

Of course, there is still the NBA draft early next month for Al to deal with, as well as the first course of business for all rookies, that being rookie camp. And then the ultimate question: Can Al Skinner make the pros?

''I'm not concerned about playing guard,'' says Al. ''What I have to deal with is rookie camp and just work on getting through that. Then I can concentrate on what the big team wants me to do.''

Al's situation with the Nets centers on the gross fact of life that there are nine or ten no-cut crontracts on that team. ''Even if he was a second round choice,'' explains Wilson, ''it would be difficult for him to make the team with those odds. In fact, even the top choice (Brian Winters of South Carolina) has a tough road and I'd be surprised if he got a no-cut contract.''

''Al will play somewhere in the pros,'' says Leaman. ''Even if its too congested with the Nets, they can still deal him or he can hook on with someone else. Al could quite possibly be another Julius Erving situation. He'll prove we're right in our judgement of his ability and the calibre of our program.''

But, before you deal Al this way or that, remember he's somplete, he's the total player, he CAN shoot from 20 and I wouldn't bet against him in his quest to play professional ball.

Gym edict unavoidable

By DAVE EIBEL

Editor's note — This is the fourth article in a series by the Collegian sports investigative team on the announced phase down of the men's gymnastics team by the Athletic Department.

The only final decision that has been taken in the entire men's gymnastics situation is that Tom Dunn, the present coach of the team, will not be rehired after the conclusion of the 1974-1975 season, according to Athletic Director Frank McInerney.

''That's a final decision and the Dean (Physical Education Dean David Bischoff) has accepted it, the AD told the Collegian in an interview last Thursday.

The decision actually was an inevitable one. Dunn became the UMass men's coach two years ago after winning the national parallel bars championship at Penn State. He was recommended to McInerney by former gymnastics coach Eric Kjeldsen who took a year off on a sabattical leave and upon his return chose not to continue coaching. Dunn's hiring was made on the assumption that Kjeldsen would return to coaching upon his return from his sabattical leave and as such was considered a temporary move, and Dunn by all accounts was fully aware of this.

''He (Dunn)) came for an interim assignment until Kjeldsen came back. After Kjeldsen decided not to return to coaching we tried to see if there was some way to keep Dunn.'' However Dunn's precarious position, i.e. his being paid out of athletic trust fund, has made it virtually certain that the program will be phased down at least to the level of New England competition.

The decision not to rehire Dunn after next year started with Financial Manager Al Rufe who reported to Athletic Director McInerney that inflation and a lack of funds in the Athletic Department had made a cutting back in programs necessary. Because of the peculair situation of Coach Dunn, the men's gymnastics team was the logical team to be cut back on.

McInerney then recommended to the Dean Bischoff that Dinn not be rehired and the Dean agreed to his proposal.

The position of the Athletic Council was not a major factor in the decision. The Council is a faculty committee made up of faculty and students whose function is purely an advisory one. None of their decisions are binding in any way on the Athletic Department. In regards to the gymnastics situation the Council, according the McInerney was contacted on the situation and agreed with the decision of the Athletic Department, i.e. not to rehire Dunn.

''They (the Athletic Council) perused the recommendation and pretty much regretfully concluded that the facts and figures showed we were making the right decision,'' said McInerney.

For the present time McInerney ''can't guarantee there'll be a phasedown in the program.'' The school will honor all its commitments in scheduling for next year, but starting with the 1976 season it is probable that the team will compete solely on a New England basis.

But based on the fact that no more gymnastic scholarships will be given out after next year after Barber Fund obligations have been completed, it is doubtful that the team will be a national contender after next year if only because it will be difficult to attract qualified gymnasts to UMass.

The Athletic Department in a sense is picking on the men's gymnastics team because of the team's coach, but based on the facts and the serious money problems that not only the athletic department, but the whole university finds itself in, the decision is unavoidable.

''We want to keep gymnastics, but we just don't have the coaching position and on the basis of available funds we can't support a position, said the Athletic Director.

Judge wants charge against men

Black women guilty in 'Wall' fracas

By DAVID SPARLING

NORTHAMPTON — Two black UMass women were found guilty in Hampshire District Court Tuesday on three of four assault and battery complaints brought against them by two members of Kappa Sigma fraternity.

In addition, Judge J. Alvertus Morse ordered assault and battery complaints filed against two fraternity members present at the Jan. 30 altercation in the Bluewall.

Bridget Porter was found guilty on two counts of assault against Paul Rodriguez and James Jordan. Theresa Cooper was found guilty of assault against Rodriguez and innocent of assault against Jordan.

Judge Morse ordered a fine of $200 against Porter for her assault on Jordan and a $50 fine for her assault on Rodriguez. Ms. Cooper was fined $25 for her assault on Rodriguez.

The womens' lawyer, J. Merrill Forgotson, appealed Judge Morse's decision after it was announced. Morse set the appeal date for Monday, April 29, to be heard by Judge Luke Ryan.

After announcing his decision that complaints be drawn against Paul Rodriguez, a complainant in the case, and Steven Benson, a fraternity member present at the scene of the incident, Morse said, "I believe there is substantial evidence to warrant a complaint brought against the two. A complaint should have been issued, I don't know why it wasn't in the first place.''

The night of the incident, the women were seated by a black Bluewall bouncer opposite Rodriguez and Jordan, at approximately nine p.m. according to testimony. Rodriguez testified that at the time Porter and Cooper arrived their group of five had consumed "six or seven'' pitchers of beer.

An argument began immediately according to testimony, between Rodriguez and Porter as Porter attempted to clear off the table between her and Rodriguez.

Testimony as to the actual chain of events is contradictory on the ensuing occurances, but two prosecution witnesses besides Rodriguez and Jordan testified that Porter was seen with a beer pitcher in her hand.

Rodriguez said he pushed Porter away, she grabbed a pitcher on the table behind her and struck him on the left temple. He sustained a three stitch cut.

Jordan also was cut by broken glass during the incident, saying, "Miss Porter punched me in the shoulder (Jordan received over 40 stitches in his shoulder at Cooley Dickenson Hospital in Northampton that night) and the next thing I knew I was bleeding on my chest.''

Porter and Cooper denied picking up a pitcher in the incident. They testified that after the trouble began (described by Benson initially as a "slap fight") they had beer thrown on them by Benson and at this point, while wiping beer from their face, Cooper testified that she heard the pitcher break.

Porter said she did not hear anything break and at this point "I was out of it. I was scared and I was crying.''

Porter testified that previous to having beer thrown on her she was punched in the jaw by Rodriguez. She was treated at the UMass Infirmary for a cut on her jaw, internal bleeding, and an injury to her left arm.

Benson admitted that he had thrown beer on the two women, saying that "I couldn't reach it (the Rodriguez-Porter altercation) so I threw a glass of beer to break up the fight.''

When asked by Forgotson if he had hit the women with the beer, Benson said, "Oh, yeah, I hit them".

UConn occupation called unwarranted

From Wire Services

STORRS, Conn. — University of Connecticut President Glenn W. Ferguson says he supports the goals of demonstrators who occupied a library wing for seven hours early yesterday, but he called the sit-in unwarranted.

The demonstrators, most of them black, entered the Wilbur Cross library just before it closed midnight Monday. They sought a more definitive answer from the administration on their demands for a cultural center, more minority recruitment and financial aid to minorities.

In a statement issued when the takeover began, the students said: "Faced with inadequate facilities, the black students of the University of Connecticut come to occupy this library not only to get a more definitive and specific response to our demands but also to dramatize our urgent need for a cultural center where in we may study together as a group unified in our ethnicity culture.''

Among 13 demands by the students, four concerned the university's decision to split the anthropology department into two divisions.

The students have demanded that the new department be eliminated, and they want the works of two anthropology professors, William Laughlin and Benson Ginsburg, censured as racist.

Laughlin said after the library demonstration that the black students ''are being seriously misled by outsiders, who are white.''

The blacks charged that the new set up of the anthropology department created ''racist overtones'' regarding the study of ethnic intelligence levels.

Ferguson called the demands ''substantive,'' but said they "have no relationship to the takeover of a library after hours, at midnight for a period of six hours without a willingness to negotiate.''

At a morning news conference, Ferguson said, "This institution and most universities are giving inadequate attention to the needs of black students in particular, who have been recruited during the last five or six years.

"We need to do more, we need additional resources for scholarships, for financial aid. We need a larger facility for the cultural center for blacks.'' He called the library a "critical facility'' on the eve of final exams.

State police were called in after the students twice refused orders by school officials to get out. About 100 state troopers loaded the students onto shuttle buses amid some shoving and pushing. A number of the protesters who had to be carried out were taken by four state troopers one at a time to the nearby Mansfield Training School

All were charged with criminal trespass and were scheduled to appear in court in Willimantic on May 21.

Impeach campaign expects big crowd for demonstration

By MARK VOGLER

The National Campaign to Impeach Nixon expects eight to ten thousand people from over 33 cities this Saturday to converge on Washington, D.C. to demonstrate against the President.

Plans are already under way by University and Five-College Area representatives to coordinate activities for this weekend.

Community action will begin Friday night at 8:30 on the Amherst Town Common with a rally for impeachment.

Frank Dorman, 46, one of the local representatives, told the Collegian he has already chartered and filled one bus to take Amherst impeachment supporters to the nation's capital. He said the cost of the ride would be $14 per person.

Doran Frederickson, 18, a UMass junior living in Thatcher House, said he would act as UMass coordinator for the Amherst and Washington efforts.

WMUA votes to create Third World Director

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
MDC Staff

WMUA staffers in lengthy consultation with Black Mass Media and Corps voted unanimously yesterday to create a Third World Affairs Director to represent minority affairs in all station decision-making processes.

The decision follows a Student Senate Budget Committee challenge that WMUA has failed to provide enough minority programming. The Budget Committee is withholding Budgeting from the station pending further changes.

The Third World Affairs position has been proposed by Will Greenhouse, former UMass undergrad and disk jockey, "Ahwill", the former host of the Jubiiation Jazz Show. According to Greenhouse the proposal is designed to reduce "the insensitivity to people who are outside the mainstream of society in UMass.'' WMUA's constitutional change will enable ''people with no formal means of getting things done to become a part of the decisionmaking process.''

DC break nets robber(s) $1500

By FRITS GUERTSEN
MDC Staff

A safe in Hampden dining commons was broken into between 11:30 p.m. and 6:45 a.m. Monday night, according to UMass police. James Weaver, accountant for the commons, estimated the loss to be approximately $1510. The money was all in bags which were ripped open — about $1000 of it was in change, the rest in bills. A woman working at the snack bar found the break and called police.

Detective Sargent Phillip Cavanaugh said that the job was done by candlelight "by a professional," and that the thief or thieves attempted to break into the front of the safe, but failed. Consequently, the safe was flipped over to get into the back of it. The metal plate was peeled off after removal of the rivets, and the cement asbestos under it was also taken off. Another plate was beneath the asbestos, and it was cut into to reach the money.

The safe was in the kitchen area behind the snack bar, and police think the thief or thieves hid inside the building and purposely remained there to be locked in. The latch on a wooden divider was popped open to get near the safe. Cavanaugh, in charge of the investigation, said that police have a lead, and that there are similarities between this incident and other campus breaks.

Dukakis here tonight

Michael Dukakis, Democratic candidate for governor, will speak tonight at 8:00 in the Student Union Ballroom. Dukakis, who served on the State Legislature for eight years, is best known as a leading proponent of no-fault insurance, and social reforms.

The issues which he has been concentrating his campaign on include, (1) an improved system of mass transportation within Massachusetts, (2) a renovation of the state's judicial system, (3) reform of prisons and correctional institutes, (4) re-allocation of more funds to human services such as education, and health care, and (5) a master plan for economic growth within the state.

Dukakis is the only announced gubernatorial candidate in Massachusetts and is widely considered to be the most liberal of the four expected candidates, the other three being Attorney General Robert Quinn, Governor Francis Sargent and Republican Candidate Carroll P. Sheehan.

UPI service in Collegian

Today The Collegian begins publication of news gathered by the state, regional, national and international writers of United Press International.

UPI, along with The Associated Press, is the major teletype wire service for U. S. newspapers for delivery of news developing outside the hometown area.

With the services of UPI, The Collegian hopes to substantially improve the quality and consistency of reporting outside Amherst, without using more space in the newspaper.

The service has been obtained on a trial basis for the spring and is not intended to affect AP dispatches which The Collegian already carries. It will be retained this fall if it proves of substantial benefit and if funds for it are available.

The John Birch Society wants you

By BILL GONET
MDC Staff

Student discontent with U. S. government policy and administration, recently re-ignited by the expose of the Watergate affair, is perceived by Jack McManus, public relations spokesman for the John Birch Society as an indication that American students might finally be ready to accept his society's theory of a world-dominion-seeking conspiracy, of which the collusion between the Nixon administration and elements of big business is merely a sordid microcosm.

For the past 16 years the John Birch Society, founded by Robert Welch, prominent candy manufacturer, has been trying to educate the American public on this subject. While on a visit to England taken during the late 40's to study the origins of socialism, Mr. Welch arrived at the conclusion that the spread of socialism was not a spontaneous development but rather a pivotal stage in a well planned scheme to place the economy of the world in the hands of a small clique of powerful financiers.

According to Mr. McManus and Bob Estelle, local student John Birch Society member, the Rockefellers and the Rothchilds are among the prime movers behind this conspiracy. Moreover, according to Mr. Estelle, this plutocratic conspiracy is presently pursuing three concommittant strategies: the spread of socialism in capitalist countries, the strengthening of the Communists, and the promotion of a strong United Nations.

The conspirators, whom the society labels as the "Insiders", are promoting the spread of socialism in order to subsume the direction of the economies of the U. S. and those of other capitalist countries under the authority of their respective national governments. According to Estelle, by placing their henchmen in power in these governments, the "Insiders" will thus control the economy of the free world. Likewise, Estelle pointed out that even since the Rothschilds bankrolled Lenin's accession to power the "Insiders" have financed economic development in Communist countries in order to buy the loyalty of the Communist leadership.

According to the Birchers, once they've achieved hegemony over the economies and the political leaderships of the two blocs of countries which lie on either side of the Iron Curtain, the final step needed to consummate their world-wide economic monopoly is the establishment of a world government under the aegis of the U.N. Thus, the society fears that the entire economy of the world would be placed under the control of a single world government dominated by the pawns of the conspiracy.

In other words, Estelle claims through the "Insiders", the membership roster of which reads like a who's who in current history - -- Lenin, Mao-Tse tung, F.D.R., Truman, Castro, Kennedy, Nixon, and Kissinger, the Rockefellers, Rothchilds and other prominent financiers, have sought to control the destiny of the world.

However, against them stands the John Birch Society, chartered as an educational organization in 1958. Through the publication of books like May God Forgive Us, which denounced the selling out of Nationalist China to the Communists by state department officials acting on behalf of this conspiracy and other publications which expose other aspects of the conspiracy in action, the John Birch Society hopes to awaken the American public to the reality of the conspiracy.

Their motto "less government; more individual responsibility" and, with God's help, a better world is reflected in their policy of officially abstaining from politics. The Society prefers, rather, to show the electorate where each candidate stands in regards to crucial issues and thus to prepare each respective voter to make the right choice.

BHE proposal to add $35 million in financial aid

By BARBARA VOORHEES

The Massachusetts Board of Higher Education has endorsed a proposal to bring an added $35 million of state funds into the financial aid resource pool for all state private and public colleges.

UMass students would receive approximately $1.5-$2 million of these funds if the plan is enacted, according to Peter Edelman, Vice President for University Policy.

The proposal was sponsored by the Public-Private Forum, a coalition of public and private colleges established a year ago to deal with student financial aid concerns. It was one of the first joint moves by representatives of both private and public colleges with a number of compromises made by both.

The plan will be forwarded to the state legislature for approval with enactment sought for fall, 1975 or 1976.

The BHE presently awards $9.5 million in state funds to students. The maximum award for a public college student is $300; under the new plan it would be raised to $1000. The maximum award for a private college student is $900; under the new plan it would be $2000.

All BHE scholarship awards are based on need rather than academic achievement.

Edelman emphasized that the proposal was in line with increasing federal financial aid in the form of Basic Opportunity Grants.

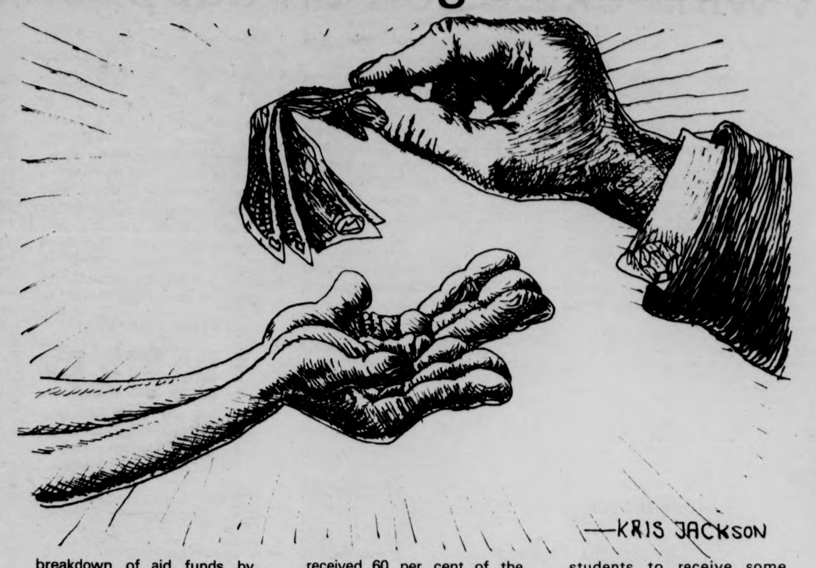
Part II

Financial Aid not meeting all student needs

This is the second part in a six-part series on financial aid at UMass.

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff



More than 1000 UMass students with demonstrated financial need were unable to obtain aid from any source during the 1973-74 academic year. Another 2000 students had their need only partially met, according to the 1974 Financial Aid Office progress report.

Unmet student financial need exceeded $2 million.

Richard Dent, Director of the Financial Aid Office, told the Collegian that he had no figures on how many students could not attend school because of financial problems. He contended, however, that most students who did not receive aid generally worked a few semesters and then returned to school.

Financial aid is offered in three forms:

1.) University-administered and outside scholarships and grants — the awarding of money for which no repayment is expected.

2.) Self-help in the form of loans — money loaned to the student to be repaid after the termination of studies.

Approximately $3 million in University-administered aid funds were available to applicants during 1973-74. The breakdown of aid funds by source follows:

1.) State appropriations — $1.2 million

2.) Federal campus-based aid programs — $1.5 million

3.) Donations and campus-generated funds — $.3 million

Of the 9000 students who applied for aid for 1973-74, 3000 received University-administered financial assistance.

The average aid recipient received 60 per cent of the assistance he needed, or $930 toward an average need of $1500 from the University-administered funds.

The Financial Aid Office determines the average percentage of need to be met per recipient in a particular year according to the amount of money at their disposal that year. When funds are low the average need met is usually reduced to enable more students to receive some money.

The average aid applicant received 2¼ times more self-help aid (loans, employment) than University-administered awards. Approximately 4000 students received loans (in excess of $4 million) under the Higher Education Loan Program (HELP) or other state-guaranteed or federally-insured loan programs.

According to Dent most financial aid is offered in the form of a package deal; students are awarded a combination of gift-aid and self-help.

There are several important outside sources of financial aid:

1.) HELP, sponsored by private state banks; a loan recipient in this program must pay his loan back within years of his termination of studies, at a seven per cent interest rate.

2.) National Student Defense Loans, a federally-subsidized program; the loan recipient must pay his loan back within ten years of his termination of studies, at a three per cent interest rate.

3.) Board of Higher Education Scholarships (BHE); BHE applications are available in the financial Aid Office.

4.) Basic Opportunity Grants (BOG), a Federal entitlement program available to students from the class of 1978 and future classes. Awards next year should run from $200 to $800. Applications for BOG's are available in the Financial Aid Office.

Outside scholarship awards contributed an additional $500,000 to the aid applicant pool during 1973-74.

Note: Read how the Financial Aid Office evaluates applicants in tomorrow's Collegian. Judy Friedland reports on work-study at UMass in Friday's Collegian.

Ellsberg: impeach Nixon

By ERNIE KING
MDC Staff

Daniel Ellsberg achieved national prominence when he released the "Pentagon Papers" to the American Public and revealed the long horrible truths about the secret wars conducted in South East Asia over the past decade.

He is a soft spoken man but speaks with authority on government secrecy and ineptness. When asked how a country could conduct an entire war in secret he said, "I knew of a secret war conducted against North Vietnam in 1961-1964. The Pentagon had lied to Congress while they were carrying out an air war against North Viet Nam and neutrals such as Cambodia and Laos."

Ellsberg said that everyone knew but us. "The Cambodians the Laotians, the Chinese, the North Viet Names all knew. I mean there is just no way you can mistake the crater left from an explosion of a seven hundred pound bomb. Reports of the war were denied by the White House and the press and the public believed them." He added that he hopes a new "skeptisim" has arisen in the American public so that wars of this nature may never happen again.

Ellsberg said that we are still sending aid to South Viet Nam and mentioned an article in the Times that mentioned a "266 million dollar accounting error" that allowed the Pentagon to send that money to the South Viet Namese government as military aid.

Ellsberg believes that the future of our political process is at stake if Congress does not use the bombings in S.E. Asia as one of the grounds for impeachment.

"It is up to the impeachment process to press the issue," Ellsberg said. "If Nixon is not held accountable, future Presidents will know that they are outside the law on war issues. They will know that no law can affect their actions on foreign nationals."

When asked about the April march on Washington to impeach Nixon, Ellsberg said that, "I'm not up on my day to day news but it sounds like a good idea." He said that "the voters of Michigan have had the chance to send the best message to Congress."

Ellsberg talked about Chile for a while and what can happen to justice when a coup takes over. He compared what happened to World War Two Germany to what is happening in Chile today. "In Germany during the Nazi era lawyers and professors justified what they did by saying, 'If I don't do this somebody worse will,' this is what is happening in Chile today. It is also the attitude that my colleagues in government shared when I was working for the government."

Ellsberg said he wasn't being harrassed anymore but he did see agents every now and then and said, "I do assume that I'm still being taped."

Besides being politically active Daniel Ellsberg likes to play the piano occasionally. His favorite composers are Chopin and Sibelius. He also enjoys listening to piano concertos and some folk-rock. Among his favorite contemporary singers are Joan Baez, Joni Mitchell and Bob Dylan.

Sky, pavement to get culture

A giant comb in the sky and a motordriven paint brush will speak of art today at UMass.

The 600-feet-long Sky Comb, an atmospheric sculpture, will be set adrift at 11 a.m. on the east side of the Campus Pond, weather permitting. It will be an activity of the UMass Art Gallery which commissioned the work from Art Prof. Howard Woody of the University of South Carolina.

Along a horizontal silver-colored mylar streamer, eleven 50-feet-long mylar strips will be attached at regular intervals, and atop each of the 11 strips will be a five-feet white weather balloon filled with helium. The result will be a sort of giant comb waving in the wind. A self-addressed postcard will be included, so that a finder report where, when, and in what condition the comb was seem. Thirty-nine people will be needed to assemble the comb.

At 1 p.m. that day UMass undergraduate Joe Hoo Ng will perform two paintings. The bachelor of fine arts major has built a five-feet-long fiberglass car which will move a paint brush along the pavement near Herter Hall. Exhaust fumes and paint will create the art work. His car weighs 10 pounds and can cruise at 30 miles an hour. Ng calls the work "a high speed painting."

To complement this painting, he will also do another, with a three and a half-inch wide house paint brush. In both paintings, the dye used will be washable, according to Ng, who says the art will be gone from the pavement after about three rainstorms. He will give the performances regardless of the weather.

SGA vote challenged

By ROBERTA MARTONE
MDC Staff

The legality of the voting procedure of last night's SGA presidential elections is being challenged by David Campbell, an area government representative from the Orchard Hill area.

Campbell said he wasn't allowed to vote in the elections because he had only been to one Orchard Hill Area Government meeting this year. The Senate maintains that if a member misses more than two consecutive meetings, he is not elligible for voting.

"I think that's discriminating against anyone who believes in apathy. I wanted to cast my vote for Henry Ragin, but they wouldn't let me vote."

Campbell said that the OH president talked to him last week, telling him to appear at the elections. When Campbell tried to vote, the Area Government said he was no longer a voting member, and handed him a notice to certify this. "But I dropped the notice before I read it."

Campbell plans to contact the Student Judiciary and attempt to have the election nullified. He also plAns to sue the SGA. Nick Apostola, Henry Ragin, and two senators from Webster House, Steven Kenney, and Lee Menegoni are backing Campbell. He said he also has the support of the fifth floor of Webster House.

David Booker, who retires as Student Senate Speaker tonight, said Campbell knew "very well" that he had been removed from his voting position.

Booker noted that one vote would not have effected the election results.

U.S. and the world

President wins extension on subpoena

WASHINGTON [UPI] President Nixon yesterday won a five-day extension from a reluctant House Judiciary Committee for a response to its subpoena for tapes and documents of 42 Watergate-related conversations for its impeachment inquiry.

The President's new deadline is 10 a.m. EDT Tuesday.

The White House and Rep. Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., the committee chairman, said Nixon's lawyers had complained they were having trouble compiling subpoenaed material in time to meet the original Thursday morning deadline, and still have the President review it.

At the White House's request, Rodino and Rep. Edward Hutchinson of Michigan, the committee's senior Republican, informally consented to the five-day delay, subject to a formal committee vote Thursday morning.

Although there was some grumbling among committee members, most seemed prepared to agree to what Rodino termed "a reasonable request." In any event, he and Hutchinson hold ultimate subpoena power in, behalf of the committee, and could insist that their position prevail.

A typical reaction came from Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich., who said he would vote for the delay even though "I believe he (Nixon) is only adding more impeachable offenses to the staggering number we are already required to judge."

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said some of the tapes were "very poor," especially those recording conversations Nixon had held in his Executive Office Building hideaway adjacent to the White House.

Ziegler said Nixon "will try to be understanding" but "cannot allow a total intrusion into the executive branch by the legislative branch."

"If the committee feels its purpose is only to get as many tapes as they can, then that is going to drag out this matter for some months to come," Ziegler said.

These and other White House comments during the day indicated that Nixon was not planning to give the impeachment panel everything it sought, but would attempt to furnish edited transcripts of materials he considered relevant to its inquiry.

Rodino said James D. St. Clair, the President's chief Watergate lawyer, told John M. Doar, the committee's chief impeachment counsel, Monday that St. Clair was having "a difficult time getting the material together, and the President had not yet reviewed it."

Doar asked St. Clair why he couldn't turn over subpoenaed material that was ready by the Thursday morning deadline and the rest of it later, Rodino said, but St. Clair replied that Nixon wanted to review all the material at the same time.

SAME PROCEDURE IN SIMILAR CASES-Police Chief of Inspectors Charles Barca holds up a wanted poster being used in search for San Francisco's Zodiac murderer at a press conference where he answered questions about stopping only blacks in search for the so called Zebra murderer now going on in the city. Barca said the procedure in both cases is about the same except in one case the suspect is white and in the other the suspects are black. Police say Zodiac killer is responsible for six murders during the past 8 years. Zebra is credit with killing 12 persons over the past five months, all of them white.

High Court refuses to act on law school minority quotas

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The Supreme Court, on a 5-4 vote, turned aside Monday a white student's claim that the University of Washington minorities admission system discriminated against him. It was the second time in two days the court had skirted the touchy issue of racial quotas.

The case, which produced an outpouring of "friend of the court" arguments on both sides of the issue, involved Marco DeFunis, who was denied admission to the university's law school even though several minority applicants who were accepted displayed lower qualifications than his.

DeFunis, initially denied admission but subsequently admitted on a court order that was overturned, is scheduled to be graduated this year.

In a seven-page unsigned opinion the court said the case no longer represented a live issue since DeFunis would have completed his law studies regardless "of any decision this court might reach on the merit of this litigation."

On Monday, the Court passed up its first chance to rule on the separate but closely related issue of whether racial quotas in hiring are constitutional. It merely upheld the right of Massachusetts to impose such requirements in construction work paid for by the state.

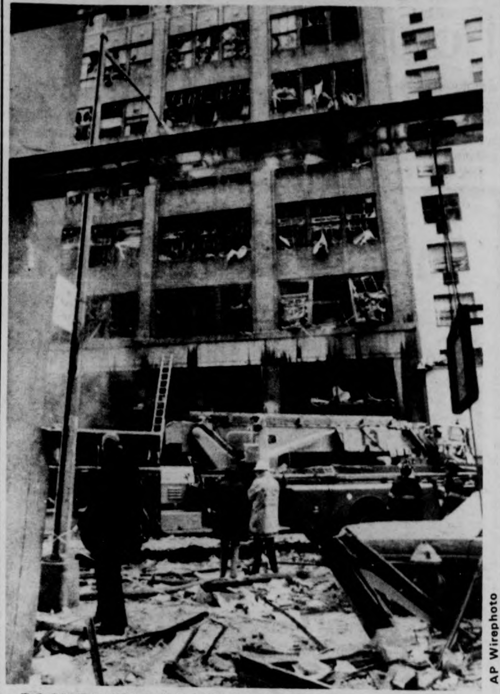
N.Y. explosion caused by gas



AP Wirephoto

ROCKED BY GAS EXPLOSION-Debris and broken glass litter the street Monday after a gas explosion and fire rocked a 26-story commercial building in New York City.

NEW YORK [UPI] — A gas leak caused the explosion that ripped through a 25-story office building in mid-Manhattan near the United Nations Monday and injured 93 persons, city fire commissioner John O'Hagan said yesterday.

O'Hagan, along with building inspector officials, examined the rubble-strewn building and said, "Our examination in the cellar confirms the fact that it was indeed a gas leak which caused the explosion."

Referring to repeated denials Tuesday by Consolidated Edison that a gas leak was responsible for the blast, O'Hagan said: "Con Ed is in error."

British close Irish border to halt IRA

BELFAST [UPI] — British security patrols sealed off the western border with the Irish Republic yesterday in an attempt to stymie Irish Republican Army efforts to smuggle weapons and explosives into Northern Ireland, the army said.

Violence among the majority Protestants, minority Catholics and security forces in the British province has killed 1,002 persons since August, 1969.

An army spokesman said more than 500 soldiers and police were involved in the sealing operation centered around County Londonderry bordering on Donegal in the Irish Republic.

In Londonderry city itself, gunmen armed with rifles and a Soviet-made antitank rocket ambushed an army patrol in the Roman Catholic Bogside district during the night, but there were no casualties.

An army spokesman said the soldiers drove off the ambushers with gunfire and captured a rocket launcher after one of the missiles smashed into a bridge nearby.

No survivors found

DENPASAR, Indonesia [AP] — Indonesian soldiers worked yesterday to clear a trail to the remote site where a Pan American 707 jetliner crashed in jungle terrain. A rescue team that reached the site found no sign of survivors.

Twenty-six Americans were among the 107 passengers and crew members aboard the flight which crashed Monday night, according to Pan Am.

Airport officials here said the pilot did not give any indication of trouble when he radioed his altitude in his last message before the crash.

But they were unable to explain why the plane made its final approach from the northwest, rather than from the west along the normal approach to Bali airport over the open sea.

The plane crashed into the side of 3,900-foot Mt. Mesehe, 36 miles northwest of the island capital of Denpasar.

Aviation officials said searchers worked yesterday clearing a landing area near the crash site for helicopters. Soldiers were reportedly clearing a four-mile trail to the remote crash site.

'Vescoitis' charged

NEW YORK [AP] — The lawyer for former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans contended yesterday the government had contracted "Vescoitis" in its charges against Stans and former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell.

In the first defense summation at Stans' criminal conspiracy trial, the former Cabinet officer was pictured by his lawyer as an honest man who worked hard for President Nixon and did nothing to aid financier Robert L. Vesco, the target of a federal fraud investigation.

Summations for Mitchell and the prosecution are expected today. After Judge Lee P. Gagliardi's charge on the law, the jury is expected to get the case tomorrow.

Rabin begins talks

JERUSALEM [AP] — Yitzhak Rabin, the soldier-diplomat chosen to replace Premier Golda Meir, began the tricky task of forming a new government for Israel yesterday amid forecasts that he might fail.

To succeed, Rabin must persuade the independent Liberals and the rabbis of the National Religious party to stay in their present alliance with Labor. But both parties were making rebellious noises and Rabin faced tough bargaining.

Rabin has spelled out none of his policy plans, and officials were making no predictions, but the new leader is known as a dove despite his military past.

Doves in the Labor party advocate giving away much of the Sinai Desert for peace with Egypt. They also seem willing to bend the cease-fire line with Syria, and give up slightly more territory than the 300 square miles taken in last October's war.

But no Israeli politician, dove or hawk, appears prepared to relinquish the Syrian Golan Heights — an Arab gun platform before Israel won it in the 1967 war.

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Patricia Hearst's family yesterday released a letter from a New Yrok City man described as a photo expert who said pictures of Miss Hearst taking part in a bank robbery showed that she was an unwilling participant.

In the letter, Peter Davies said careful study of the photos taken by a bank camera during the robbery April 15 indicated that he was being forced to participate by the suspects, named as members of the Symbionese Liberation Army, which kidnaped her Feb. 4.

The letter was turned over by the family to U. S. Attorney James L. Browning Jr. with the recommendation that it be submitted to the federal grand jury investigating the bank robbery.

"The strap of the weapon, a semi-automatic rifle she was carrying does not go around the back of her neck," Davies' letter said. "Apart from the fact that this is a little unusual, that the strap should go over her right shoulder only, what makes it extremely significant is that her coat has been put on after shouldering the gun.

"Consequently it becomes impossible for her to throw down the weapon without first removing the coat."

Davies, who a family spokesman said had analyzed photographs taken during the 1970 shootings at Kent State University and whose testimony was taken by the grand jury which indicted several national guardsmen, also noted that the photos showed Miss Hearst with her right hand in her coat pocket.

"With her right hand in the pocket of her coat, how can she possibly get a finger on the trigger mechanism of the gun?" Davies' letter said.

Kennedy well received

TBILISI, USSR [UPI] — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy brought a whiff of American political campaigning to the Soviet Union yesterday by captivating crowds everywhere he went in the ancient capital of Soviet Georgia.

Smiling, clapping well-wishers pressed around him as he went shopping and sightseeing in and around the city.

Kennedy, who is in the Soviet Union on a week-long, fact-finding tour, attracted cheers and applause when he visited Tbilisi's colorful central market.

The Massachusetts Democrat, moved through a maze of meat, cheese and vegetable stands with a crowd of several thousands on his heels, jostling and straining to get a glimpse of him.

"How beautiful he is," said one matron.

Kennedy spent the day sightseeing in and around this capital of Soviet Georgia before flying to Leningrad last night.

Georgians are noted for their exuberance, and they responded warmly to Kennedy's campaign-type appearance in the market.

Ogden tortures kill 3

OGDEN, Utah [UPI] — Police said yesterday two robbers "went berserk," tortured five victims, forced them to drink caustic acid and shot them all in the head, killing three.

One of the slaying victims, an 18-year-old girl, was left nude on the floor. Another survivor suffered a punctured eardrum when one of the robbers jammed a pen into his ear and kicked it.

Police issued a bulletin for two men wanted for questioning in the slayings at a record shop Monday night.

U.S. energy crisis

Large profits posted by oil companies

By United Press International

Two more major oil companies yesterday reported huge gains in their earnings in the first quarter of 1974 compared with the same period last year before the energy crisis drove the price of fuel upward.

Companies reporting big increases yesterday were Exxon, the world's largest oil company, and Texaco. Gulf and Standard Oil of Indiana reported large gains Monday.

Exxon earnings for the quarter were $705 million or $3.15 a common share, up from $508 million or $2.27 a share in the first quarter of last year. The gain was 38.8 per cent.

Texaco reported an even bigger jump in earnings to $589.4 million or $2.17 a share on revenues of $4.92 billion from $264 million, or 97 cents a share, in the first quarter of 1973 on revenues of $2.49 billion. The percentage gain amounted to 123.2 per cent.

The reports came amid predictions by industry spokesman that a "vindictive" Congress would pass legislation this year regulating the profits of oil companies.

"I think Congress is vindictive and, regardless of the good case we might make, Congress will insist on changing the tax laws," said Gulf President James E. Lee at a news conference.

Lee said that oil prices have "got to be reflected in the marketplace. Our profits are not sufficient to support the kind of capital programs proposed. The consumer eventually has to pay the costs of energy."

Exxon Chairman J.K. Jamieson said the sale at year-end of 1973 inventories abroad at the higher world level of prices for crude contributed about $80 million to the first quarter earnings. He noted that Exxon's exploration and expenditures in the first quarter profit.

Texaco Chairman Maurice Granville told shareholders at the annual meeting that year end profit on inventory sales abroad, which he called a nonrecurring item, was responsible for nearly half the total earnings.

House panel approves oil price rollback

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Commerce Committee voted 14 to 12 yesterday to include a domestic oil price rollback in a new version of the energy emergency bill which President Nixon vetoed earlier this year, partly because it contained the same provision.

The new rollback amendment, sponsored by Rep. Bob Eckhardt, D-Tex., would push prices for most domestic oil and petroleum products back their level on Nov. 1, 1973, while allowing certain increases for subsequent cost increases.

Eckhardt estimated the rollback would apply to 80 to 85 per cent of American oil.

As of last Nov. 1, he said, so-called "old oil" produced before 1973 controls was selling at $4.25 a barrel and "new oil," exempt from controls, was selling for $6.17 a barrel.

His amendment would apply to both old and new oil sold by major companies, and to old oil sold by smaller firms. New oil by small companies and all oil from low-producing "stripper" walls would be exempt from the rollback.

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Gasoline prices and supplies seem to have leveled off nationwide this week, with only 2 per cent of service stations, reporting they were out of fuel, the American Automobile Association said yesterday.

In its weekly report, the AAA said its survey of more than 6,000 stations in every state except Alaska indicated "a slowdown of improving fuel availability."

Not only was the percentage of stations out of fuel unchanged from last week, it said, but the average price of a gallon of gasoline remained at 54 cents for regular and 58 cents for premium.

The Northeastern states, as in the past, had the tightest supplies. In Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont, more than 8 per cent of stations were limiting purchases and more than 3 per cent were out of fuel.

The most plentiful supplies for the fourth consecutive week were reported in the six-state region emcompassing Colorado, Montana, the Dakotas, Utah and Wyoming, where only one of 327 stations surveyed were limiting purchases and none was out of fuel.

When Virginia dropped its odd-even day rationing system, the Oregon-style plan remained in effect in 11 states, and was mandatory in only four - New York, Maryland, Delaware and Hawaii.

State senate rejects bill to decriminalize marijuana

BOSTON [UPI] — The Massachusetts Senate defeated by a 2-1 margin yesterday legislation to descriminalize the offense of marijuana possession.

After more than an hour of debate, the Senate defeated the legislation on a 24-11 roll call. The bill had been endorsed by the Joint Social Welfare Committee.

The bill reported out by the committee would have eliminated all jail sentences for possession of any amount of marijuana for persons of any age and substituted instead a fine of $50.

The measure ultimately defeated by the Senate was amended to decriminalize possession of one ounce or less of marijuana for persons 18 or older. The amendment was authorized by Sen. Irving Fishman, (D-Newton.)

Opposition to the bill was led by Sen. David H. Locke, R-Wellesley, who described it as "a dangerous proposal."

"We're not talking about lollypops and bubblegum," Locke said. "We're talking about a dangerous drug."

The senator said that if the bill became law "it would rejuvenate the port of Boston by making it a center for marijuana...it would come in by the boat load.

"The bill would allow the boy scouts to go off to the jambourie and make marijuana," he added. "If you pass this bill you make Boston an open city and Massachusetts an open state."

Support for the bill came from Sen. Ronald C. McKenzie, R-Burlington. He said marijuana is not a naractic drug and added, "It is ridiculous to treat people who use it as criminals."

McKenzie said marijuana possession has been decriminalized in Oregon and the law has not created any difficulty. He said 20 million persons in the U.S. use marijuana.

Sen. Jack H. Hackman, D-Brookline, Senate chairman of the Social Welfare Committee, also supported the bill. He said the proposal has been endorsed by the American and Massachusetts Bar Association.

Sen. James A. Kelly, D-Oxford, supported the bill saying "I can't believe we are going to continue imposing jail sentences on persons who use marijuana."

DYS abuses claimed by investigative teams

WORCESTER [AP] — The state Department of Youth Services (DYS) is subject to a wide variety of abuses in its administrative practices, permitting dangerous youths under its care to roam the streets, according to a copyrighted story in yesterday's editions of the Worcester Gazette.

The newspaper's investigative team, which has been looking into the DYS for the past three months, has found a combination of good and bad results of the department's programs for youths within its jurisdiction.

The legislature's Post Audit and Oversight Committee said yesterday it has found "evidence of mismanagement, misuse of state and federal funds" and "wanton disregard of the welfare of state wards and of the safety of the public" within the Department of Youth Services.

The committee's co-chairmen, in releasing a 234 page report on the agency, said in a joint statement that "evidence was found of illegal ifiscal and personnel practices dating back to the day the department became operative..."

A summary of the report said that at least 37 youths died while under the department's care since the agency was reorganized in 1969. Only two of them died of natural causes, the committee said.

Eight youths assigned to the agency's care died during the three years immediately prior to reorganization, the report said.

The Gazette said that although the smaller, community-based treatment centers show many faults and problems in their programs for juveniles, many persons believe it would be a tragedy for the majority of these youths to be returned to the institutions that were dismantled.

Among legislative recommendations which will come out of the investigation, the legislators said, is a proposal for maximum security facilities which will accomodate between 225 and 250 youngsters.

They also said they will seek passage of a statute which will make it a criminal oofense for state agencies to overspend their budgets.

Youth Services Commissioner Joseph M. Leavey said he believed that the facts as presented by the committee are fair although administrative improvements have been made by the agency.

Leavey, asked for comment, said his greatest concern is that the report might lead to a conclusion that DYS youngsters are neglected.

"In our state we get a tremendous amount of criticism," he said, "but we are considered the leader in juvenile correction in the nation."

Doctors accused of fetus dissections

From Wire Services

BOSTON — Attorneys for three doctors charged with illegal removal of bodies for the purpose of dissection will meet with Suffolk Superior Court Judge John F. Morarity Aug. 5 to set a trial date for the case.

Doctors Leon D. Sabath and Leonard Berma, both still members of the BCH staff, were freed on $1,000 personal recognizance. Dr. David Charles, now of Newfoundland, is free on $2,000 personal recognizance.

A fourth member of the research team charged in the case, Dr. Agneta Philipson, now living in Sweden did not appear at Monay's arraignment, nor was she represented by counsel.

According to the indictment, the four physicians were accessories before and after the fact of unauthorized removal of fetuses between June 1971 and August 1972. During that time the doctors were engaged in a research project of testing what effect two drugs - erthromycin and clindamycin - had on fetuses subsequent to the administration of the drugs to the mothers during pregnancy.

Obscenity laws voided

BOSTON (AP)-The state's Supreme Judicial Court by a 4-3 decision yesterday threw out the state's three obscenity laws as unconstitutionally "vague and archaic."

The decision stems from a series of court cases brought against Boston movie theaters charged with violating the state's obscenity laws by showing the x-rated film "The Devil and Miss Jones."

"Without further delay," Hennessey said, "the legislature at its option should determine whether new obscenity laws are needed."

Fifteen cents a shot

By BOB SHEMELIGIAN

I am getting tired of UMass Vegas-vending machines. For almost two years I've put up with these mechanical monsters with no complaints, but tonight was the last straw.

After a severe attack of late night hunger I threw my last quarter in a vending machine and pulled the knob for Cracker Jacks. The machine dispensed both my change and the product perfectly and thinking I had won, I happily picked up what turned out to be an empty unopened Cracker Jack box. All that occupied the hollow interior of this reject box was a non-edible prize.

There was an inscription on the bottom flap that read as follows:

Nobody loves a Cracker Jack box that's empty.
Find a trash
can.
No fooling.

This case is an unusual example of the countless times I've been ripped off by vending machines in my two years on this campus.

They are everywhere and almost all are dangerous. I have learned to consider any transaction with vending machines a gamble. Stocked with pastries, candy, soda, and cigarettes displayed behind clear glass windows for hungry eyes; they wait.

What happens when money is put in these devils? Almost anything, and sometimes nothing. The Campus Center machines are good examples of this.

The CC candy machines refuse to give change. Sometimes the machines that change dollar bills will stop functioning after the rollers take in a buck. The postage stamp machines might just as well be a government run fixed casino.

There is no such thing as a safe machine; however, people who have visited the CC rest rooms disagree with me on this fact.

The most hateful mechanical devise of all is the infamous pinball machine. Sometimes it will refuse to give games won fairly, or tilt because of a quivering hand, or go berserk half way through a veritible record-breaking game. I hate them.

These machines are pretty smart foes. Have you ever wondered why some machines vending fifteen cent items, that don't give change, have slots big enough for quarters?

The most maddening thing about a hostile vending machine is it feels no pain. Kick it, punch it, and if you're lucky enough to harm it, it'll be fixed soon enough and continue working inefficiently while the infirmary doctors tape up broken fingers.

I have sworn on Thomas Merton's grave never to go near another vending machine; this vow was forgotten as soon as I needed cigarettes. Risky as they are, daily inconveniences makes them irresistable. They will outlast the Vatican.

Politicians and diplomacy

By BOB FOSTER

The Russian audience was both baffled and bewildered when Ted Kennedy asked their opinion concerning Russian defense spending. Opinion polling on sensitive issues without forewarning is not a traditional Soviet custom. Thus, the poll was met with laughter, hand-sitting, and a general "WHAT DO WE DO NEXT" ATTITUDE.

Only a few weeks earlier, Richard Nixon went to memorial services for the last of the ancient Gaulists, Georges Pompidou. In the process of expressing sympathy, Mr. Nixon managed to slip in several mini-summits with several equally as sympathetic world leaders. The French people laughed at Mr. Nixon as the Russians laughed at Ted Kennedy. But the French laughter grew from seeds of bitterness and resentment, not bewilderment and perplexity.

Juxtapose these two incidents within a few weeks of historical time and one has a perfect narrative of American diplomatic direction in the coming years. One might view it as an M.C. Escher print: many characters heading in many directions, yet all seemingly going in one directionless direction: the proverbial "nowhere". Thus, we have Mr. Kennedy subtly hinting at freedom of emigration. Further, he attempts with All-American guile, an American political technique on a Soviet audience. Where does this process get him — into American newspapers which still don't believe him to be a viable Presidential candidate in 1976. His purpose has been accomplished. He is politically successful. Though his approach is a bit unorthodox, he knows what he must do to remain in contention. The Soviets laugh at the "silly" American politician. The American people love it. Kennedy's foreign policy becomes one of domestic news worthiness, not realistic considerations.

Richard Nixon also acts out a calculated blunder. But, in true Nixon form, an elephant hatches from a robin's egg. Where Kennedy is viewed as a silly politician (a misdeameanor of political etiquette), Nixon commits a capital crime in the laws of diplomatic ethics. He affronts a whole population, not just a small Soviet audience. He becomes the epitome of diplomatic ineptitude, instead of "that silly American politician".

Granted, Mr. Kennedy is a mere Senator and Mr. Nixon is The President as he so often tells us. Yet, the title of President bears many burdens and responsibilities that are not shared by a Senator, even a contender such as Kennedy. The office holder should be acutely aware of such responsibilities. When he make a diplomatic mistake, he is not a "silly Senator", but a representative of a nation in the purest sense of representation.

I have but one suggestion for Mr. Nixon: when delving into diplomatic drama, let Henry do it! The domestic scene is a shambles. Do not turn the same evil demons upon America's international prestige. Remember, only a Kennedy from a deviant state such as Massachusetts can be a "silly Senator". A President shall always be a country incarnate. If indeed Mr. Nixon is America incarnate, we must immediately examine ourselves for cancers of insanity. The pain grows with time. Soon such blunders may not be written off with mere diplomatic apologies.

Lower fee: sign petition

To The Editor:

The Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center costs the student $52 a year, (next year it will be more), and what does the student get for it? Not $52 worth.

This is what the Ad Hoc Committee on the Campus Center Bond Issue feels, and we are trying to do something about it. Initially, we are going to collect signatures, hopefully 15,000 - 20,000, to show the state legislature that the students wnat the state to pay for this building. Later a bill will be introduced into the House to that effect.

The Ad Hoc Committee was organized because we felt that the students were rooked into paying for this white elephant. In 1965-67 when this building was planned, the state was to pay 60 per cent of the costs. However, it decided not to do so. The Board of Trustees, instead of rethinking the plans and excluding the hotel and conference service, decided that the students should pay 100 per cent. The blame is not with the Board of Trustees because they felt the building would pay for itself. They thought that the various retail areas in the Campus Center would produce enough revenue to offset the debt. This, unfortunately, is not the case; the retail areas do not produce enough revenue to offset the operating costs of the building. This year the operating deficit will be about $200,000 which the students will also have to make up through the C.C. Fee. Add on over one million dollars in debt payments and the students are really being ripped off.

There are other reasons why the Committee is trying for the State to take over financing of the Campus Center. This building was planned to cost only 7.8 million dollars, but it is actually worth 17.3 million. Also there is probably one million dollars worth of repairs needed for this building, and the building has been in operation only since 1970. Finally the most ironic of all reasons is that when the building gets paid for, debt and interest, the State is going to own it. (No kidding) So why should the students pay for a building that they will never own?

So help us help you. Sign the petition. The Committee will be on the concourse to answer all questions every day from 10-2 until May 3.

Mideast should be above the scepter's sway

To The Editor:

In Response to Jeffrey E. Green:

On April 11th, three Arab terrorists killed 18 Israelis in the town of Kiryat Shimona. There is no excuse for the attack.

On April 12th, Israeli soldiers raided several border villages in Lebanon, blew up 21 homes, and took 10 prisoners. Two women died in the attack. There is no excuse.

Since the terrorism and counter-terrorism, fighting in the Golan Heights has intensified. If Israel wishes peace, let Israel deal in peace.

Jeffrey Green has said that the world backs Arab politics to procure Arab oil. I agree; when have international politics been fueled by compassion? Jeffrey Green said that, "Japan, England, France and now many African countries bear as much of the responsibility as the attackers themselves," for the massacre. I agree; and the United States bears responsibility for Israeli counter-terrorism.

The saying, "an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth," is accepted wholly by the Israeli government. The Middle East is littered with broken teeth and gouged eyes. Israeli soldiers have become terrorists. What compassion is the world to feel for a nation that always retaliates in blood? Is it right that civilians should pay for the sins of three dead terrorists?

It is ironic that now, after the Arabs feel that they have won a war, that the chance for true peace is greater than at any time in the past twenty-five years. Israel must mediate with nations; she cannot afford to battle with terrorists.

Perhaps I'm a bigot; I only hope that I am not. However, I am sure that before Jeffrey Green and the Jewish community wail of injustice, they must first look within. A nation that constantly repays blood with blood, will always be forced to deal with more blood. As a wise Jew said many years ago "Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy."

Human rights platform listed

To The Editor:

Thursday evening at 7:30 in room 168 in the Campus Center, the Human Rights Party is holding a meeting. We most cordially invite all students as well as staff and faculty. We are not the old "street radicals" but want to represent a new politic. That new politic being community building, not apathy.

On May 6, the Town of Amherst is having is Town Meeting. The Human Rights Party has several pieces of legislation on the agenda. Some of them are:

Using sewage for fertilizer instead of dumping it in lakes.

A V.D. and birth-control clinic formed outside the University for the town.

Formation of a hitchhiking pull-over lane on all roads.

Construction of bike ways.

Formation of a nuclear power plant policy with the formation of a regional committee to advise on it.

Designation of certain parts of the town for nudism. (Such as lakes, parks, etc.)

The Thursday meeting is to make clear these proposals and to take opinion from concerned people on them. Once again all are welcome.

With spring having descended upon us like a cloud of swarming locusts in heat threatening to devour what little drive and initiative we may yet have toward studies or anything mentally taxing, we find ourselves wondering why donuts have holes, and why Moose mate funny. The great outdoors and the long beckoning days lure us irresistably into a state of lazy indolence. But no, not all slumbers in River City. There are those in our community plotting against the growing springtime apathy. They are out there nesting in their little burrows, insidiously plotting and steamrolling towards their trivial aims. Yes while we sun ourselves next to the Growing Pit, also known as the Campus Pond or even Southwest (Depending on your point of view) groups calling themselves Honor Societies are making their nominations for the upcoming year.

Yes, these Honor Societies who claim to claim the cream of the dream (what does that mean?) are choosing those UMies whom they consider "have made a worthy contribution to the community whilst also having maintained a real high cume and are also nice and generally smile a lot. "And people, ever pursuant of that little silver on their lapels and-or bras flock to their midst with ideas of some sort of distinction and superiority, or even graduate schools in their little minds. To our regret, even UMies, who should know better spell arrogance with a capital "A". And so these countless organizations are being filled. They range from the Eata Pizza Pie Honor Fraternity who sit around on Tuesday nights and tell Italian jokes, to the Null Set, the Math Majors Honor group whose initiation consists of calculating the volume of God without a calculator in six seconds, and spel-Hale backwards. There is also the illfamed Eager Beavers, the Women's Honor Society whose main service to the Community is to watch the clocks on Old Chapel and the Town Hall and make sure that they are synchronized. Then there is Sig Ni Fy Nothing, the Dining Commons Workers Honor Society whose main service to the University seems to be in their sending nineteen crates of the infamous Shrimp Shapes to Argentina for some real meat. We can't afford of course to leave out Cramma Cramma Crammit, the Jock Honor Fraternity whose motto is "Rapus, Pillagus et Lux" and whose main function seems to be to lobby for the establishment of a Budweiser Refinery in Amherst (pipelines lost so much in the process.)

But don't despair sports fans, because all is not lost. There is in existence one Special Society of noteworthy distinction here at UMass that puts the aforementioned number to a pitiful and ignominious shame. They call themselves the Grits. I had the pleasure of talking to the President of the Grits whose name is Bartholomew Bogus, last week while he was thumbing over to Pufton Village.

Z.N. "Tell me Bart, what is the Philosophy of the Grits?"

Bogus: "I'm glad you asked me that question. We don't get much exposure you know. The Grits are a Dishonorable Society open to all University Students, Faculty and Staff who are sick and tired of the whole thing, and love it. We feel that a high cume and service to the community in UMies are a contradiction in terms. We like people who realize that "Everything Sucks" which of course is our motto, and who live their lives in that manner. Why pursue distinction and superiority when the only marker everybody ends up with anyway is a stone slab?"

Z.N.: "Thats a very interesting observation. But how do you see yourself as compared to the rest of the community and what is your function within that structure?"

Bogus: "I'm tickled you tossed that at me. We Grits are definitely inferior to the rest of the world in brains, money looks drive and intelligence. But because we know that, we are better off than the rest because we can deal with it. And the truth is that everybody is just as inferior as us only some won't admit it. The world is one mass of mediocrity—some know it and some don't. The only superior beings on earth are the infamous Joe College, Henry Ragin and Mrs. Carl Yastrzemski speaking for Gulden's mustard. Our function is to let people know that there are lower depths that they can sink into."

Z.N.: "How does one join the Grits?"

Bogus: "I'm pleased as punch you asked me that. Well we meet every night of the week at the Drake. All a prospective member has to do is to come in, stand on a table and yell "IT'S NOT MY FAULT!!!!" and we will welcome him-her with open arms and an embracing spirit."

OH!! THE PAIN!!! OF!!! IT ALL!!!!!

Zamir Nestelbaum is a Collegian Columnist

Mike

Henault

The Ragin faction

Fairy tales, 1920 movies, and Ionesco were among the obvious metaphors which the line of journalists tested out on each other while the balloting for SGA president rolled on. The Collegian's columnists were arranged by the days they appear on the Ed pages, seeming as comic as the rest of political slush. Not that they played the role of the smug observer, in fact, Matt Tackeff fed the crowd a page and a half of his most crass quips. Bob Estelle introduced Nick Apostola's well practiced imitation of Groucho Marx. Meanwhile Zamir Nestelbaum cursed area governments and Cindy McGrath through his teeth. Even the beautiful Barbara Voorhees was pulled into the gestalt occasionally throwing in a YAYEEE Henry while waving her yellow daffodil in the air.

No one really wanted to make the whole thing seriously. It was difficult to even attempt. A David Brinkley breakdown might be as fatuous as guest starring Ralph Nader on Kung Fu.

But there seemed to be an inkling of sense to the greatest collection of campus characters since the hey-days of Eric Walgren and Oswald Tippo.

There was the senate group, the people in power, and the others; the Ragin fun-time hell-with-amendment to-the-amendment anarchists and the HEY ELECT US AND We'll do something different Clancy and Erwin people, the people on the outside.

Savini won the election and that means the senate people won. Anyone who couldn't figure that beforehand didn't listen well to their Poli-Sci lectures. The senate cast half the votes necessary to elect the SGA. Ragin's promise to abolish the senate, needless to say, did not endear him to the senate. The senate cast half the votes necessary to elect the president of the SGA so it's simply logical that it chose last night's candidate as it did last year (Ragin ran then also). A lot of people don't like that, especially the people who are not in the senate.

That's what the Ragin factor was all about. His support ranged from Tackeff, a conservative and senate phobe, to Apostola, the "almost impeached" SGA president. It's only coherency was its deep adhering hatred of student government and the way it operates.

Their campaign was a joke, a genuinely funny one at that. But the victor's of Monday night's Mardi Gras had better think about what it was they exactly won. The Ragin supporters absurdist affront to student government was more serious than it seemed. All those students yelling FUCK THE SENATE and ABOLISH THE STUDENT ACTIVITIES TAX are merely the tip of an iceberg-sized feeling on campus. Something is wrong.

Next year when almost surely there will be a popularly elected SGA president. The aristocratic antechambers of the senate will be in a different position then. They may even be on the outside looking in. Disenchantment and the Ragin factor can't be ignored.

Foolish committee

Only one concert in the last two years at UMass has not lost money. And that, a modest Bonnie Raitt set in a Dining Commons, was largely produced by an outside group. All other concerts on campus have been financially marred by bad taste, bad politics, bad timing or bad luck to an excessive degree. The Concert Committee in particular has been guilty of extreme foolishness, to the tune of $15,000 lost this year.

The Collegian calls for a complete restructuring, hopefully into one streamlined group that will know its business, of the groups who have done such a poor job of presenting music to this community. There is an immediate need for an end to the ineptitude and often conflicting interests of the groups now mainly involved, Concert Committee and Program Council.

The Collegian also calls for such measures to be taken now, so work may begin immediately with Boyden in regards to the thorny path to the Cage, and in making arrangementw with the new Fine Arts Center hall.

This nonsense has gone on long enough. There is no reason that this campus cannot support several high-quality concerts a year. There is no excuse for the last three years of silence.

Weekday library

UMass has always been a hard place to study on weekends. Social pressure and various events have often been known to lure UMies away from their books and destroy many a dream of scholastic achievements. Now the task is nearly impossible with the University Library closing at 8:00 and 6:00 on weekend nights and Morrill closing early too.

The reason for the early closing is the energy crisis which is very understandable. Between the Hatch, the Bluewall, and various other parties with bands there is a large electricity drain on Friday and Saturday nights. However there is no reason why those students who wish to study should compromise the library.

The University should seek other ways to economize than closing the library. Perhaps in the meantime at least the basement could be opened and if necessary the other general study areas.

Letters Policy

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian welcomes all letters to the editor. They must be signed, and include the author's address and phone number. Also, all letters must be typed, double-spaced, at sixty spaces per line, and no more than two pages.

Organizations may submit letters, but they must include a name and phone number for reference purposes.

All letters are subject to editing, for either content or space. according to the judgement of the editors. Due to space limitations, there is no guarantee that all letters received will be printed.

Bilingual Ed. offerings

The Bilingual Bicultural Education Professions Program of the School of Education is presently interviewing candidates for acceptance into the programs. There are two programs presently being offered for undergraduates, elementary and secondary.

The elementary school teacher preparation program requires students to major in Education. Each student's program of study is individually worked out in conjunction with the program's student advisor to provide for maximum benefit and utility. In addition, each student will take a sequence of courses necessary for certification or required for all undergraduates in the program. These include Theory of Communication, Curriculum Development and Adaptation, Philosophy of Education, Methods of teaching in the Vernacular and Supervised Student Teaching.

The secondary school preparation program is geared toward students majoring in Spanish, Mathematics, the Sciences and Social Studies as well as other certifiable areas who are also interested in teaching in bilingual bicultural classrooms. The program will provide a strong minor (21-24 credits) leading to certification. These courses will include Philosophy of Education, Curriculum Development, Theory of Communication, Methods, and Supervised Student Teaching.

Both programs require that applicants have sufficient competency in English and in Spanish to be able to teach in both languages. In addition, the program actively seeks students with an openness and willingness to pursue a rigorous program of study involving both theoretical and field work. Bilingual Bicultural Education, an alternative to the traditional educational programs, attempts to prepare teachers to work with children whose language and culture are different from those of the monolingual child in the dominant culture. Presently there is a Bilingual Education law which mandates instruction in the native language of children in a school district who speak a common other language and who have difficulty learning in English.

The Bilingual Education program is initially focusing on native Spanish speakers, but will be expanding to include programs for Portuguese, French, Italian, Chinese and other as finances and additional staffing allow. In addition, a program is being planned to prepare teachers of English as a Second Language; the projected date is Spring 1975.

We recommend that students interested in bilingual bicultural education contact the program office as early in their academic career as possible since there is much more information they should know. For further information, call us at 545-1506 or write to: Edward Sotolongo, Bilingual Bicultural Education Program, School of Education, Room 225B.

Chem. Engineering awarded grant

The Department of Chemical Engineering at UMass has been awarded an $8000 grant from the Polaroid Foundation to support an undergraduate community service scholars program.

The purpose of the program is to give selected students field experience while contributing professionally to society through a local or state agency. The students will be able to apply their engineering skills to real life problems and they will have the opportunity to interact in a working environment with people of other professions.

A potential list of agencies for which a student could work are the Lower Pioneer Valley Air Pollution Control District; Town of Amherst Planning Office; Institute for Man and His Environment, (work on environmental impact problems); as a technical aide to a state representative or senator; or in Cooley Dickinson Hospital to work on artificial kidney design or patient monitoring.

Students will receive a stipend of $2000 a year while they are engaged in the program. They will be able to work for any non-profit public or private agency. The initial grant will be used to support three students, a freshman, a sophomore, and a junior. Additional industrial support for the community scholars program will be sought.

Impeach campaign

National Campaign to Impeach Nixon, said yesterday simultaneous efforts are also planned for Los Angeles and Chicago.

"We think this is only the beginning; there's certainly potential in the future for amuch larger demonstration," Coyle said.

"Too many Americans are watching on television and trusting Congress to deal with Nixon. We think that only the people can make it happen."

Coyle said the groups will gather around the Lincoln Memorial at 11 Saturday morning and will march down Constitutional Avenue to the Capitol for a 1:00 rally.

Speakers will include David Dillinger; of the Chicago 7 and Liberation Magazine, Beulah Sanders; of National Welfare Reform Organization, Dolores Huerta, vice president of the United Farm Workers and Cong. Parren Mitchell, D-Baltimore and a member of the Black Caucus.

Phil Ochs and Blue Grass will be featured in rock music and black blues following the rally.

Over 25 booths will be arranged to enlighten the public on the impeachment issue.

Frederickson said he would man a table on the Campus Center Concourse level from 11 to 3 daily to accept registration for the buses and to get signatures on a statement requesting Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Pittsfield to favor impeachment.

The Amherst-based impeachment activity has been simmering for weeks with no apparent mass interest.

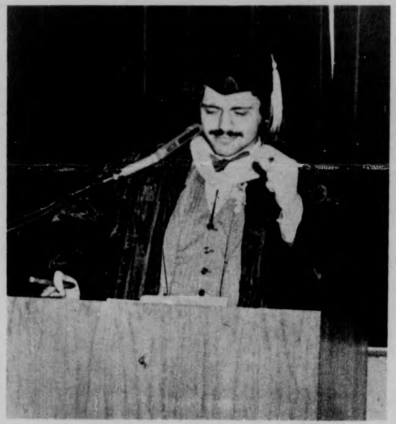
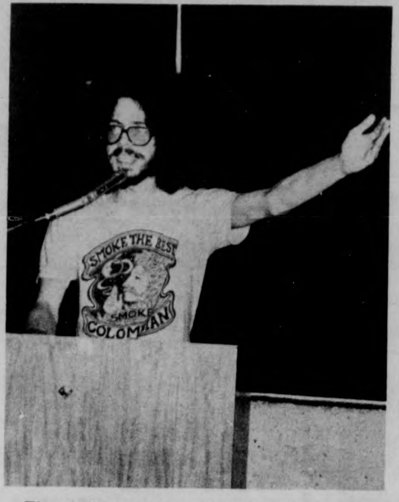
Power to the people:

The SGA Circus



Henry Ragin's staunchest supporter, Nick "Groucho" Apostola, outgoing SGA president. Who says student government is a joke?



The main man himself. His platform-the abolishon of student government.

There was no apathy in the Ragin delegation As their man approached the podium.

Prior to the voting, a victory parade was held.

Monday night the student senate elected a new president and proved once again that student government does serve a useful purpose. It provides great entertainment for those who know enough to come to the annual presidential elections. So for all you unfortunates who missed the circus this year, this is a sample of what went on. Be sure not to miss it next year. Best of all, it is all paid for by your student activities fee - there is no admission charge.

ECONOMIC ANTHROPOLOGY: Office Hours: To be determined, Office: 203 Machmer Hall. Organization: Three 50 minute lectures per week. Aim: This course will survey the patterns of production, distribution and consumption in traditional societies as well as the social and political matricies of these patterns. Aim: Anthropology 104, Lecture 1 (together with discussion sections 1A through 12A) is a new course, especially designed for the nonmajor interested in acquiring a general anthropology background. Despite the fact that the number indicates that the course is cultural anthropology, the content will range over the entire spectrum of contemporary anthropological concerns. The format of the course is based on presentations by various members of the department of their special areas of competence and interest. The purpose of the discussion sections will be to place each lecture topic in the broader context of anthropology as a whole and to relate anthropological insights to relevant issues of our times. Readings: To be determined later. Requirements: There will be two examinations during the semester, but no overall final examination. Pre-requisites: None. Added Notes: This course cannot be counted toward credit for the Anthropology major. Students interested in an introductory course in Cultural Anthropology should enroll in Professor Fraser's Anthropology 104, Lecture 2.

A 2 credit course AQUATICS: PRACTICUM IN SELECTED AREAS OF DISABILITIES will be offered for a six week period (June 10-July 19) through the School of Physical Education. The course is for persons interested in working with handicapped individuals in aquatics and will focus on a 3 or 4 week teaching experience. The visitors will be patients from the VA Hosp. of Northampton, University handicapped students and perhaps patients from the Belchertown State School.

The class will meet each day in the No. Phys. Educ. Gym from 10:15 to 11:15 a.m. for teaching sessions. In addition, once a week a 2 hr. lecture and training session will be conducted by class arrangement to include skills essential for teaching the handicapped to swin, pathology of specific handicaps, field trips, and safety procedures relating to disabilities. The prerequisite is proficiency in basic swimming skills and ease in deep water.

Anyone intending to enroll in the course OR any student with a physical or sensory disability who wants swimming lessons should call: Prof. Esther Wallace 549-0411 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. or 4 to 6 p.m.

Next time you see someone polluting, point it out.

You know what pollution is.

But not everyone does.

So the next time you see pollution, don't close your eyes to it.

Write a letter. Make a call. Point it out to someone who can do something about it.

People start pollution. People can stop it.

Cole on racism

Robert Cole of the University of Massachusetts Economics Department, will speak on the topic of racism tonight at 8:00 p.m. in S.B.A. 120. The discussion, the third in the Student Volunteer Services film and lecture series, will be concerned with the interdependance of racism and capitalism. Dr. Cole will discuss racism from an historical view as well as the present situation. The elimination of racism through socialism will also be discussed.

The Student Volunteer Services film and lecture series has thus far presented lectures about sexism and alcoholism. The purpose of the series is to present some problems that currently face American society and offer some possible alternatives to the existing order. Upcoming in the series are a performance by the Cell Block Theatre and a presentation about China.

Research seminar

The Student Interest Research Seminar will be offered in conjunction with the Student Center for Educational Research. The participants in the seminar will carry out research into various programs and policies of the University of Mass. with the purpose of producing reports about education at UMass. Students will work collectively in research teams, studying a different aspect of the University, and will write reports for publication and campus-wide distribution. This fall semester's research topics will (probably) include the counselling study which began last semester, as well as a study of dormitory environments.

All students will participate in a weekly session which will provide basic research skills, discussion and general coordination. The weekly meetings will make use of outside speakers. Students will also meet with a research team as necessary to carry out their specific research projects. The course is open to all University students, but an interview with the instructor is necessary. The instructor is a full-time coordinator of the Student Center for Educational Research.

This is a three credit course and is offered through the residence colleges. Credit can also be arranged through the School of Education.

MassPIRG reports

Should non-maidens lose their names?

By STEVE DeLANCEY
Mass PIRG Intern

—Last week: MassPIRG Reports reviewed the PIRG's efforts to get a 'bottle-ban' bill passed into law in Mass.—

The Massachusetts Joint Committee on the Judiciary voted to kill Senate Bill No. 197 last week — a bill which would have enabled a woman to retain her maiden name after marriage by simply indicating this preference on her marriage certificate. This action by the committee was taken only a year after the legislature unanimously passed the State Equal Rights Amendment.

The committee's decision came more than a month after the March 12 hearing on the bill and represented one more example of hesitation on the part of the legislature to give the Equal Rights Amendment any meaning beyond bureaucratic rhetoric.

Nikki Ross, a UMass senior in the Legal Studies Program, presented testimony for MassPIRG at the hearing in support of the bill. Working with the PIRG this semester, Nikki invested a good deal of time and effort in coordinating support for the maiden-name bill and making the legislators aware that there is considerable interest in and need for the bill.

Nikki saw the passage of such a bill necessary as a first step toward helping women to be more conscious of their own identities rather than merely an extension of their husbands. The negative action taken by the committee came as somewhat of a surprise to her and only helped to reaffirm her belief that we are still living in a highly oppressive, sex-discriminatory society.

There are no federal or state laws that require a woman to change her name to that of her husband's after marriage except in the state of Hawaii. The precedent in the other states developed from traditional moral theories that were applied to legal cases concerning automobile insurance and voter registration and from common, customary usage.

Massachusetts common law concerning the use of names permits every individual to assume any name they choose as long as that name is used non-fraudulently. Currently, however, a Mass. woman who wishes to retain her maiden name must go through an expensive and complicated procedure in probate court where she is asked to show cause as to why she wishes to do so. Court costs, lawyer's fees, and the cost of having copies made of birth certificates and other documents bring the cost of exercising this right up around $200.00.

Some women, after having gone through these legal hassles, have still been denied the right to use their maiden names for voter registration and other legal purposes by city and town bureaucrats who mistakenly assume that there is some sort of law that requires a married woman to use her husbands' surname.

Senate Bill No. 197 would have helped to clear up the confusion clouding this issue. It would have provided a simple means by which a married woman could exercise her right to use any name she wishes without harassment by misinformed individuals. It would have informed all women of the options open to them. And it would have supplied any woman who needed it with documentation in the form of the marriage certificate that would be as conclusive and official as a probate court decree in proving the legality of her name.

When the legislature voted 22 to 17 last year to return a number of similar bills to the Committee on the Judiciary for further study, they cited a number of reasons for this action. Some felt that the passage of such a bill would cause tax mixups and confusion about the succession of property. Others felt that such a bill would effect the whole structure of the family and would "cause confusion, embarrassment and awkward feelings for children".

While the second reason could be true to some degree, the institution of the family certainly seems to be out of the realm of legislative lawmaking. The first supposition, however is entirely untrue. Tax records are kept by social security number and would be unaffected by a change or by no change in name. The recording of this information at the time of marriage would assure the accuracy of state records and rather than confusing other records, the keeping of the maiden name would make things easier — there would be no need for a change of employment records, social security card, driver's license, educational records, stock certificates, or insurance policies.

The states of Maryland, Ohio, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and Maine have already passed bills into law that are similar to Senate No. 197. The negative action by the Massachusetts legislature is another example of how that body continually stalls on issues. When the State Equal Rights Amendment becomes a part of the State Constitution in a few years, any presumption that a woman's name is automatically changed to that of her husband will be rebutted.

The conservative legislature, however, is always resistant to change. Senator Fishman of Newton, speaking about the opposition to the maiden name bills last year said, "There are those who insist on being dragged, kicking and screaming from the 19th century to the 20th". MassPIRG is one group that is actively involved in this often frustrating act of dragging.

—Next week: The last word; My semester with MassPIRG in retrospect.—

COLLEGIAN RECRUITMENT MEETING

The Collegian and Below the Salt are prepared to beg, borrow and steal fellow students to work with us at producing a daily newspaper and weekly arts magazine.

It seems some people think they have to have had at least four years experience to work here. Not so. We welcome pros and rookies and anyone in between.

We particularly need freshmen and sophomores in any capacity or interest to fill out or staff for next year. We are also looking for a new crop of advertisement salesmen who are paid on commission by the number of ads they sell in the area for publication.

Human Rights meeting

The Human Rights Movement is calling a meeting for people who want to get involved in local politics. At 7:30 on April 25 in the Campus Center, Room 168-170, we're meeting to coordinate preparations for the May 6th Town Meeting. We want to build a popular base for action, including faculty and staff, as well as students.

The H.R.M. has presented Articles to be voted on in Town Meeting under these general headings:

—Opposition to the Pioneer Valley nuclear power plant.

--Five dollar fine for possession of Marijuana (as in Ann Arbor, Mich.)

—Safer hitch-hiking (including "Safe-Ride" stickers and pullover lanes)

—Bikeways throughout town.

—Elimination of auto congestion and encouraging use of Parks.

—Peacekeeping. Legalizing: streaking, balloon and kite flying in Town.

Help is needed to research the laws in these areas. There's also a chance to get some practical political experience lobbying with other Town Meeting Members.

The H.R.M. is an organization to provide a voice for those not in power. Students, faculty, and citizens are welcome.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Cancer can be protective to such an extent that simple affection goes by the wayside. These natives maintain a poppa or mamma knows best demeanor, and the results can be grating. Overall, Cancer wants what is best for loved ones but doesn't always do what leads to this objective. Cancer persons are moody, sensitive, subject to dramatic outbursts and especially happy when dining. Cancer can save money and leftovers. This is the individual who is loving, who cares but who not always receives credit for being sensitive or creative. Cancer is misunderstood — and the cause is difficult to define. Cancer can love and fight and alienate those who, in actuality, should be valuable allies.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You have more freedom of thought, action. You are in better position to test, experiment. Change, travel and variety are featured. Gemini, Virgo persons figure prominently. Short trips, visits and dealings with relatives are featured.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money and how to save it — that could be a major question. Be a comparison shopper, especially where special or luxury item is concerned. Family member expects surprise. Don't disappoint. You need not be extravagant in order to please loved one. Maintain balance — and humor.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Cycle is such that you can call your own shots. Those who try to convince you otherwise are either envious, resentful or misinformed. Choose quality. Refine techniques. Stick to your own style. Lead the way.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Study Gemini message. You seem to have some associates who start senseless rumors. Heed your own counsel. Deal from position of strength. Refuse to be dismayed by false reports, alarms. Capricorn will aid.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You reach more people — response to your efforts is enthusiastic and encouraging. Aries, Libra persons figure prominently. Crunch situation exists where special relationship is concerned. It is a new beginning — or the end.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You make progress by skipping middlemen and going directly to source. Be independent engough to assert, declare and explain in positive manner. Leo, Aquarius persons could play significant roles. Aura of drama, challenge prevails.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Now your philosophy jells; you know what it is to seek, search and to find — you get in touch with yourself. Accent higher education, spiritual values. Read, write — broaden horizons. Communicate your needs and they will be fulfilled.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Highlight flexibility. Deal with one who holds key to financial gain. Refuse to be painted into corner by someone's preconceived notions. Study Virgo message for valid hint. You gain valuable ally by following through on hunch.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Emphasis is on commitment. You are not as free to roam as in recent past. Questions arise concerning contracts, marriage, joint efforts, partnerships. Frank talk with Aquarian should be on agenda. There is way to meet obligation without becoming emotionally smothered.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Health and rest, work and recreation — these areas command attention. Practical issues dominate and greater communication is necessary. Gemini, Virgo persons figure prominently. Steady approach is now more constructive than apparent, speedy pace. Be aware of essentials.

Celts seek to oust Knicks

BOSTON [AP] — The Boston Celtics, bent on a showdown with the might Milwaukee Bucks, seek to finish off the New York Knicks Wednesday night in the fifth game of their National Basketball Association playoff series.

"The Knicks still are a darn good ball club, but I think maybe we're ready to wrap this one up," Boston Coach Tommy Heinsohn said Tuesday after sending the Celtics through a spirited practice.

The Celtics took a commanding 3-1 lead in the best-of-seven Eastern Division final with a 98-91 victory in New York Sunday. The Madison Square Garden organist played "The Party's Over" at the finish, and that's just about how everyone felt.

The Knicks don't have much going for them while on the brink of elimination in defense of the NBA championship. However, if it's any help, there's the obvious knowledge that the visiting team has won the last three games in the current series.

The Celtics are in top shape and must guard only against looking ahead to the championship round with Milwaukee, which swept the Chicago Bulls four straight in the Western Division final.

"We still have to win one more in this series," Heinsohn said.

While the Celtics are healthy, the Knicks still are hurting, particularly veterans Willis Reed and Dave DeBusschere, two old Boston nemesis.

Reed, a big, rugged center, has been ineffective because of his bad knees. He had fluid drained from his left knee Tuesday and accompanied the team to Boston. However, his status for the game Wednesday night is uncertain.

DeBusschere, who is retiring after the playoffs to become general manager of the New York Nets in the American Basketball Association, is plagued by a nagging stomach pull. It bothers his running and rebounding.

Somehow, the Knicks are going to have to find a way to stop Boston captain Hohn Havlicek, who has been hot in all departments since the start of the playoffs.

Havlicek has assumed the role of scorer as well as being the court general. He hit for 36 points in the fourth game, virtually burying the Knicks.

"Someone always has assumed the role of scorer on this club," Havlicek explained. "Fellows such as Heinsohn and Bob Cousy did it in the past. Now it's up to me. When I leave, it will be Jo Jo White, Dave Cowens or someone else. It's no big thing, it's just a job."

Women's softball team faces Southern Connecticut

UMass hopes for hot bats

By DAVE VARG

It could be said that the task facing the women's softball team this afternoon is on the Hurculean side. Todays opposition, Southern Connecticut has already defeated Springfield (the same group that beat UMass 11-1) quite convincingly.

If UMass doesn't hit the ball better today, the afternoon could be a long one. Likewise the defense must surpass Monday's performance. In short, a relatively flawless game is necessary if UMass is to stay close.

Southern Conn. has quite the softball team. They hit the ball with authority against the extremely fast pitching of Springfield (a task UMass was less than successful at). This is the first time in recent years that these two schools have met, so not much more is known about this potent foe.

Micki Locke will do the hurling for UMass today. She pitched well for the j.v.'s in Monday's game. The game will begin at 3:00 with the varsity contest going first.

Today is certainly a good time for the women to put everything together and even-off their record, which stands 0-1. But if the game accomplishes nothing else it will be a fine warmup for Saturday's benefit game against 10 time world champs, the Raybestos Brakettes.

Second of two parts

The art of judo, a way of life

Editor's note — This is the second part of a two-part series on judo. The Collegian apologizes to the author and our readers for the delay in printing.

Judo techniques were so designed as to practice complete form, without pulling back, with no injury to another skilled in falling. Doing anything that would deliberately hurt anyone in judo practice is contrary to judo philosophy.

In free practice, randori, judokas are free to apply all the judo knowledge they have to throw, hold down, choke, or armlock the opponent. Resistance and counters to techniques are permitted. Randori teaches calmness yet responsiveness. One cannot plan for an attack in a specific way. Everyone moves differently than ourselves. There are some basic self-defense moves practiced in judo. But, in a real self-defense situation, spontaneity, reacting without thinking, moving with the opponent is most imperative. Randori teaches this. It is a process of self discovery. Here judo becomes a reflection of the personality; an exercise, as in zen, in selflessness. The mind must remove itself from attachments to emotions such as frustration and anger.

Heaven and earth last forever.
Why do they last forever?
They are unborn,
So ever living.
The sage stays behind, thus he is ahead.
He is detached, thus at one with all.
Through selfless action, he attains fulfillment. 2

Shiai, or judo competition, is another element of judo. Jigoro Kano never intended shiai to be the main focus in judo, but as a learning tool, a chance to test judo ability against other judokas. It is a unique way to discover what mistakes we make, and what strong points we have. In a judo tournament the player has only one chance. If a judoka is thrown, held down, choked out or armlocked once, he is eliminated. This naturally creates a large amount of pressure on both players. Shiai teaches judokas to deal with this pressure, in shiai or on the streets. Among advanced players, the judo match becomes similar to Hesses' Glass Bead Game. An esoteric exercise demanding creative, harmonious, and spontaneous mental and physical exertion.

A good soldier is not violent.
A good fighter is not angry.
A good winner is not vengeful.
A good employer is humble.
This is known as the virtue of not striving.
This is known as ability to deal with people.
This since ancient times has been known as the ultimate unity with heaven.

Kata or judo forms of prearranged exercises displays the essence of judo. Kata teaches proper form, mental attitude, judo ceremony, self defense, harmony and balance. Ju-no-kata, forms of gentleness, is a particularly beautiful kata usually performed by women. In this kata, thrower never throws attacker, but gracefully unbalances and lifts the attacker with "gentleness and suppleness". it somewhat resembles a wonderfully coordinated dance. Some of the other judo katas are: nage-no-kata, forms of throwing; katame-no kata, forms of matwork; goshin jitsu, self defense forms; and others. Higher grade brownbelts and all black belts are required to demonstrate kata.

Concluding, judo becomes more than its physical practice. It becomes a way of life. Jigoro Kano said of his judo:

Judo is the way to the most effective use of both physical and spiritual strength. By training you in attacks and defenses it refines your body and your soul and helps you make the spiritual essence of judo a part of your very being. In this way you are able to perfect yourself and contribute something of value to the world. This is the final goal of judo discipline.

BOSTON [AP] — Buck Martinez' single knocked in the winning run during a three-run, ninth-inning rally that carried the Kansas City Royals to a 5-2 baseball triumph over the Boston Red Sox Tuesday.

Vada Pinson reached first on a force-out bouncer, stole second, made third on a base hit by Al Cowens and came home with the tie-breaking run on Martinez' hit to deep short.

Carl Yastrzemski continued his hot hitting for the Red Sox with a double and two singles.

Whelan makes finals of World U Games

By WALT POWERS
MDC Staff

All-American Gene Whelan's Collegiate future was placed in doubt by the Athletic Department's phasedown decision. But that didn't stop him from finishing third behind two Olympians in the U.S. Gymnastics Federation's Eastern trials this past weekend, at East Stroudsburg State College in Pennsylvania.

His third place finish behind Marshall Avener and John Crosby means that qualified him for the U.S.G.A. finals next month at Berkley, California. The top six finishers there qualify for the World Games next fall.

Whelan, who finished with 105.55 points, broke in only one of his twelve routines and conceivably could have beaten Avener, who won with a score of 107.25, and Crosby, who finished second with 106.55.

But the UMass junior wasn't up emotionally for the meet, and played his routines as safely as possible.

"We didn't think Gene would have much trouble making the top six" said his coach, Tom Dunn, "and he didn't train too hard for this. Whelan was psyched for the Easterns, and NCAA's, and we wanted to save his best effort for the finals."

The other qualifiers were Penn State's Jim Kruest with 103.65 points, Gene's twin brother Jay, from Southern Connecticut with 103.05 points, and former U.S. Olympian Jim Culhane with 101.85.

BC drops netmen

By GLENN POSTER

Boston College still holds some sort of jinx on UMass this year. The latest victim was the tennis team which made the trek to Chestnut Hill on Monday. Although the Minutemen lost their third match of the year, play was a lot closer than the final 6-3 margin indicated. "It was a helluva match, they played terrific," according to Coach Steve Kosakowki.

There was an interesting match-up in the number one singles. Bob Schpeiser went up against BC's Ted Bassett. Bassett, a graduating senior, was accepted to UMass and planned on going to school here. Well, things changed and Bassett wound up on the Heights. Bassett won the match in three sets, although Schpeiser came back in the second and third.

Another eventful match was in store for the second seeds. Don Douglas went the full three sets to defeat the Eagles' Chris Whitney. Douglas played tremendous, coming from behind all the way, including in the final decisive set. And according to Coach Kosakowki, "It was the best played match since I've been coaching here." (which is quite a compliment since Kos has been the tennis mentor at UMass for a quarter of a century.)

The third seed, Mark Brass, couldn't get untracked and lost in three sets. Elsewhere down the line in singles, Barnaby Kalan, number four, won in straight sets; Fred Braley lost to a hot player from Puerto Rico; and Chris Post won his match playing as the sixth seed. This was the first action for Post in a week and a half as he has been sick. He last saw court time in the Bowdoin encounter when one of his singles rallies lasted the duration of 118 balls.

At the start of doubles play the match was dead even, 3-3. The number one duo of Schpeiser and Douglas had their undefeated string broken, losing in three sets. The second team of Brass and Kalan was a big disappointment as they just didn't have it.

Third doubles was the closest match of the day. Despite bowing out in straight sets, Fred Braley and Dave Abramoff gave it their best. They lost the first set 5-7, and the second on a tie-breaker, 6-7. They finished at the same time as Schpeiser and Douglas. Both matches could have gone wither way. And if they had gone the other way, UMass would have come home with a 5-4 victory over a strong BC team. But 'if' is the biggest word in sports.

UMass Gorillas Upend BC, 13-8

By MIKE ELLIOTT

BOSTON — The rains poured down and as they slowly subsided Boston College was subjected to another deluge — this one an outburst of UMass goals, as Garber's Gorillas defeated BC 13-8.

Both teams traded goals in the first couple of minutes of the first quarter but then came the outburst of UMass goals. The Gorillas poured in six straight goals by the BC netminder. Peter Connolly and Jeff Spooner netted two scores apiece, while Harry McVey, Jack Moran, and Billy Collins each had one.

Although the field was soaked Garber's Gorillas displayed some fine lacrosse in that first half. They played excellent defense, limiting BC to two goals. They also passed and ran well. The fifth UMass goal typified their fine execution. The score came after some excellent passing by Peter Connolly and Jack Moran. it was a classic example of the UMass fast break.

In the second half UMass relaxed somewhat on defense. Boston College collected five goals in the third period alone. BC attackman Ed Sullivan was responsible for scoring four out of those five.

The Gorillas' offense matched Boston College's in scoring but the BC netminder kept his team in the game. He robbed Umass on several excellent scoring opportunities.

One of the prettiest goals of the day came as a result of a fast break. Attackman Connolly collected a neat pass from goalie John Rutledge then the ball was relayed from McVey to Spooner for the score. Spooner tallied again for UMass in the second half and other scorers were Steve Pappas (2), Hirsch Scidman and John Martin.

The Gorillas return home to face Holy Cross on Thursday at 3:00 p.m.

Lacrosse Notes ... Attackman Harry McVey was top scorer in the game, scoring one goal and assisting on six other UMass scores ... Jeff Spooner also had another four goal game giving him seventeen goals for the season ... In the national lacrosse poll out this week, UMass remained in ninth place followed by Brown ... Maryland and Johns Hopkins also retained the top two spots ... Other games this week: at Williams College, this Saturday and at Amherst College on Monday...

Bruins blow third period lead ot'd 4-3 by Pappin and Hawks

By JOE MOOSHYL
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO [AP] — Jim Pappin's goal at 8:18 of a sudden-death overtime gave the Chicago Black Hawks a 4-3 victory over the Boston Bruins Tuesday night and a 2-1 edge in their best-of-seven semifinal Stanley Cup playoff series.

The Hawks, trailing 3-1 early in the third period got a pair of goals from Stan Mikita, including one with 41 seconds to play in regulation time to tie the contest and send it into overtime.

The Hawks came out smiling in the overtime period and never let up their attack until Pappin ended the game with his winning goal.

Game No. 4 will be played in Chicago Thursday night and the fifth game is set for Boston Sunday. If a sixth game is needed it will be played in Chicago next Tuesday.

Ken Hodge gave the Bruins a 3-1 lead at 4:53 of the third period, but Chicago's Stan Mikita closed the margin with a goal at 11:38.

The two teams traded a series of penalties and it looked as if Boston would wrap it up in regulation time until Mikita scored his fifth playoff goal at 18:18 to force the game into overtime.

The Bruins took the lead on a power play goal at 13:18 of the first period. Boston forced goalie Tony Esposito on his stomach and after Ken Hodge was repelled on three poke shots at Esposito, Carol Vadnais skated in and shoved the puck passed the prone Chicago goalie.

Early in the second period, Bobby Orr drew a penalty for holding and the Hawks cashed in to tie the game on a shot from the point by Bill White at 3:09.

Boston took a 2-1 lead at 16:39 when Gregg Sheppard, getting a pass from John Bucyk, shuttled the puck into the Chicago net.

Gymnastics — — Math

To the average sports fan, gymnastics is something you watch on TV Saturday afternoons, right after Evil Knievel, and just before the world skeet shooting championships.

It is not a sport to get excited over. Sure, its participants must be highly skilled. Sure, many people see great beauty in a well-performed routine. But to Joe Fan, the sight of some guy suspended on rings above a bunch of mattresses, going through all kinds of contortions, usually brings the puzzled response, "Why is that man up there making like Gumby?"

And, oh, the scoring system! 7.5, 9.4, 8.2, 6.333, 11.8? Final score: 154.88 to 154.56. Makes one think integers have been outlawed.

The sport is just too darn esoteric.

It's like chess. Some people are really into it, but many, many more are not. Compared to the meat-and-potato sports — football, basketball, baseball, and hockey — gymnastics is dull.

Due to inflation and a lack of funds in the athletic department, the men's gymnastics program at UMass is being de-emphasized. This is no great blow to the average campus sports follower.

Of course, it's a tragic break for the gymnasts, whose careers are now floating in Limbo.

But from the perspective of the student-fan, if there had to be a cutback, better for it to be in gymnastics than in football or basketball.

Because football and hoop are the only bonafide spectator sports at the university, they are the ones that should receive first consideration in financial matters. Other sports like gymnastics are nice to have around, but they're second-fiddle in terms of student interest.

Although the men's gymnastics program is presently, like the football and basketball teams, semi-bigtime, its squad members are as anonymous as Boyden's janitors. Rabid fans, who can reel off the names of the starters, principal subs, assistant coaches, and water boys of the two major sports, suddenly turn mute when asked who's the best guy on the pommel horse for UMass.

If each student were given the option of naming a men's gymnast or being shot, there'd be more carcasses on campus than in North Village.

There's a petition circulating for support to keep the team at its present status. Despite the low esteem of the sport here, the petition undoubtedly will get a lot of Hancocks. Regardless of their real viewpoint, most people, when politely asked, will sign any petition short of calling for "the systematic liquidation of all left-handed-people".

But all the signatures from here to China wouldn't change the department's mind, and what's more, nobody (besides the gymnasts themselves) would really care. Few would notice the disappearance of a national-calibre gymnastics team, mainly because few noticed it was here in the first place.

Alabama's Bear Bryant once defended the role of college football this way: "Did you ever see the student body rally around a math class?"

Just replace "math class" with "gymnastics team" and you've summed up the situation. The similarity with math is threefold. They're both hard-to-understand, and difficult to sit through.

And both involve a lot of decimal points.

Decision came at wrong time

By STEVE DECOSTA

Editor's note: The following is the fifth in a series of articles by a special Collegian investigating team about the recent decision to phase down the UMass gymnastics program.

From all that has transpired in the recent controversy of gymnastics, it has become evident that the phase-down of the program from its present level was predicated by one major concern: money.

The question that still remains, however, is whether concern was grave enough at this point in time to warrant such action.

The first major money concern revolves around the salary of Tom Dunn. The gymnastics coach was paid out of a trust fund that had previously remained untouched.

The athletic trust fund consists of money set aside from vending subsidies and revenue remaining from the telecast of a UMass-Dartmouth football game several years ago. The reason for maintaining such a fund, according to Athletic Director Frank McInerney, was to "protect us from a disaster at the (football) gate."

Such a disaster has yet to occur at the Alumni Stadium gates. So, in effect, the department is holding money to guard against an event that does not threaten to, and maybe never will occur.

Another concern prompting this decision is the cost sustained in sponsoring the gymnastics program.

"We're probably talking now about $20,000," said financial manager Al Rufe.

But that amount is barely a drop in the bucket in a budget of over a half million dollars. "We're not sure of the exact amount, but it's estimated to be about $569,000," Rufe said.

Actually, this figure can be somewhat deceptive. $100,000 of this money must be paid each year toward the stadium debt. But still, the Department operates on an annual budget of at least $450,000.

When the $20,000 needed to finance the gym program is placed against this sum, we can see that less than five per cent of the athletic budget was spent to finance one of the best teams of its kind in the East.

Another factor that came into play in the Athletic Department's decision was the question of scholarship money. Next year, for the first time, the University is required to allocate scholarship money for women.

The athletic department is responding to this situation by giving $10,000 in scholarship money available for the women's program. This money had to come from somewhere.

The main source of athletic scholarships for UMass comes from what is called the Barber Fund. This is comprised of funds accrued from vending machines and gate receipts from football and basketball.

The Barber Fund receipts amount to about $185,000 annually. From this, gymnastics was allowed $1,000 in new money yearly, or what amounted to approximately $5,300 for the whole team in any given season.

After next season, the gym program will get no new scholarship money although existing committments will be fulfilled.

This can be contrasted to the amount given annually to the football program, which comes to between $105,000 and $110,000 annually. You can draw your own conclusions.

If, as seems to be the case, the decision of the Athletic Department was based on the financial concerns involved, then it can be safely stated that they acted not in response to present conditions, but to certain assumptions: some well-founded, others existing on, to say the least, somewhat shaky ground.

The reasons given by the Department are not pressing enough at this time to warrant the decision to phase down the gymnastics program. If such a move was or is actually warranted, it should have come two years ago with the departure of Erik Kjeldsen or ten years in the future when the "financial crunch that could become very serious" predicted by Rufe actually occured.

McInerney addresses Senate Gymnastics still in doubt

By MIKE HENAULT
and WALT POWERS
MDC Staff

Athletic Director Frank McInerney spoke before a charged gathering of 100 people at last night's meeting of the student senate. When he finished the future of the men's gymnastics program was still in doubt.

McInerney answered questions from the floor for two hours and before it was over, the senate passed a motion calling for the establishment of a state-funded gymnastics coaching position by a unanimous vote.

But the motion will have no binding effect on the recommendation not to rehire present gymnastics coach Tom Dunn after the 1974-75 season, according to McInerney.

The basic question concerned the alternatives to the decision, and the Athletic Director's role in making it. Throught the meeting McInerney steadfastly maintained that the recommendation was made solely because Dunn was paid out of the student-supported Athletic Trust Fund, and there was no state position for either him or any other gymnastics coach. Other factors, such as success of the team, student support, and the overall financial situation of the team had nothing to do with the decision, he said.

The Athletic Director reiterated throughout the meeting that the recommendation was not a final decision.

McInerney was accused a number of times with not conferring with the gymnastics team, the student body, the Athletic Council and the Alumni before making the recommendation.

Senate Treasurer Paul Hamel received applause when he said he thought "It was absurd that the Director of Athletics did not confer with the chancellor". McInerney said he had an excellent working relationship with Dean Bischoff, and that it was not his duty as a department head to go around him to higher members of the ad-

The senate's long and tedious process of budget approval began last night. A two-thirds vote is necessary for the body's approbation of any given group's budget.

The senate approved the student activities full budget for $152,389. The reasons for the increase were merit increment and the cost of living. The RSO office also added a computer system because of the "inadequacy" of the grad research center's computer services.

The last budget approved last night was the Collegian's. The eighty thousand dollar plus spending schedule met with minor objections from the Women's Committee who said that their request for an affirmative action statement had not been met. So, the senate passed a master binding clause on all groups which would withhold all funds conditionally until a written acceptable proposal by OK'd by the Women's Committee.

Juveniles busted for D.C. break

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

UMass Police have apprehended two juveniles in connection with a break at Hampden Dining Commons, and a third for a break at Worcester Munchies, and are investigating a new break at Franklin Munchies Tuesday night.

Saul Chafin, Assistant Director of the UMass Department of Public Safety, reported yesterday that two juvenile males were arrested early Wednesday morning as the result of an investigation by the UMass detective and patrol divisions.

"Through the co-operation of UMass staff," Chafin said, "police were drawn to an Orchard Hill area dorm, where they discovered the juveniles in possession of property believed to be that taken from Hampden Dining Commons safe in a break last Monday night."

According to Sergeant Philip Cavanaugh, head of the UMass Detective Division, between $1,300 and $1,400 in cash was recovered as well as evidence linking the juveniles directly to the crime. $600 was in bills; the rest was in rolled and loose change.

The juveniles lead police to a small pond near Orchard Hill where they claimed more evidence could be found. Using a backhoe, the police drained the pond and discovered money wrappers and bags from the Hampden safe.

Aiding Sergeant Cavanaugh in the investigation were Officers Dave Grader and Dan Hagan, Sergeant Frank Mazzei and Detective Mike Grabiec.

The juveniles have been arrested for breaking and entering in the nighttime and larceny over $100, and are due to be arraigned in Juvenile Court in Northampton today.

Chafin reported that a third juvenile has been apprehended in connection with the break-in at Worcester Munchies on April 12. In that break $295 worth of cigarettes, candy, shampoo, and soap was taken.

Cavanaugh said that the juvenile had given away most of the stolen goods, so that only about $5 worth was recovered.

"A great deal of the credit for the solving of this case," said Chafin, "has to go to Officer Dave Grader, who initiated the original contacts that allowed us to break the case this quickly."

Sergeant Mazzei was in charge of the investigation, and aided by officers Grader, Grabiec, Hagan, and Hawkins.

Chafin said that the juvenile was also due to be arraigned in Juvenile Court today on charges of breaking and entering in the nighttime and larceny under $100.

A third break-in was discovered at Franklin Dining Commons Munchies at 3:10 Wednesday morning by Officers Dan Hagan and James Tucker.

Cavanaugh reported that a substantial amount of cigarettes, a radio belonging to the store manager, and various items of groceries were taken. No estimate could be made immediately as to the value of the stolen goods. A great deal of malicious damage was also done.

Entry to the store was gained by breaking through an outside glass door at the north end of the building and then through the wooden door into the store itself, by use of "some kind of tool". A door into an adjacent storeroom was also broken.

Police are continuing their investigation into the break.

Gage pushes carcass probe

Vice-chancellor for student affairs Robert W. Gage Tuesday launched an investigation to determine why animal carcasses from the UMass College of Food and Natural resources have ended up near North Village apartments.

Gage said last night he and associate provost William J. Mellen has drafted a joint memorandum to two administrators responsible for the carcasses being improperly disposed of, asking them to account for the mistake and propose solutions by next Wednesday.

The two administrators are Barry H. Averill, director of health services, which encompasses environmental health and safety, and Dean of Food and Natural Resources Arless A. Spielman.

Gage said environmental health should have seen to the proper disposal of the carcasses, which apparently lay in an open burial pit where dogs could carry them close to North Village apartments. Residents complained to The Collegian.

He added that Robert P. Gleason, environmental health director, was directly responsible for seeing that the carcasses were disposed of.

Gage said the memo directs Averill and Spielman to recommend "alternative solutions to the problem" of dumping carcasses in an open pit.

Newly appointed Black Affairs Editor Rudolph Jones.

Jones speaks out on editorship

Question

You are now the Black Affairs editor; congratulations. How do you feel?

Rudy

Thank you - but me being here is not any accomplishment for me. I have no gain to derive from this position. My brothers and sisters from Corp and the Black News Service felt I am the right man at this time.

Question

What do you hope to accomplish?

Rudy

I won't be accomplishing anything. There is nothing I need to get accomplished. But if you would rephrase the question and ask what will the Collegian accomplish seeing that they have not progressed; the paper and its staff undoubtedly are way behind time, then I could reply very simply;

They will make the necessary changes that will bring the paper and its staff up into this era of 1974!! I'll give you an example of what I mean.

The "board of editors" of the Collegian were elected by the same procedure like that employed in the creation of the Black Affairs editor post. Yet still an editor had the audacity to challenge the legitmacy of the vote which the Collegian yeilded to-in an effort to stall for time, Nixonian tactics; and not recall the entire Board of Editors. The setting of double standards in 1974? They must be crazy!!

Question

Is the Collegian making the necessary changes?

Rudy

No, absolutely not! The paper is run by a bunch of racist, insecure, insensitive children who are blind to the implication of their actions. The Collegian is criticizing the student government for being irresponsible etc, but the Collegian should clean house too. They should throw out the damn A.P. machines and get their reporters to work. Look at the campus pond. There are a number of environmental freaks on the staff but they haven't even challenged the University on its polluting the pond.

Take a look at Wednesday's Collegian on the staff structure even though they voted and approved the Black Affairs staff they didn't even place it in the editorial structure, they couldn't even spell my name correctly and didn't even put in the appropriate spot. Don't you see, these people aren't ready for change?

Question

What do you think should be done with the Collegian now?

Rudy

The community should get competent and intelligent people to run it. I just don't know what folks in journalism are doing but.....

Question

What's your major?

Rudy

Struggle. That's all there is to major in, here at this University.

Question

What does struggle entail or encompass?

Rudy

The entire horizon of human existance, or man's quest to exist, to survive.

Question

What is the Black News Service?

Rudy

The Black News Serivce is a new development in the Black community. It was formed by concerned members of the community interested in covering the news that affect Black people seeing that the Collegian is still systematically excluding Black people from the news.

We are still developing, and is sending out a general appeal to Black Students interested in reporting grieves, photographing etc., to please leave your name and address in the Black News Service office located on the first floor of New Africa House.

UConn president assailed

By GLORIA MONTGOMERY
Black News Service

At a recent panel on the University's role in society held at the Storrs campus of the University of Connecticut, President Glenn Ferguson expressed the views: "The university does not and cannot educate all" and that it should not try to solve the social problems of society.

In light of this statement one should view the situation currently existing at the University of Connecticut. The office of civil rights of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare sent a report to the University of Connecticut regarding the need for them to develop an awareness of the problems of minority students at the university's various campuses.

The implication of the report is that UConn must make major new efforts to foster adequate minority participation in its student services.

Like most of American institutions, UConn replied by making a commitment to follow up with the recommendations. Nevertheless, a commitment is by no means equivalent to action. Up to this point, UConn has taken no action in response to the needs of its minority students.

There are other circumstances which culminated in the arrest of 200 black students on Tuesday. Of primary concern to Black students at UConn for some time has been the teachings of professors Laughlin and Ginsberg in the Department of Anthropology who maintain like Shockly that blacks are genetically inferior to Whites.

When black students sent various requests to meet with the president on specific issues, he flatly refused and made his intentions known to send the state police in to intervene in the matter. The following is an excerpt from the statement which was issued regarding the incident:

"This morning, the Connecticut State Police wrote a new chapter in the book of police brutality. Although the fire hoses and dogs were not present, the excessive force and dehumanizing treatment was comparable to the tactics employed by Bull Conner in Birmingham, Alabama during the sixties.

Students this morning were kicked in the face, dragged along the corridors of the library and thrown into buses which they were peacefully hoping to meet with the administration.

"The only individuals injured were students when they were physically assaulted by the police. And then the students are labeled as criminals. But the police were acting on orders from President Glenn Ferguson, who did not respond to a letter which 200 black students presented him last week, adn who totally disregarded our requests to meet with him last night. Our orderly and peaceful protests were to expose the racist implications of theories being taught by professors Ginsberg and Laughlin.

We studied in Wilbur Cross Library to expose these issues and to dramatize our need for an adequate facility and programs for black students. Students were seekinga place to study together, peacefully and not disruptive. Our requests were totally ignored by the University administration and we were labelled as criminals.

"The administrations actions have shown a total disregard for our rights as human beings. Action is being considered on our part as to charges of brutality and violation of legal rights. In view of this mornings 'gestapo' tactics executed by Connecticut State Police, ordered by the Glenn W. Ferguson and sanctioned by the Board of Trustees we have become more definitive in our initial demand. We demand that all criminal charges be dropped.

We now demand that professors Ginsberg and Laughlin, having caused a division in the university community, be severed from all association from the University of Connecticut.

"Their teachings are an insult to the minority community and their continued presence will serve to make Blacks and other minority students stronger in their resolve to make the university and surrounding communities more sensitive to their urgent needs and legitimate demands."

The above mentioned statement reflects the attitudes of Black students at the University of Connecticut at Storrs. It was these issues specifically which characterized this statement issued in support of their concerns.

President Ferguson has been trying to cover up the concrete issues behind the incident concerning black students by an attempt to confuse the issues. Black students had been corresponding with the president for about three weeks with no cooperation at all on the part of the president.

Therefore, all letters went unanswered. When the black students made a specific request to speak with the president the next morning and decided to come together the evening prior to study at the library, they were engaged in what could have been a fatal massacre.

The white coalition of the University of Connecticut also occupied the library at about 8 o'clock on Tuesday night in support of black students demands. They were removed on Wednesday but not with the excessive force employed while evicting Black students.

UConn head claims progress

STORRS, Conn. [AP] — University of Connecticut President Glenn W. Ferguson, beset by two consecutive student racial complaints, insisted yesterday his administration is working toward solutions.

University officials have made a commitment to the federal government to recruit more black students, a committee has been formed to deal with minority group problems and talks have begun on a proposed black student center, he said in an interview.

About 275 students, roughly three-fourths of them black, and four faculty members have been arrested by state police during the early morning sit-ins Tuesday and Wednesday at the university's main library.

While Ferguson spoke, more then 500 students and faculty members rallied outside below his Gulley Hall office. They repeated demands for more minority group rights on campus and dismissal of trespassing charges against arrested demonstrators.

Financial aid

Independents get the shaft

This is the third part in a six part series on financial aid at UMass.

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff

"The student who gets the worst end of the financial aid deal is the older, independent student rather than the younger, dependent student who can fall back on his parents," Richard Dent, Director of the Financial Aid Office said in a Collegian interview.

Dent expects the independent to work and take out loans; to take on heavier responsibilities.

"On the other hand," said Dent, when a parent is calling his child a dependent but isn't contributing to his educational expenses he is depriving the child of the financial assistance we might be able to give him,."

It is office policy to take the parents' financial status into prime consideration when reviewing the applications of students labeled dependent.

UMass offers financial assistance "primarily on the basis of need" according to Dent.

He told the Collegian that in the past an applicant's academic performance was important in determining whether he would be an aid recipient.

"Now we are trying to work on a strict, need-priority basis," said Dent.

Evaluations of each applicant's case are made by the professional staff at the Financial Aid Office in coordination with the national College Scholarship Service (CSS). All applicants must fill out both a University application and the appropriate CSS Student or Parents' Confidential Statement.

Financially independent applicants who satisfy the following criteria should file the Student Financial Statement (SFS):

1.) The applicant cannot have been claimed as a dependent on his parents 1973 or 1974 tax returns.

2.) The applicant cannot have lived with his parents in 1973 and will not live with them in 1974 (including summer vacation).

3.) The applicant cannot have received more than $600 in parental support during 1973 or 1974.

A student applying as an independent for the first time must submit a certified copy of his parents' 1973 tax return.

All applicants who do not satisfy the above criteria must file the Parents' Confidential Statement.

Married students are not automatically considered independent; each partner must satisfy the independence criteria. If both husband and wife are students they must schedule a joint appointment with a financial aid counselor in April or May, after their applications are complete.

The financial situation of each aid applicant is given a preliminary analysis by the CSS. According to its manual for financial aid officers, the CSS bases its financial need analysis on the following specific assumptions:

1.) Parents have an obligation to pay for the education of their children to the extent that they are able to do so. They are expected to continue to provide, as well as they are able, meals, room, clothing and medical care. If their means permit contributions beyond these essentials, they are expected to assist in the payment of tuition and other direct educational expenses.

2.) Besides a family's income, its accumulated assets will also be taken into consideration.

3.) Special family circumstances such as the age of the parents, provisions for retirement, separation, divorce or widowhood and especially the size of the family will be taken into consideration.

4.) The student is expected to contribute from his own savings and employment income.

According to its manual, the CSS does not take academic ability, or potential and character of applicants into consideration when selecting financial aid recipients.

For each applicant the CSS prepares a Financial Aid Analysis Report: an estimation of the possible, total family contribution.

As a member of the CSS Assembly, the UMass Office of Student Financial Aid works under the following general principles in the secondary analysis of each applicant and in day to day operations:

1.) The primary purpose of a financial program should be to provide financial assistance to students who, without such aid, would be unable to attend college.

2.) Financial assistance consists of scholarships, loans and employment, which may be offered to students singly or in various combinations.

3.) Financial assistance from colleges and other sources should be viewed only as supplementary to the efforts of the family.

4.) The total amount of financial assistance offered a student by a college and by other sources should not exceed the amount he needs.

5.) In estimating the amount that a student's family can provide for college expenses the college should

Washington editor for the New York Times Robert Semple said Tuesday night that Watergate was due to Nixon's personality.

Semple traces W'gate to 'Nixon the man'

By WILLIAM F. O'BRIEN
MDC Staff

"Much of the trouble Nixon is in now, is traceable to himself as a person," said Robert Semple in a speech here Tuesday night.

The Washington editor for the New York Times, who covered Nixon as a reporter, said "In retrospect, it is easy to look back and see how Watergate could have happened... if one examines Nixon, the man."

"A lot of things were a factor in bringing about Watergate... the lack of bedrock in the man himself... the fact that he didn't have any real central plan when he came to office in '68... the sense of insecurity he had in himself as a person and winning the Presidency didn't help him."

Semple said this is easy to see when examining the person and not the politician. "When Nixon saw students demonstrating... he saw it as a massive revolt... when he read bad editorials, he didn't look at it as one particular newspaper, but saw it as a massive threat to government."

"It was not Nixon himself who created the powerful presidency," said the Times editor. "It was a combination of putting an insecure man in a job where we have conferred excessive power."

In dealing with the question of what we have gained and lost because of Watergate, Semple said if nothing else, it proves that our government can survive a major catastrophe and the people will still be able to function.

Even though there is talk of redistribution of power between the branches of government, "when you spend as much time watching Congress as I did, you tend to doubt whether they can get anything done... the big plus factor of Watergate is that the White House is getting weaker, not that Congress is getting stronger".

He went on to say, "I'm not applauding weakness in Congress, I'm just not so sure that they can pull themselves together... or that impeachment is the process by which they can do it.

"Another plus is that the press has become more aware of government and not so prone to accepting the information they're given by government officials.

"Our big test will be when another Kennedyish figure comes to office". Semple said, "We fell flat on our faces when John Kennedy was president... he just charmed us to death."

Dukakis voices caution on nuclear power here

By MARK KELLEHER
MDC Staff

Michael Dukakis. the only announced Democratic candidate for governor cautioned against the use of nuclear energy last night saying it should be looked at "very skeptically" before its use is even considered.

Speaking before an audience of 150 students he characterized Massachusetts as "wallowing in energy".

"We can probably do without them (nuclear plants) and instead start seriously thinking about conservation."

In regards to the state government's reaction to the Belchertown State School, he called it the most outrageous example of administration paralysis at the state level he had ever seen in his 14 years in state government. "We're spending 150 million dollars a year on mental retardation and the state has to be brought to court to provide minimally decent facilities."

"The Legislature can't pass laws to correct the situation. Only executive leadership has the power to do it."

On state government Dukakis decried the inability of Massachusetts to govern itself saying it just didn't measure up to people's expectations. He cited a poll which said that except for New York City no other place had as much cynicism about state government processes and as much pessimism on the states' ability to change as in Massachusetts.

"This pessimism can and must be dispelled if we are to be the model for representative state government that we should be."

If elected as governor Dukakis would as one of his first duties undertake to rebuild Massachusetts economic base.

"We should be bursting with economic activity, he said, but right now we cannot attract business. We have a national reputation of not being able to compete with other states."

His administration would develop a master business plan for the state, expanding the economic base without taxes, and concentrating light industry in the older urban centers.

"Money for education, the cities and towns and open space aquisition - all these things are achievable for an administration that knows about economic development."

On his campaign finances Dukakis reported that he had raised 170,000 dollars so far from 26,000 people. He is one of the few candidates that insists on citzen contributions only.

In the question and answer period that followed his speech Dukakis fielded a variety of questions from the floor.

He called for community decentralization of city schools that would give parents some real control over their child's education.

U.S. and the world

Judiciary panel may limit study

WASHINGTON [UPI]-The House Judiciary Committee's lawyers have recommended dropping as many as 30 of the 56 potential impeachment charges against President Nixon, including questionable financing of his California and Florida homes, it was learned yesterday.

John M. Doar, the committee's chief impeachment counsel and Alfred Jenner, his Republican counterpart, will make their recommendation this morning when the committee meets in public session to hear the results of its legal staff's preliminary investigation.

According to the lawyers' draft proposal, which Jenner read to GOP committee members yesterday, he and Doar would continue to investigate a large number of other allegations against the President, notably obstruction of justice in handling of the Watergate cover-up.

The recommended narrowing of impeachment charges would leave only allegations of criminal action and drop all non-criminal items, but one Republican present at the caucus said this was a coincidence that "just worked out that way." One of the original controversies surrounding impeachment concerned whether a president could be impeached for anything that did not violate a criminal statute.

Among the original 56 possible impeachment charges the lawyers cited to the committee in a memorandum March 1, Doar and Jenner were prepared to recommend eliminating allegations involving:

—The President's personal finances, including financing of his San Clemente and Key Biscayne homes, but keeping open an inquiry into possible fraud in preparation of his federal income tax returns.

—White House threats or promises of government favors in exchange for illegal corporate campaign contributions for Nixon's re-election.

—The Environmental Protection Agency's failure to prosecute anti-pollution lawsuits as a result of campaign contributions, and similar allegations involving pressure on federal agencies relating to campaign donations.

—Nixon's impoundment of funds appropriated by Congress, and his attempt to abolish the Office of Economic Opportunity in violation of its statutory authority.

—The President's 1970 order committing U.S. ground troops to Cambodia, subject to release of a Senate study report on the issue.

It was also disclosed by another Republican source that the committee's second request for additional White House materials, centering chiefly on the ITT and milk fund cases, including 79 tapes covering more than 46 hours of conversations.

The White House has complained that the latest committee request was excessive, coming on top of its subpoena for tapes.

Lebanese army ends Beirut school strike

BEIRUT [UPI] — Lebanese security forces occupied the American University of Beirut at dawn yesterday and ejected students who had occupied the administration building in a strike against higher tuition.

Interior Minister Bahij Takieddin said police arrested 61 students on the campus and others in various parts of Beirut when they tried to clok roads by setting fire to old automobile tires to protest the police action at the university.

Police said none of those arrested were Americans. They included 45 Lebanese nationals, 15 Jordanians and one Libyan. About 84 per cent of the 4,619-member student body is Arab.

Takieddin told a news conference that police acted at the request of the AUB administration which had complained that the strikers were damaging university installations.

The university's elected student council launched the strike March 18 to protest a 10 per cent increase in tuition.

A strong force of gendarmes and riot police backed by armored cars entered the campus at dawn and surprised the occupying students in their sleep. There was no violence, police reports said.

"A subsequent police investigation produced photographic proof that some damage had been inflicted on university property," Takieddin said.

About 50 gendarmes and an armored car remained inside the walled campus and some 200 other security men stood by outside the campus gates.

University information officer Radwan Mawlawy confirmed the university had lodged a formal complaint with the Lebanese prosecutor because strikers "prevented other students from continuing their studies and destroyed and sabotaged some of the university premises."

A university spokesman said tuition varies widely depending on student categories but maximum fees range from $1,000 to $1,600 per year. All fees are to be increased 10 per cent for 1975.

Students also demanded more student representation in running the university.

South African vote due to uphold apartheid party

JOHANNESBURG [UPI] — South Africa's white voters chose a new parliament yesterday in a national election called by Prime Minister John Vorster to seek a mandate for continuation of his racial apartheid policy.

Vorster, head of the ruling National Party, said the policies of the opposition United Party could eventually bring the 16 million blacks to power in the racially divided country.

"I will never allow the sharing of our white sovereignty," Vorster said during the campaign.

Early reports said turnout of the 2.2 million eligible voters varied from 5 per cent in rural Orange Free State, a solid stronghold of the Nationalists, to 75 per cent in the cities.

First results were expected early today.

The United party, which traditionally has drawn its support from the English-speaking section of South Africa's white population, plans to share power in a federal structure with the country's 16 million blacks, who do not have the right to vote.

"Their federal policy would allow for a black prime minister eventually in South Africa," Vorster has said.

In an election day appeal, the government-operated South African Broadcasting Corporation urged voters to consider whether they wanted a "continuation of peace, law and order, and freedom from attacks from abroad and subversion from within."

Opinion polls predicted victory for the Vorster's Nationalists, who hold 117 seats in the outgoing 165-seat assembly to 47 for the United party led by Sir de Villiers Graaff and one seat for the Progressive Party.

Israel walks out of U.N. to protest resolution

UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — Israel walked out of the U.N. Security Council yesterday night in protest against a proposed resolution condemning her April 13 raid into Lebanon but not the Arab guerrilla attack on an Israeli village tow days earlier in which 18 persons were killed.

The United States tried and failed to amend the resolution which U.S. Ambassador John Scali has said he will veto if it passes without condemning the April 11 raid on the Israeli village of Qiryat Shemona.

"Is the spilling of Jewish blood to be passed over in silence once more?" Israeli Ambassador Yosef Tekoah asked the Council.

"We will not be a witness in what apparently is about to happen here. We shall leave, carrying with us the memory of the martyrs of Qiryat Shemona."

After days of consultations, the Security Council had before it a resolution which, in an unusual procedure, was not sponsored by any individual member or members of the Security Council.

'Zebra' dragnet ends

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Police yesterday called off their "search and question" dragnet in which hundreds of black males were stopped on the streets as potential suspects in the city's "Zebra" killings.

Police officials said at a federal court hearing on the procedure that the intensive search of all black males who matched the police drawing had proved "unproductive and ineffective." Nearly 600 black men were stopped in six days.

Cheif of Inspectors Charles A. Barca said "Operation Zebra" would continue, but that only persons who match the drawing and appear suspicious will be stopped.

Miss Hearst defends self in new SLA tape

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — The San Francisco Police Department yesterday received another tape recording believed to be from the Symbionese Liberation Army kidnapers of Patricia Hearst.

The tape contained a woman's voice indentified as Miss Hearst and also a man's voice indentified as "Cinque," the SLA "general field marshal" who has spoken on previous tape recordings in the 11 weeks since Miss Hearst was kidnaped Feb. 4.

Accompanying the tape was a corner of a driver's license believed to be Miss Hearst's. Half the driver's license was delivered with a previous tape.

The tape was received by Officer Rodney Williams of the police department's Community Relations Unit. Williams said a friend had phoned him yesterday afternoon to say he had received a package from the SLA from a third party. Williams said he believed the tape contained Miss Hearst's voice.

"She said it was ridiculous to believe she was not in the bank of her own free will," Williams said.

Miss Hearst and four others identified as SLA members were photographed robbing a San Francisco bank of more than $10,000 April 15. There had been some question of whether Miss Hearst acted in the robbery as a willing participant.

"She said it was ridiculous to believe she was duped," Williams said, "it was ridiculous she was brainwashed and it was ridiculous for Steven Weed, Miss Hearst's fiance to think she would be coming back."

She also said it was ridiculous to think of her as "a sweet little girl."

Williams said Miss Hearst spoke for about five minutes, and Cinque and two others spoke for about 10 minutes.

Health plan pushed

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Nixon administration attacked parts of a Democratic compromise health insurance bill yesterday but expressed willingness to work with Congress toward enacting comprehensive legislation this year.

While defending President Nixon's proposal at House Ways and Means Committee hearings, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Caspar W. Weinberger criticized the chief features of the compromise bill sponsored by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., the committee chairman, and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., chairman of the Senate Health subcommittee.

Lenzner hits IRS

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Assistant chief counsel Terry F. Lenzner of the Senate Watergate committ says "sensitive case reports" on income tax matters were transmitted regularly to former White House aide John D. Ehrlichman and sometimes to President Nixon.

Lenzner also said the Internal Revenue Service had damaged the committee's work "irreparably" by refusing to turn over — despite Senate action authorizing it — IRS case reports the panel is seeking.

"We still have not received a response...for copies of sensitive case reports" on Hughes, F. Donald Nixon, Rebozo and others, Lenzner said, "information which was transmitted to John Ehrilichman at the White House and from him to others.

No tax cut: Simon

WASHINGTON [AP] — William E. Simon, President Nixon's choice as next secretary of the Treasury, said yesterday he opposes a tax cut and called for a return to economic fundamentals to control inflation.

Simon, a 46-year-old former Wall Street investment banker, testified before the Senate Finance Committee, which is considering his nomination to succeed George P. Shultz as Treasury secretary.

British may pull out

BELFAST [UPI] — Northern Ireland's militant Protestant groups met yesterday to discuss adopting common political policies aimed at returning the violence-torn province to majority rule.

In England, British Defense Minister Roy Mason said pressure was growing for the withdrawal fo British troops from Ulster.

"Demands are being made to set up a date for withdrawal thereby forcing the leaders of the warring factions to get together and hammer out a solution," he said.

The 15,000 British troops were initially sent to Northern Ireland four years ago to protect the Roman Catholic community from Protestant violence. Since then, they have been the frequent target of the Catholic-dominated Irish Republican Army.

IT'S TIME TO REFORM CAMPAIGN FINANCING

John W. Gardner, Chairman
Common Cause
Former Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare

"Wouldn't it be great if you didn't have to take a single dime from anybody?" said Senator Philip Hart of Michigan. He had in mind the uncomfortable, sometimes degrading, experiences that political candidates have when they go hat-in-hand to potential donors for contributions.

The costs of political campaigns have gone sky-high. And monied special interests are always glad to meet those costs in behalf of the candidate. The inevitable result has been corruption, scandal and public mistrust of the political process.

Today in most districts and states, candidates can't run for public office unless they are rich, or unless they are willing to put themselves under obligation to sources of funds. That isn't the kind of country we started out to be.

There are honest contributors who give out of conviction, and there are honest politicians who don't repay gifts with political favors. But let's face it: most large political gifts are made with the intent to buy influence, buy votes, buy politicians.

The first principle of free self-government is accountability of government to the citizen. Elections are the chief means through which citizens enforce that accountability. But if the winning candidate feels that his first obligation is to his big campaign donors, public accountability is destroyed.

Here are some of the necessary ingredients of reform.

1) There must be low ceilings on individual or committee gifts.

2) There must be limits on spending — although these must not be set too low or they will handicap challengers.

3) There must be full public disclosure of all gifts and expenditures. One of the most powerful forces for clean government ever discovered is the light of day.

4) There must be an independent enforcement commission with subpoena powers and the power to go to court. It is shocking but true that no federal campaign financing law has ever been seriously enforced by the Justice Department.

Many are now beginning to see that there is one further necessary ingredient if we are to have a responsible and competitive political system — namely, an element of public financing in campaigns.

Money for campaigns need not come totally and exclusively from public funds. The bill recently debated in the Senate permits a role for money from private sources, although it places a ceiling on the size of gifts. It encourages small private contributions by providing that they will be matched up to $100 each with public funds at the primary level.

No candidate in the primaries will receive any federal matched funds unless he or she has demonstrated the ability to raise small private gifts up to a specific threshhold amount. This will screen out frivolous candidates or candidates with no constituency.

There are legitimate questions as to the mechanics of public financing, but these questions can be dealt with. The real question is whether we intend to put behind us once and for all a system of campaign financing in which money can buy political outcomes.

There is much more to do. And the time to do it is now. The American people are tired of being bilked and manipulated. It's time to give this country back to its people. For additional information, write Common Cause, 2030 M St. N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

Industry figures show that 3 of 5 oil wells profitable

WASHINGTON [AP]-While the Mobil Oil Corp. claims in nationwide television advertising that only one in 60 oil wells drilled ever pays off, industry figures show results at least 36 times better.

The data which appears to dispute Mobil's claim was obtained from the American Petroleum Institute and from several major oil companies. Mobil is the nation's third largest oil company.

J.A. Gillespie, a Mobil spokesman, said his company would stand by the validity of the ad and said the "one in 60 figure is a generally accepted figure used by the industry as a whole."

The television spot is one of a series of energy crisis-era ads produced by the major oil companies to try to explain energy shortages and high prices.

Mobil's television spot shows a man walking through a desert-like area while an unseen announcer reads five sentences of copy:

"Here's what drilling for oil is like. It's like digging a lot of holes in the ground, throwing a lot of money into each hole and hoping some of the holes become oil wells and throw money back. About one hole in 60 actually pays off. Last year Mobil threw over $100 million into holes in the ground. Drilling for oil is a very risky way to make money."

American Petroleum Institute figures show that of all new exploratory and production wells drilled worldwide last year, 61.2 per cent struck oil or natural gas. In other words, about three of every five wells was productive - 36 times better than the one-in-60 figure in the Mobil ad.

The television spot was created for Mobil by the Doyle Dane Bernbach advertising agency in New York. Mary McCarthy, the executive who handles Mobil's account, said the one-in-60 figure came from a publication of the American Petroleum Institute.

An API spokesman, J. Speir Collins, said the one-in-60 figure refers only to a narrow segment of oil exploration.

"The figure is way off if you're talking about all wells drilled worldwide," Collins said. "Where the one-in-60 figure applies is only for wildcat drilling in the United States in brand new fields where there are no proven oil or gas reserves."

Asked why the Mobil ad didn't make clear that the one-in-60 figure applied to only one segment of oil drilling, Miss McCarthy said she hadn't felt it was necessary.

Most people would assume we're talking about exploratory wells since we have the picture of the man walking around looking for something," she said. "We couldn't explain what an exploratory well is because the public wouldn't understand it."

Nixon requests aid for Egypt & Israel

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Nixon yesterday asked Congress to approve a $5.1 billion foreign aid package that includes $457.5 million for Egypt and Jordan and $350 million for Israel.

The President also asked Congress to authorize an appropriation of $939.8 million for assistance to South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos.

"The amounts I am requesting for fiscal year 1975 is a minimum essential to support the responsible and constructive American role of international leadership and cooperation, a role it is in our national interest to continue to strengthen," he said.

The aid package nor the fiscal year starting July 1 would include $1.5 billion for assistance to international development institutions. The rest is for military and economic aid.

Egypt's allotment of $250 million, virtually the only American aid it will have received since 1967, was earmarked for clearing the Suez Canal, repairing war damage to cities along the waterway and to help restore Egyptian trade.

Egypt has made no request for military assistance, White House deputy press spokesman Gerald Warren said.

An American team inspected the canal before making its recommendations and the U. S. helicopter carrier USS Iwo Jima is already on station at Port Said searching for mines to be cleared.

Nixon also proposed a total of $207.5 million for Jordan, broken down to $100 million in military assistance grants, $77.5 million in security support assistance and $30 million in military credit sales.

Quaker found guilty on draft charge

WILKESBORO, N.C. [AP] — A Connecticut Quaker was convicted in U.S. District Court here yesterday of refusing to register for the draft.

Brice A. Baechler, 19, of Glastonbury, Conn., admitted that he refused to register because of his religious beliefs.

Baechler's attorney served notice of appeal. Sentencing was postponed.

The jury of six men and six women returned the verdict after more than seven hours of deliberation Tuesday and yesterday.

The defendant was cited for contempt of court nine times during the three-day trial for refusing to stand when Judge Eugene A. Gordon entered or left the room. He was jailed Monday night for refusing to stand during Monday's proceedings, but was released pending appeal.

Baechler was visiting friends in Chapel Hill, N.C., on his 18th birthday last year when he notified the Orange County draft board that he would not register.

He was arrested by the FBI on Jan. 22 in Washington, D.C.

His attorney, Deborah Mailman of Raleigh, argued that Baechler should not lose his freedom for following his conscience.

"Can the executive branch of government cause a man with deeply religious beliefs to reject those beliefs?" she asked the jury.

She also argued that the selective Service laws are sexually discriminatory because only males are required to register.

Prosecutor N. Carlton Tilley maintained that sincerity was not a defense for breaking the law.

Obscenity bill filed

BOSTON [AP]-The legislature's Judiciary Committee yesterday filed aan explicit anti-obscenity bill that a spokesman said could become state law within two or three weeks.

The new law would fill a void left Tuesday when the state Supreme Court ruled that current state obscenity laws are unconstitutional.

Under a year-old U.S. Supreme Court ruling that left ofsceniiy standards up to communities, the lack of statewide law leaves each of Massachusetts' 351 cities and towns to set its own guidelines.

The new bill would meet objections of vagueness raised by the state court, according to Judiciary co-chairman Rep. Louis LeBlanc, D-New Bedford.

The bill has several pages of definitions of obscene acts, language and states of undress.

The bill makes displays of obscene matters to minors a crime, unless for educational purposes.

It defines hard-core pornographic material as that which has as its dominant theme an appeal to prurient interest, is pattently offensive, and "lacks serious literary, artistic, educational, political, entertainment, scientific or other social value."

BCH halts abortion

BOSTON [AP]-Boston City Hospital has halted its abortion services and has eliminated a budget item of $98,000 for an abortion clinic at the hospital officials said.

Dr. James Penza, acting director of obstetrics and gynecology, ordered the suspension of abortions March 10. He said Dr. Kenneth Edelin, chief obstetrical resident, refused to perform them in light of a grand jury investigation and indictments of five BCH doctors on abortion-related charges.

Before the suspension, legal abortions were being performed at the hospital at a rate of 18 to 24 per week, many of them free of charge for indigent women not covered by medical insurance, officials said.

N-plant won't open

BOSTON [AP]-More problems confront Boston Edison and its efforts to re-open the nuclear generating facility at Plymouth.

An Edison spokesman said yesterday that a problem with one recirculation inlet nozzle used in the cooling process at the Pilgrim plant could "delay re-opening two or three weeks."

The new problem is unrelated to Atomic Energy Commission hearings now being conducted at Plymouth. Those hearings concern a single citizens action by MIT graduate student Daniel Ford, who contends the reactor is unsafe and should not re-open.

Hydro power approved

BOSTON [AP]-The New England Regional Commission yesterday approved a resolution urging Congress to appropriate $800,00 for the planning of the Dickey-Lincoln School power project in Maine.

The Dickey-Lincoln resolution, introduced by Maine Gov. Kenneth Curtis, calls on Congress to fund the planning stages of the hydroelectric project. If the money were appropriated by Congress, the New England Regional Commission would provide matching funds.

The resolution also calls for close monitoring of economic and environmental factors involved in the project by the commission.

Randolph OK'd at WSC

WESTFIELD [AP]-The Westfield State College Student Senate has overwhelmingly defeated a motion calling for a boycott of the inauguration Sunday of Dr. Robert L. Randolph as the college's new president.

A resolution calling for the boycott was introduced by student Senate President Christopher Asch, who accused Randolph of making inflammatory remarks about members of the college community and said the college had "stagnated" in the nine months since Randolph was appointed.

Save your nickels and dimes

By RAYMOND TIE

Back when grass-stained knees were my trademark, my family advised me of the wisdom and logic involved in saving for a rainy day. So, like a few centuries of other middle-classers, I began my first savings account with a five dollar Christmas gift.

Would that I could have known then the suicidal side of this supposedly erudite maneuver.

However, to a youngster measuring the worth of a five per cent per annum return in terms of bubble-gum, baseball cards, and similarly invaluable treasures, the despicable nature of modern was far from apparent.

At an older age, though, I became aware of the elitist motive of these pseudo-benevolent lenders.

With the growth of the industrial complex, the nature of banks and banking changed. As the original free competition aspect of capitalism gave to monopoly and trusts, so did capitalist banking.

From a highly decentralized system composed of a large number of non-related banks, the industry soon found itself heading towards centralization and increasing control by a decreasing number of banks. Large banks began exerting both intense direct control over smaller ones, and through affiliation, agreement and investment, came to control an even larger number of other banks. Thus, these smaller banks, for all intents and purposes, became little more than branches of the larger banking monopolies.

To the extent that banking exercises a great degree of control over industry, this process has been extremely detrimental to the people.

Industry, it is readily apparent, is on a path towards total monopolization of production. This act alone is harmful as it ever decreases the ownership of production and thereby increases the enslavement of common people to a machine they neither own nor have any creative interest in. However, as industry monopolized, the need for capital for new operations and equipment, for new land and for buying out competitors also increases. This is the end towards which the banking industry labors.

The partnerships between banks produce enormous amounts of capital. Since the purpose of banks is to make inactive capital active, the relationship between them and industry becomes more complete and all-encompassing.

Industry can turn only to bankers for their needed capital and bankers abviously are ready to accept their invitations. As this process snowballs, bankers come to acquire more and more pertinent information about their clients. In order to synthesize all this information into usable money-making schemes, they avail themselves of experts in all fiels. Industry can turn only to bankers for their needed capital and bankers obviously are ready to accept their invitations. As this process snowballs, bankers come to acquire more and more pertinent information about their clients. In order to synthesize all this information into usable money-making schemes, they avail themselves of experts in all fields. This act changes the money-shifting orientation of banks to a highly organized intelligence system oriented towards becoming a monolithic industrial advisory organ, highly knowledgable of the interrelatedness of individual industries. The result is that industry is rapidly losing priority in investment, growth and other decisions to bankers. Banks become not the middle men they originally were, transferring capital from one place to another, but the ultimate decision and policy makers in a capitalist system. And to the extent that these large partnerships of banks also supply capital to government at all levels, they also become the major controllers of the physical worth of a capitalist nation.

It is probably inevitable that children will continue making their sporadic deposits as it is hard to be concerned with economics at the age of five. But given that banks have an inate bias towards heavy industry that is capable of huge profit through monopoly, what worth has the lighter less profitable industry? Or what worth has an independent small businessman or shopkeeper? Most important, what worth has the average citizen who can do nothing but work, day by day, trying to make ends meet.

Savini will do his best

To The Editor:

Regardless of what is said about Monday night's SGA election, Henry's supporters were students actively interested in good student government and probably more interested than most student senators. Their behavior was a way of soliciting votes and was not at all that much more of an obnoxious manner of getting support than the techniques that we other candidates used to line up votes. I was pleased to see them there. It did something to reduce the excessive pomposity of the evening.

The matter is all over with now. It was a good campaign where we all made an effort to be sincere and to say what we thought. I have faith that Rick will do his best and my hope is that in the coming year we will all pitch in and make student government what it should be; a mechanism that does something for the students here.

Rashid's shabby

To The Editor:

I would like to bring to the attention of the UMass community the shabby practices employed by Rashid's. Last Saturday night, I and five friends were asked [told..coerced..forced?] to vacate our table because we were not drinking enough liquor! They said they were not making enough profit on us! Never mind the fact that we all paid a dollar cover charge and most of us had at least a couple of drinks! Yet, that wasn't half the hassle. At different time, the waitress and the bouncer, speaking for the management, told us that unless we bought more drinks we would have to give up our table. Just exactly what was the cover charge for, anyway. And at a dollar a beer I was damned if I would spend six dollars for a sixpack's worth of beer. Finally we were told by the waitress and another employee two more times that we would have to leave. With pressure like that, that's exactly what we did. We left, never to return again. If an establishment like Rashid's, supposedly one with a little class, is going to treat their customers with an attitude of pure profit they run the risk of losing profit from possible future clientele. They also lose a good reputation. And as far as I am concerned, they have lost it. I wouldn't hesitate to offer my opinion of Rashid's to anyone. If Rashid's is going to ask people to leave, I say drop the cover charge and lower the prices of the drinks. If not, leave us alone and let us enjoy the place, not learn to despise it.

Jones' onesidedness could hurt BNS

To The Editor:

If one is to sit down and plan to write an objective, factual report of an incident [Bluewall Incident, Rudy Jones, Apr. 11 and 16] there are a few things not to do.

First, if the writer must describe the adults involved in an issue [Jones labels the two men as intoxicated white boys while the women are "two black women". Rodriquez and Jordon retain their last name status, yet the two women become Theresa and Briggette] he may not use language as a means to portray his own personal feelings.

Secondly, if we must view this as a confrontation between two black people and two fraternity members we need not be informed about what alienation exists or did exist between UMass fraternities and black people. This is a classic example of stereotyping! Perhaps Mr. Jones could find a Black studies course and learn this term.

Thirdly, in National Enquirer, not a UMass Daily newspaper, should we find an unauthenticated quote from a nameless eyewitness and such an unbelievable fact, that can in no way be verified, as "By 9 p.m. Rodriquez and Jordan had consumed eight pitchers of beer".

Unfortunately and ironically, the only thing Rudy Jones has accomplished through his poor journalism and one-sided reporting is to stir up a crowd of easily persuaded people, who are less concerned with knowing the facts, than seeing Jones' type of justice prevail.

Having been present the evening of the incident and recall seeing a male sustain a lacerated shoulder, coming from fragments of a broken pitcher, I question why this fact was totally ignored in Jones' "objective" reporting.

Maybe if Jones can rid himself of his age old Watergate analogy, shed his urge to report biassedly, perhaps then, the Black News Service can lift up its reputation.

UM Blacks support UConn Brothers and Sisters

By RUDOLPH JONES
Black Affairs Editor

The black community of UMass resolutely support the demands of our brothers and sisters at University of Connecticut. We will take the struggle to our campus where the fight against racism has just started.

We want you to understand that the struggle is a national one and that your case isn't unique. It is imperative that we set up a permanent communication structure where we can be informed first hand, (not by the America's racist press) about your intentions. For us to struggle and win it has to be made perfectly clear what our objectives are. The only way this can be done is by us communicating with each other. Let this be the beginning.

Ours is a just cause. All just struggles must win. Unity in struggle.

Concert Committee a bummer

I've just come from a meeting with a group of people who've been verbally assaulted by practically every student at Umass. Their efforts have been thwarted and frustrated time and time again, and the only way they can describe themselves now is as "a bunch of bummed out people". No, I'm not talking about the USA — I'm referring to a group known as the UMass Concert Committee, and their story is nothing less than bizarre. Nevertheless, before everyone goes around mean-mouthing the committee, they should be aware of the story and the circumstances surrounding this year's financial farce. The following article is my interpretation of the story of the Concert Committee.

It all began last year, when students both on and off campus began clamoring for a return to "the old days" of major UMass concerts in the Cage. The administration, still petrified at the thought of another Traffic disaster, warned that if any concerts were to be held in the Cage, then security must be high while the energy level had to be low. In other words, any Cage concerts had to feature a relatively low-key, mellow performer or group, or there would be "no go".

The total budget allocated by the Student Senate to the Concert Committee was approximately 17 thousand dollars, but there were stipulations as to its spending. For instance, one of the concerts had to run for two nights, so that no Umass student would be turned away from a UMass concert. It was these stipulations that made the job of the Concert Committee a little bit harder.

So there they were, trying to plan a mellow concert that would make money and attract a cross-section of individuals from within the Umass community. What followed was a period of confusion, leading to the hiring of Donny Hathaway and Chick Corea. hathaway had just come from an extremely successful performance at the Newport Jazz Festival in Fenway Park. He was a well-known name who was supposed to be a big attraction, while Corea, who was relatively unkown, was highly recognized in the jazz field as an excellent performer. Corea outplayed Hathaway, who found it difficult to keep himself on stage for a full hour, cutting his show to fifty minutes of has-been entertainment. Even more disheartening was the fact that the concert was a financial disaster.

The second concert was much the same story, with a two night gig planned for John Mayall. The timing of the concert was terrible, coming after a vacation in an already crowded time of the year, but these were the only dates that could be obtained for the use of the Cage. Mayall was to be preceeded by Bruce Springsteen and Maria' Muldaur on the first and second nights respectively. As it turned out, on both nights, the back-up performer was a complete success and Mayall was shitty. On the second night, Mayall spent half his time in an obviously drunken jam session, while he spent the other half talking, giving plugs for the members of his group, and reading the Collegian. The Mayall appearances were another financial disaster, and it now appeared that the spring concert was indeed in question.

All these complications were only worsened by the cancellations of concerts by Leo Kottke and Bonnie Raitt. There were agents that promised groups that they couldn't produce, and groups that refused to play for one reason or another. And above all, was the one absurd fact that there was only two thousand dollars left. That's right, a total of fifteen thousand dollars had already been lost on the first two Cage attempts, and now it was time for a spring concert.

The Program Council came to the rescue with an additional five thousand, and with the projected expenses of two and a half thousand for the production cost, there is now only four thousand dollars remaining for the spring concert.

Now I'm not going to attempt to make excuses for the business ineptitude of the Concert Committee. Nor will I apologize for the lack of promotion or initiative. They muffed it and they know it. But to criticize them blanketly for something that's at best only half their fault is nothing more than irresponsible. These people are students who were trying their very hardest to bring music to the Umass community. They were hassled by just about everyone they were forced to work with, including most UMies, who expect to hear the Grateful Dead for their one dollar contribution. The attempts to make money on the first two efforts by charging $3.50 backfired because of some of the reasons stated above. Nonetheless, UMass students were still given the opportunity to attend three concerts more than they had the year before.

The outcome of the spring concert has not yet been positively determined, however, one can expect a disappointment that will probably make It's A Beautiful Day seem great. But if Umass students really want to avoid the same disasters occurring again next year, then they should get involved with the Program Council or be satisfied with what they get. The members of the Concert Committee feel that they've learned a lot from this year's escapades and they assure us of a better year of smaller concerts in 1974-75. Let's hope they have a little more luck.

Better Ted than red

Unfortunately for Ted Kennedy, Moscow State University has little in common with the University of Massachusetts. When visiting that major Soviet academic complex last Monday, he made the mistake of assuming that Russian students and professors would respond to a little bit of open dialogue in the same manner that American students do. The Senator had hoped that a good rap-session with the Russian academics would symbolically reinforce the whole charade of "DETENTE", a policy which both he and his alleged adversary, Richard Nixon, are enthusiastically putting over on the American people. But on Monday, the Russians made it perfectly clear that the Americans who believe in Detente are only fooling themselves.

In his typically pretentious fashion, Kennedy went through the motions of eliciting Russian opinions on a variety of issues. He asked the students and professors to respond to his questions by a show of hands. (A show of hands?! What does this American wish to accomplish by injecting his bourgeois-democratic pettiness into a well disciplined Russian institution?)

Several of the Senator's official escorts must have broken out in a cold sweat. At first, the Senator posed a number of moot questions, such as which event in Soviet history the audience considered to be the most significant. To these questions a small number of the students and professors responded sheepishly, and the rest looked around as if a new purge were about to begin.

Then, Kennedy dropped a bomb, although he probably didn't realize that it would go 'bang', in the face of Detente. He asked his audience to express whether or not they believed that their government was spending too much money on military and weapons development.

The audience froze.

"Provocateur!" cried one of Kennedy's Russian escorts.

The rector of the university began to twitch. One of the Soviet officials took the podium and spoke to the students in Russian. He then turned to Kennedy and informed him that the discussion was over.

"But why?" asked Kennedy.

"You are not feeling well, Senator," responded the official.

"But I'm feeling fine," retorted Kennedy.

"No you're not, Senator. You must come with us at once!"

With that, the good Senator was hustled out of the auditorium. To make him feel better, of course.

So what is the moral of the story? Plain and simply, the lesson to be learned from Senator Kennedy's little embarrassment is that Detente can't be a two way street, so long as Americans continue to mitigate and evade the devastating issue of Soviet totalitarianism. The fact that Senator Kennedy receives a genuinely enthusiastic welcome from the Soviet people (as do all high-ranking American visitors) does not mean that the Soviet government is in any way committed to a genuine Detente.

Despite the overpublicized and overglorified diplomatic shuttle, the Soviets have not put aside their ambitions to "inevitably" rule the world. They continue to push forward with their crash program for military superiority. They continue to sabotage any efforts to achieve a permanent settlement of the Middle Eastern crisis. They continue in their efforts to exterminate any dissent withing their won domain. And the continue to fortify the military build-up on the Chinese border.

When will we ever wake up?

Exorcise Nixon

By BOB FOSTER

I began today's column considering a general commentary upon the merits of Mr. Nixon. My mind quickly diverged to exorcism. I grew angered at my lack of intellectual direction. Then, I noticed how strikingly similar the two topic areas were. In the first, the American "coeur politique" wishes to rid itself of a seeming curse, a veritable demon disguised as a human President. In the second, the movie portrays a young girl whose possession causes many unusual, violent occurences. A priest, an exorcist, is sent as a last resort to attempt to rid the girl of the evil. The parallels between the two are innumerable.

We have seen the demon take on all who wish to rid us of its control. Thus far, the power of the knight of darkness has been more than even the best exorcising attorney could take. Archibald Cox and Elliot Richardson both attempted to battle the demon. Both suffered "the slings and arrows of defeat." James St. Clair seems to be appeasing the spirit. Yet, it was revealed today that even Mr. St. Clair lacks control. He is but a verbal protector of a devil that pulls all the strings, has tentacles in all the political pies. Mr. St. Clair should examine the results of others who attempted to appease; destruction was their reward.

The unfortunate consequence of an unexorcised Satan in a position of such control is that he brings an aura of fear and a desire for vengeance to all whom he touches with his evil. Thus, we find the Capitol gripped in a wave of fear, fear to take action, fear to battle a seeming insurmountable foe. This fear is well based politically. The income tax issue is the perfect case. Though many believed that it could have been a deciding burden, a force powerful enough to extricate the devil from the political body that it inhabits, it was not. Indeed, the prince of political prostitution turned it into a crucial Advantage at a time when one was most needed. With a wave of his political pitchfork, evasion no longer existed. Repayment became a substitute for imprisonment. I'm sure many wish they could do the same.

How then does one deal with such a power? How can we cope with a spirit able to turn gold to lead, confidence in government to apathy and despair? The task is not a simple one. Yet, the answer is found in any political sorcerer's book of incantations; political courage. The evidence is strong, almost compelling. The fear that grips the nation because of this power of political coercion is great. Fear may break the back of any people if it is allowed to continue long enough and with such magnitude. The formula becomes obvious: Combine a certain amount of Congressional action with the catalyst of political courage, stir in the political spirits of several martyrs, add experimental salt and allow to boil for several months. With such a formula, the result is almost predeterminnd. As in the ancient rite of exorcism, a devil which spews unending amounts of verbal garbage can be driven from the body in which it lives. The analogy continues to political exorcism. The aforementioned formula and a pinch of time are all that is needed.Pray for the exorcist.Pray that one may appear who has the convictional strength to survive the attacks of a political Satan.

HOT RODS and BANANA SPLITS

Infinite icecream

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

It took some 75 gallons of ice cream, 300 bananas and more than 100 lbs. of topping.

But members of Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity here say they have earned a place in Guiness' Book of World Records by constructing their record-breaking banana split last night.

The split was more than 272 feet long and was constructed by some 50 people on a table the length of a football field outside McManus's Eating Place in Hadley.

Despite the chilling temperatures, onlookers paid 50 cents to sample the delight. Proceeds, totalling about $150, are being donated to the Muscular Dystrophy Association.

It took about 25 minutes to build the split. Organizers had hoped the ice cream would be eaten in record time. It was not.

There was a proverbial whipped cream fight and according to Paul Sweeney, "both sides lost."

The event, part of Greek Week, attracted many media representatives who dutifully sampled the ice cream.

OK...clear the runway!

By BILL DENSMORE
MDC Staff

The 20-year-old sculptor stood adjusting the large bristle brush clamped solidly to the fiberglass body of his piece.

It was the first one-man-show yesterday for Joe Hoo Ng, a junior living in Moore House, and he was understandably nervous.

Up and down the asphalt walkway behind Herter Hall serving as a makeshift gallery were three-hundred students and administrators taking an afternoon break to watch his "painting performance."

"Danny, get the paint can quickly," Ng told a member of his pit crew. "Hold that up there," he said, pointing to a five-gallon plastic milk bag part filled with white paint.

While Danny emptied the bag into a tank in the chassis of the sculpture, Ng adjusted the engine to a screeching pitch.

"OK, clear the runway," he shouted.

Then Ng, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Ng of 50 Vernon Street, Brookline, set his "sculpture" on the pavement and lifted the brakes from his electronic control box.

The fifty-inch fiberglass and aluminum dragster with mini-slicks shot off down the four-hundred foot walk now lined with spectators.

A solid three-inch line of white paint zig-zagged behind the speeding dragster, left by a paintbrush mounted on the hand-shaped rear of the car which Ng has labelled "Painting Machine No. 3."

Art? Sculpture?

"The professors hrer are artists themselves and they appreciate a young kid wanting to try out his own show," said Ng, a sculpture major.

"It's really tricky business when you start asking what art is...I'm talking about high-speed painting and I chose a drag strip...Warhol did his Campbell's soup cans, why can't I do this?"

Ng conceived the painting dragster as a freshman, "but I just began building it this semester," he said. "It's top speed is 30 miles per hour but due to safety precautions, I had it only cruise at 20."

He said the car weighs ten pounds when full of three paints of water-soluble white paint and has radio controls for speed, direction, emergency brakes, paint flow and deployment of a "drag chute" from the car's rear.

"The entire show is really in three parts," he said, "the overview, the performance, which you saw, and a reception with videotape recap and thanking everyone for coming."

Will Ng get academic credit for the piece?

"Well, when I started this thing, I told all my professors to leave me to myself and they did. The work I put into this show is considerably greater than any art course I could take," he said.

Day schoolers tested for lead poisoning

Lead paint poisoning testing began Wednesday for children at the University Day School. Several student teachers at the school have been trained to work with community organizers from the Hampshire Neighborhood Center, which is developing a county wide lead poisoning education and screening program.

Lead poisoning occurs when kids chew paint that contains lead: on window sills, stairs, ceilings, woodwork, banisters, or flaking chips of paint or plaster. Only a tiny amount — a chip the size of a fingernail, is more than our bodies can safely take in.

The early signs of lead poisoning aren't very different from a cold or the flu. The child is sleepy, cranky, and has a lack of appetite. But the excess lead in the body builds up silently in the blood, causing anemia and depositing in the soft tissues like the kidneys and the brain, and leading to blindness, learning disabilities and mental retardation. By the time the poisoning is showing serious symptoms like convulsions or coma, there is already a 30 per cent chance of permanent damage.

This is why it is important to regularly screen children before they are really sick. The test is a simple, quick finger-prick, and is free. If the testing shows a high level of lead, medication might be necessary.

The presence of lead paint in a home where anyone under six lives is a violation of the state sanitary code. If you think your walls or other surfaces contain lead paint, your Health Department can get a machine from the State Childhood Poisoning Prevention Division that reads the lead content of paint on walls, etc. If you rent, your landlord is required to remove or cover safely any lead paint in your home.

Weekend energy fair features conference

By DENNY MATTEAU
MDC Staff

Last Monday was Earth Day, a day once prominent in the minds of environmentalists, and once again prominent in the light of the energy situation of 1974. A weekend "Energy Fair" in the Amherst high school featuring displays concerned with various aspects of energy production, consumption, and pollution was topped off with a dinner and conference Monday evening.

The guests included Prof. William Heronemus, of the UMass civil eng. department, Prof. Hiam Gunnar of the department of environmental sciences at UMass, Representative James Collins (D-Amherst), Prof. Leo Marx of History at Amherst College, and Jay Stryker, of the Amherst Environmental Concerns Committee.

The conference, which was broadcase live by WMUA from the Amherst High School auditorium, began with the question, "What would be the difference between the government owning the fuel resources, and the fuel industries owning the government?"

The question was not directly answered, but Prof. Heronemus, Mr. Stryker and Rep. Collins discussed the possibility of the government playing the role of competitor within the fuel research market by sponsoring work in areas which the private corporations find too unprofitable to their own interests.

Rep. Collins suggested that a town like Amherst could ask the large companies to set up non-polluting systems such as solar or wind power, and if they refuse, the local government should be able to obtain funds to independently sponsor the projects, and take over a section of the market now served by the private corporations.

Prof. Heronemus, who has done extensive research on wind power and has designed a system of offshore windmills, said, "If we really wanted to get on with it, with a properly organized plan, we could generate pollution-free electricity in four years."

Prof. Heronemus was asked about the current financial status of his research. He laughed and said "They (sources of research grants) won't do anything worthwhile until the year 2000, but for years ago, they said they'd never do anything for us, so you might say there's been improvement."

At the conclusion of the conference, Robie Hubley, director of the Amherst Audubon Society, awarded the Energy Fair Prize for Innovation to Beth Weeks.

What's the story?

Schedules

By EDIE WIEDER
MDC Special

WHAT'S THE STORY? is a regular feature in the Collegian. It is designed to answer your questions, respond to your gripes, and ease your confusion or desperation.

If there's something bugging you lately and the cause of the problem is even remotely related to the University system, I can help you. Just record your question or gripe on the back of a Bazooka bubble gum comic or any other available piece of paper and drop it in the WHAT'S THE STORY? wall box located at the entrance to the University Store or just deliver it to the Ombudsman's Office (919 Campus Center).

Please use this column to your advantage. I need your questions to make it work so flood the box with your queries.

Q. Why is it that the semester Schedule of classes and the Course Description Guides are always late for counseling period? I, and perhaps others, would much prefer to have a week or two to organize and plan a semester using these materials rather than the 48 to 72 hours we are given. Also why are the descriptions often misleading?

A. Here's the story: The Schedule Book and Course Description Guide are published through the efforts of two separate offices. The Scheduling Office in Whitmore is responsible for the compilation of all scheduling information dispensed by the academic departments of the University. Their operation depends on the cooperation of each department in getting the needed data to Scheduling by the March 1st deadline. A staff of about ten part-time students work for 5-6 weeks in putting the book together with the help of the Whitmore computer. The material is then shipped to a printer in Holyoke who requires about a week to process the 34,000 plus copies.

The Course Description Guide is entirely a student project. A staff of about 8-10 students working out of Academic Affairs work their butts off to get this book to you since the University has not taken responsibility for providing students with updated accurate information about course offerings. They must also conform to a printer's deadline but they are burdened by an additional hassle — lack of cooperation from some of the Departments who don't recognize the necessity of submitting course proposals on time or submitting them at all.

Actually, it is to the students' advantage that the Guide is distributed at this late date. The longer they postpone publication, the more course information gets included in the booklet. Since the School of Education, among others, was unable to prepare their descriptions by the last deadline, no Education courses were listed in the Guide.

I can see two solutions to the problem. The first would be to change the dates of Counseling Week to conform with publication deadlines which would be ridiculous and impossible (the University sets these dates three years in advance). A more reasonable solution would be a cooperative effort between the academic departments and whoever is responsible for publication of the Guides. Such a proposal is now being negotiated which would shift the burden of publication off the students' shoulders and onto the University's. I suspect that this would also facilitate an earlier distribution of the booklets by putting more pressure on each department to make a concerted effort to submit their descriptions on time.

In answer to your second question, I can only guess at what you mean by "misleading". If you mean that some of the proposals are worded so ambiguously that they provide you with little or no concrete evidence on which to base a wise decision, I can sympathize with you. Perhaps the prof really has no idea what he-she will teach seven months from now and uses his-her rhetorical skills as a camouflage for indicision. If you mean that the actual course rarely lives up to the expectations you've derived from the descriptions, blame that on the prof's enthusiasm and subjectivity or on your own naivete.

The law and you

Leaving your landlord behind

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND
Attorney for Students

Spring has so many qualities of rapturous pleasure it is anomalous that is should also be associated with perennial conflict and primordial essences. Yet as our hearts and minds lightly turn to thoughts of several manifestations of love, deep in our off campus loins the throbs of combat with "Landlord" evoke primitive sounds and gestures of war.

"Landlord" (a tri-furcated hydra-headed monster who may appear as man, woman or corporation at will) rides a sterling silver over-Charger and carries a tarnished shield with a lance of certain deception.

A caricature such as this or worse in many variations may be warranted in many cases. The other side of the residential tilt is not always pure and may, in many instances, be equal to the worst of landlords. Which is only to observe that the relationship of landlord and tenant is a human one.

Today there are a great many rules (laws in many cases) which protect tenants and landlords from each other and apply principally at the time when tenancies are terminating. IF YOU ARE GOING TO END YOUR TENANCY IN MAY OR JUNE, PLAN AHEAD SO THAT IT WILL SAVE YOU MONEY AND EVERYBODY GRIEF.

Tenancies at Will

If you do not have a lease, often called an oral tenancy, you must give notice at least one rent period in advance of your leaving. Under Massachusetts law, that does not mean exactly thirty days; it means from one rent due date to the next as the minimum required notice, in writing before the May rent due date.

You are legally required to pay rent until the date of your departure. If you do not leave on a rent due date, you are legally required to pay until the next rent due date, unless you make some other arrangement, in writing, with the landlord.

Leases, Subleasing, Assigning

If you have a written, properly executed lease you are legally responsible for your tenancy until the term of it expires. The obvious easy choice is stay until that date. If you must leave the tenancy for good, several months earlier than the lease provides, there are ways to reduce or eliminate liability.

Subleasing or assigning is the re-renting of your apartment by you to new sub-tenants. If this is to be done effectively, the final agreement should be in writing and whenever possible, signed by the Landlord who "assents" to the substitution of tenants. If the landlord does not know of the agreement, he may evict the "trespassers" — so both the tenant and sub-tenant should insist on a written agreement signed by the landlord.

When subleasing, take care to agree on every detail including furniture, if any, and security deposit — who is liable for what and who gets the money back. There are prepared forms that may be helpful in my office for any who want them.

Leaving

Whether you leave happy or sad and whether its "legal" or you are "skipping" at least try to perform the following final details for your own protection and future peace of mind.

1. Be sure to return the keys to the landlord and state in writing that you have left the premises for good (if you are skipping at least mail the keys and a note) and forwarding address. So long as you hold the keys and don't formally relinquish the apartment a judge may find you liable for rent.

2. Clean the apartment and remove all of your belongings. What you leave behind the landlord may store at your expense. If you inspect the apartment after cleaning, take note of areas where there is need of repair. Compare with the list you hopefully made on arrival. If you are inclined to super paranoia, take photographs of the place when you leave. This whole routine can be profitably done before subtenants arrive for mutual protection.

3. Security Deposits should be returned within thirty days of the lawful termination of the tenancy less, any lawful deductions for damage, extraordinary cleaning etc. Obviously, the landlord must have your address to mail the check.

Remember that a sublet is not the termination of the tenancy, the end of the lease term is. The parties should agree and the landlord should have written instructions about what to do with the security deposit if there are subtenants. Interest at 5 per cent should be added only if the deposit has been held by the landlord for a full calendar year whenever you first began as a tenant (and for each anniversary of the tenancy).

Please try to resolve any questions by direct contact with the landlord before you have a catastrophe or the appearance of one. If you need help, call. If you need forms, stop at the office, 432 Student Union.

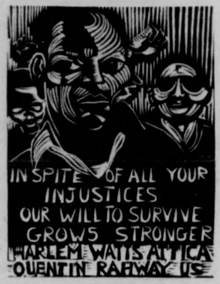
Valerie Maynard Exhibit—"Out of sight!"

by Bill Foster



"Beautiful, splendid, magnificent, out of sight" are some of the comments that could be heard in the NEW AFRICA House Gallery on Monday, April 22, 1974 at the opening of the Valerie Maynard exhibition. The response of the college community toward the work of this gifted artist was one of awe, even reverence. Word spread like wildfire across the campus that there was a "dynamite exhibition" at New Africa House and students and faculty filled the gallery and vied for a chance to speak with he talented artist.

Because of the popularity of the Graphics and Sculpture of Valerie Maynard the exhibit will be extended to May 10. New Africa House Gallery will also be open on weekends, Saturday and Sunday from 2-6.

Obesity and diets: no magical way

By DIANE WILKINS
MDC Special

312 students were diagnosed as being obese at the University Health Services. This figure reflects only those students who visited the health services with a weight problem — not the total number of students who actually are overweight or who view themselves as being "fat".

There is no "magical" way to lose excess pounds. Those who consider themselves overweight should consider the following facts: A survey taken by the U. S. Department of Agriculture showed that the average American college student's diet is 50 per cent fat. habitual snacking on empty caloric foods combined with irregular meal times produces a high caloric, low nutrition diet. Add to this diet a sedentary, desk-sitting life style and weight problems result.

Sensible, healthy weight control is based on a balanced, nutritious, low caloric diet. On 1,200 calorie a day diet the average stujent should lose 2 or 2¼ lbs. per week — and form some eating habits that should prevent he or she from becoming one of the 90 per cent of dieters who fail to maintain their weight loss.

In the United States an estimated 25-45 per cent of the population is considered obese. Every year Americans who are accustomed to a "fat" standard of living and conditioned to a "thin" standard of beauty support a 15 billion dollar weight-loss industry. Millions of copies of diet books and pamphlets are sold annually — in fact, with the exception of bibles and dictionaries, nothing in the history of literature has surpassed them in sales volume. In spite of the willing sacrifice of money, 90 per cent of dieters fail to maintain weight-loss.

Over the years medical authorities report hundreds of cases of people hospitalized from the effects of high fat and protein dieting programs. Prompted by these reports, the American Medical Associations Council on Food and Nutrition condemned the "Atkins" diet as not only being without scientific merit, but also hazardous to health.

Enticing the dieter with promises of easy weight loss while consuming as many calories as he or she wants, the high fat and protein diets are geared to induce an abnormal body response — the increased production of ketones. This "ketogenic" effect is usually associated with conditions of impaired metabolism such as diabetes. in normal quantities, these ketones play a routine part in the bodies metabolic processes, but in excessive quantities ketones suppress appetite. Even though there may be weight and appetite loss, the dieter may end up paying a high price in general health for the ketogenic effect.

Health problems resulting from these ketogenic diets run the gamut from fatigue and apathy to dehydration, calcium depletion and kidney trouble.

If you have a weight problem which persists despite increased exercise and a low caloric, well balanced diet, nutritional consultation as well as a medical evaluation are available by appointment in the Health Services. Call 549-2600 for an appointment.

Announcing the winners of The Schaefer Write-Your-Own-Punchline Contest.

Thanks and a T-shirt to everyone who entered The Schaefer Write-Your-Own-Punchline Contest. As we suspected, the entries were real snappers, featuring such clever literary devices as malapropism, obscenity and dullness. Gee whiz, it must be a lot of fun being in college nowadays.

Here are a few of the winning entries:

Richardson to be June graduation speaker

Elliot L. Richardson, former U.S. attorney general will be main commencement speaker at the 104th annual UMass-Amherst graduation ceremonies Saturday June 1 in Alumni stadium, the University news bureau said yesterday.

The 54-year-old Brookline native and Harvard Law School graduate will also receive an honorary Doctor of Laws degree, although UMass has no graduate law program.

Richardson, who resigned as attorney general last fall in the now famous ''Saturday night massacre'' has also served as Massachusetts lieutenant governor and attorney general.

Commencement ceremonies will begin at 10 a.m. in the Stadium, with UMass system President Robert Wood and campus chancellor Randolph Bromery officiating.

Asks Nixon to acknowledge blame

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP)-President Nixon ''should try to create a climate of confidence'' by acknowledging some mistakes in the handling of the Watergate affair, former Atty. Gen. Elliott L. Richardson said Wednesday.

Richardson told a news conference here that he opposes the idea that the President should resign. He said Congress should continue with its impeachment proceedings.

Although he declined to say if he feels Presdient Nixon should be impeached, he called on the President to ''acknowledge some degree of blame and put his full weight behind reform.

''He should try to create a climate of confidence by saying 'I was wrong in certain significant ways,' '' Richardson said, urging the chief executive to show a willingness to have a more open administration.

''The President's support of Republican candidates is no longer an asset and in many cases is a liability. His stature in the Republican Party has been eroded in many ways,'' he said.

The only way Republicans can avoid the loss of many congressional seats this fall would be to make it clear that it is inherently unfair to charge the sins of Watergate to Republican congressmen,'' he said.

Richardson said he would campaign for Republicans this fall ''to the extent that they come and ask me for help.'' consider the factors that effect a family's financial strength.

6.) A student who needs financial aid should provide a reasonable part of the total)1amount required to meet college expenses by accepting employment, a loan or both. Acceptance of a loan, however, should not be considered by the college as a prerequisite to the award of a scholarship or job.

7.) Because the amount of financial assistance awarded usually reflects the financial situation of the student's family, a public announcement of the amount by the college is undesirable.

8.) Consultation between colleges on the kind and amount of financial assistance to be offered a mutual candidate should be encouraged since this insures relatively equal aid offers to the student, making it possible for him to choose a college on education rather than financial grounds.

9.) The college should clearly state the total yearly cost of attendance and should outline for each student seeking assistance an estimate of his financial need.

The Financial Aid Office reports that single Massachusetts residents attending the University and living in University housing will normally spend $2400-$2600 per year. (This includes tuition and fees, books and supplies, room and board and personal expenses.)

10.) The college should not deny admission to a candidate on the grounds that it does not have aid funds to meet his apparent financial need.

In-state students receive top priority when being considered for financial aid while out-of-state students are nearly always referred to loans. Applicants needing less than $500 are immediately referred to loans also, according to Dent.

All scholarship awards must be approved by a committee made up of faculty members and members of the Financial Aid Office professional staff; the number of members on the committee from each group varies each year.

If an aid applicant feels that his need was not correctly assessed he may appeal his case.

During the spring and summer Dent and his staff hope to review all policies of the Financial Aid Office.

S.W. blacks out

By STEVE TETREAULT

The Southwest towers were darkened last night at the request of the Southwest Energy Conservation Committee.

In a leaflet distributed at suppertime, the committee asked that tower residents turn off their lights for 5 minutes starting at 10:00. The purpose of the blackout was to emphasize student concern and interest over the energy crisis.

At the appropriate time, three-fourths of the lights in the 5 towers were extinguished.

Dear Aggie ...

Dear Aggie,

My problem is probably very unusual with girls my age. I'm 18 and very shy — some even say, scared of boys. I can't talk or even look at a boy without breaking out into a cold sweat. Lots of boys try talking to me, but I'll just answer their question the quickets way I know how, then walk away. I want to be married eventually and have children, but I feel if my problem is not corrected soon, none of my dreams will ever come true. Please help me soon.

A Shy Girl

Dear Shy,

Actually, your problem isn't unusual at all. There are many women who, for some reason or other, just can't face men. But don't think it's unique to your sex. Many men have the same problem.

I don't know the cause of your problem — society itself, may be to blame. What I do know is that as long as you think this problem exists, it will. Try to talk some confidence into yourself. The next time a male comes up to talk to you, make yourself stay and talk to him. You'll be amazed at the way those words can flow with a little self-confidence.

May I also suggest a change in living environment? If you are living in an all-girl dorm, or on a single sex corridor, why don't you move onto a co-ed one? What could be a more natural setting an a better way to overcome your shyness?

If you still find it hard, may I suggest a talk with the people at Mental Health Services? There are many trained people there who I'm sure could give you more assistance than I.

Got a problem? Tell it to Aggie, the Collegian's exclusive advice columnist. Send any and all letters to the Collegian office, Student Building, U. Mass, Amherst and KEEP THOSE LETTERS COMING!

Fund raising for famine victims

It needs no emphasis that a devastating drought has struck certain areas of Africa, particularly Ethiopia, where the effects of this disaster is five times as much as a similar situation in West African countries put together.

As a result of this drought, there is now widespread famine, malnutrition and disease in Ethiopia. Phenomenal human and livestock losses have gripped this East African country unexpectedly. So far, more than 200,000 people have died and more are dying everyday at a frightening rate. Without an emergency supply of food, medicine and clothing it is estimated that 5 million people will perish in the next few months.

Relief funds have been flowing to Ethiopia from several International and Humanitarian Organizations. But more is needed from all possible sources.

The World Wide Federation of Ethiopian Students has been on the forefront in both publicizing the famine and raising funds for the Famine Victims in Ethiopia as early as March of 1973.

The Ethiopian Students in the Five College Area are taking part in this humanitarian fund raising drive for the famine. You can also contribute to this worthy cause by coming to a Fund Raising Event on Friday, April 26 at 7 p.m. Place of event is at The Campus Center Auditorium - University of Massachusetts. There will be an Ethiopian Dinner, soft drinks, slide and film shows about Ethiopia and speakers on the famine situation in Ethiopia. A contribution of $3.00 is requested and extra donations will be appreciated.

This event is sponsored by Ethiopian Students in the Five College Area in cooperation with African Students Union, Program Council, Student Senate and Poverty Committee at the University of Massachusetts.

The 56 member University Wind Emsemble will be performing works by Scott Joplin this Sunday in Bowker Auditorium at 3 p.m. The concert is free.

Dance for those that can't

Phi Mu Delta Fraternity will be sponsoring Friday, Saturday and Sunday their second annual 52-hour dance Marathon. This event will be held to raise money for the Muscular Dystrophy Associations of America.

The slogan this year, as it has been in the past, is "Dance For Those Who Can't". The object of the contest is to last the entire 52 hours and raise the most money as possible.

Last year, the fraternity sponsored a similar old-time marathon at which over $5,000 was raised for Muscular Dystrophy. Their hopes seem to go beyond that this year. Paul Cook organizer of the event, said, "The dance marathon was such a success last year, that we just had to have another. We're hoping to break the $5,000 mark that we raised last year."

Brian Boyson and Joanne Regan, along with Barry Lyle and Dianne Goff were the winners last year. This year the contest is once again being sponsored by Colt 45 Malt Liquor, who will be providing trophies, T-shirts, posters and banners as mementos. There are three prizes in this year's contest--$200 1st prize, $100 2nd prize, and $50 3rd prize.

To provide the dancers with music, eight groups from Boston, Hartford and New Haven area as well as some local bands will be performing. During the 52 hours there will be representatives of the various dancing couples covering the campus and in the center of town trying to raise as much money as possible, so that their respective groups might win.

Socialist lecture

The Young People's Socialist League — associated with the Social Democrats, U.S.A., the Norman Thomas party — and the Committee for Human Rights in the Soviet Area will jointly sponsor a twin lecture with public discussion here today.

Dr. Yuri Glazov, a Soviet dissident from Moscow now teaching linguistics at Boston College, will speak on "Soviet Dissidents and American Dissidents;" and Carl Gershman of New York, national chairman of the Young People's Socialist League, will talk on "Detente: What Kind?".

The program will begin at 7:30 p.m. sharp at the School of Business Administration, Room 116. The public is cordially invited.

Students who have applied for Outreach internships in Washington, D.C. and New York City must attend a meeting tonight at 7:30 in Campus Center room 113.

The subject of this meeting will be to discuss pre-registration and academic credit. This meeting is mandatory.

BDIC festival

The Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) is a degree granting program at the University of Massachusetts which offers an alternative approach to the traditional learning process by replacing existing majors with tailor made curricula created and designed by individual students under the sponsorship of a faculty member. A vital facet of every BDIC concentration is the excitement generated by students and faculty in creating a unique undergraduate major. It is hoped that this excitement will be communicated to the University community by Mosaic, a spring festival of the Arts which will provide a forum for the talents of BDIC students working in the Arts. Mosaic will run from April 29th through May 3rd and will include presentations of art, photography, music, film, and dance which will be open to the public free of charge.

Listen to the band

The University Wind Ensemble-Symphony Band will be presenting "An Old Time Band Concert" this Sunday at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The concert is free, and open to the public.

This concert marks the beginning of a series to be presented by The Wind Ensemble, including Pops Concerts and other popular band traditions. Following the theme of and old time concert, a march, "March of the Italian Riflemen", by Boccalari, will open the program. Traditionally, an overture follows, that being Dmitri Shostakovich's "Festive Overture". Following the mode of "An Old Time Band Concert", a soloist is featured next on the program. Joseph Duchi, Assistant Director of Bands will be guest soloist, playing trombone.

This concert also premieres The UMass Classical Rag Ensemble, a student group performing ragtime music by Scott Joplin. Ragtime music is currently making a comeback, after providing the recent hit movie, The Sting, with a musical score that is currently the craze of American radio.

Also on the program are works by Berlioz, Sousa, Ives and King.

Film maker to speak

Frederick Wiseman, a nationally renowned film maker whose films include Titticut Follies — a documentary about Bridgewater State Hospital; Law and Order — a study of the Kansas City Police Department; Juvenile Court; and High School, will speak on these films at Thompson 104, Monday, April 29th at 8:00 p.m.

Mr. Wiseman is also a lawyer, a graduate of the Yale Law School.

His appearance here is sponsored by the University of Massachusetts English Department and the Legal Studies Program.

Vets for migrant workers

To The Editor:

Recent media coverage and extensive literature exposing problems and conditions facing migrant workers have generated a mass awareness of one oppressed group within this society. However, this awareness has teken the form of an academic debate concerning the boycott by the United Farm Workers of the A&P Food Stores. Awareness and debate, unfortunately, cannot resolve these problems or end the injustice perpetuated against these people. Awareness and debate are essential in developing a basis for positive involvement, but it is this involvement which is fundamental to effective change.

We, as the Veterans' Coalition for Community Affairs, see the same oppression, brutality, and exploitation in this country as we saw in Vietnam. Although we were supposedly fighting oppression, for a nation that supposedly condemns exploitation, we have returned to a society that selectively discriminates and excludes extensive groups based upon racial, ethnic, occupational, and sexual distinctions.

For these reasons we, as veterans, feel it is imperative to support efforts that will lead to the immediate alleviation of these injustices. We invite all veterans and community members to participate with us in the UFW boycott of the A&P Store in Northampton on King Street [Rt. 5] tonight, Thursday, April 25th from 6 p.m. until 9 p.m. to demonstrate a united support for all oppressed people and specifically the migrant workers.

Mike Lescault
Veteran's Coalition for Community Affairs

Dog owners beware

To The Editor:

Spring has, at long last, sprung, and along with the herds of students who crowd the shores of Our Own Pond, are also packs of dogs that careen around and over prostrate bodies. Half of these curs are of retriever extraction and go swimming; and then with great glee, they shake the dirty, odor-laden water all over unsuspecting nature-lovers.

These dogs are a nuisance and occasionally a menace. There are people who are psychotically afraid of dogs and cannot cope with four or even one dog cavorting at their feet. Personally, I find dog packs a royal pain in the neck; from their attempts to persuade you to join in their games to their scavenging after your lunch.

The next time that I am annoyed by any dog at all on the UMass camqus, the way I was this morning [4-23-74, 10:00 a.m.], I will personally call the police and Dr. Ruder, crook and quack though he be, to get that dog[s] out of my hair.

Lest this letter be misinterpreted as the ravings of a dog-hater — I myself own a dog, half-lab, half-Irish setter, and she is large, young and playful. I try, however, to be responsible for making sure she gets plenty of attention and exercise without bothering other people. So dog-owners — take your dogs into classes, or leave them home, or tie them up. You wanted a dog, so please accept the responsibilities of ownership.

Gomes on Ragin

To The Editor:

Trends, eh people?

Henry Ragin, huh? What do you think Ragin is, hype-fed babies tooting their horns for true stupidity [with a capital 'S'—hit], for that is what cats like Ragin bring — blindness to your own failings.

"Failings?" says the Collegian. "We have none!" Wrong. If you wish to look for rampant egocentrism, Tucker, look to your own pages, where you have tenured editorialists. Closed? Goshwillikens, no! Us?!

Yeah, you. Yes the Senate did decide to "allow" Third World representation in the Senate. How long did it take us to "allow" it. Don't ridicule the Senate [altho it is ridiculous], unless you aren't blind to the factual observation that you might possibly duplicate their errors. Learn from their errors.

Agreed, Student Government is in need of a drastic change on this campus. Two years ago, the cry went up for Student Unionization. Where was the Collegian?

Ragin bears himself well, under his duties as a star [since that is what he surely is, as much as Moe Howard is — same mentality, or lack of it...] — but, if the shine of media hype gets in our eyes, we become blind. Comprehend? Also comprehend your suicide—no SATF, no Collegian*—or do you honestly believe you can sell this paper — or a fool like Ragin?*

With anger and disgust,
Gary Gomes

Course Guide "plugs"

To The Editor:

It is unfortunate that the Course Description Guide is being used to impose the womens' movement on people looking for courses. The ads at the front and back and the quotations sprinkled throughout, I feel, are not in the best interests of the movement.

Womens' rights is a surface issue. It is attitudes toward women which must be dealt with. So publicity must clearly seek understanding and be presented in a thoughtful way. The "plugs" in the Course Description Guide don't help me feel love and understanding for women, rather they hurt because I know they will turn people off.

Old fashioned night

To The Editor:

As many people on campus are aware, the University Chamber Singers are trying to raise the necessary funds to finance their European tour this summer. Through various projects the group has earned part of the needed amount. We'd like to thank everyone who helped the group by participating in our first dorm collection. There will be another one next week for the dorms which weren't canvassed last time. Also, thank you to everyone who patronized our coffeehouse at the Worcestor Blue Room last week.

For those people who would like a little different style of entertainment, the Chamber Singers will present an "Old-Fashioned" Night on Thursday April 25. Don't let the name fool you. There will be lots of ragtime music — this is the music made popular by The Sting. Come hear and see it as it was meant to be performed. Drop by Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest on Thursday night, anytime from 9-1 p.m.

'Odd couple' wins second Pair-a-thon

By MDC Staff

The 'odd couple' won the 2.8 mile male and female pariathon roadrace for the second week in a row. Twelve year old Marion Larson of Pelham teamed up with UMass math grad student Mark Elmer to win with a combined time of 33:43. Elmer won the race in 14:30 while Larson placed third among the women in 19:13 (Each started at the same time and ran at their own pace and simple addition of both times showed the littlest runner and the biggest runner far ahead.)

Fifty-five year old Howard Jaffe, a geologist, teamed up with his daughter who won the women's division. Marina Jaffe ran 18:06 to out distance Marion Kulick who placed third with her teammate John Cykoski.

A brother and sister act placed fourth, Betty and John Toms. John Toms led for the early mile of the race.

Eddy and Anke de Rooij from Holland place fifth while Kay Moran of Pelham and Bob French from the Endlish dept. teamed up for sixth.

Another Pairathon will take place Saturday at 2:00 starting and finishing on the north end of the stadium loop visable from Boyden Gym. Prizes and refreshments are distributed after the race which is sponsored by the UMass Women Track Club and the Sugarloaf Mt. A.C. The races are sanctioned by the New England A.A.U.

Racketeers seek fourth straight Yankee Conference championship

By GLENN POSTER

"This is what the whole season is all about. If we don't win it, I'll consider the season a bust," stated UMass tennis coach Steve Kosakowski in reference to this weekend's Yankee Conference Championship Tournament. The whole thing will take place at the University of Rhode Island in Kingston on Friday and Saturday. The Minutemen are the defending champs (as they have been for three years running going into the action.)

The eventual winner should be any one of the following three schools: UMass, UConn, or Vermont. Other YanCon teams represented will be the host squad URI, Maine, and New Hampshire. In the tourney it is not team vs. team, but who your particular first, second seed etc. should play in the first round. The brackets will be drawn up at a meeting which will be held before the match, tomorrow night. Each coach comes into the meeting saying, "My number one should be playing so-and-so and here are the records to show who he's beaten thus far." And the dickering goes on and on.

Anyway, the Minutemen will be going with pretty much the same line-up that has been effective in compiling a 5-3 record thus far. The singles players from one to six will be Bob Schpeiser, Don Douglas, Mark Brass, Barnaby Kalan, Fred Braley, and Chris Post. The doubles combinations will be Schpeiser-Douglas, Brass-Kalan, and Fred Braley paired with Dave Abramoff.

The scoring system will be basically the same as it has been all season long with one point awarded for each individual victory. And, naturally, when the two days of play are over, the school with the most points will be the new (or in case UMass comes through, repeating) Yankee Conference Champion.

It will be the high point of the season.

He gave up eighteen runs

What's the best way to report an intramural softball game: the strategical moves, exciting plays, or the thrill of victory (the agony of defeat)?

Play in a game!

After coming up with this brilliant deduction, I decided to talk with a friend of mine who happens to be the general manager of the Brown Raiders (he wished to remain anonymous).

Well, being good friends, he consented to my taking over the reins for a couple days, and made me temporary-manager.

So, last week when the Raiders finally got to play their season opener against the McNamara Moondogs, I was there with my 'B' hat on, ready to coach this young team to victory.

As manager, I even got to make out the starting lineup and the batting order. Naturally, this meant that I would be the starting pitcher (2-2 lifetime) with Mark catching. Paul, Scott, Dan, and Ron played the outfield, while the infield consisted of Ken, Les, Dave and Mike.

Then, the game began.

The first Moondog stepped up to the plate. After a ball and a called strike, I threw him a slider that didn't turn over, and he blasted it about 320 feet down the left field line for a home run! The next batter got a hit. The one after him reached on an error, and things weren't going as I had expected them to.

This is when it should've rained, because the next man up hit the second homer of the inning and it was 4-0. I started getting worried. Four runs on two homers isn't a good start. What else could happen?

How about six more runs for laughs? That's just what happened in the next ten minutes (which seemed like hours), with the help of more bad pitches, and some unlucky breaks.

At the end of two complete innings, the score was 12-3, McNamara.

If you know anything about intramurals, you know anything can happen. And in the third inning, that 'anything' did happen...but against the wrong team.

The Moondogs hit, and hit, and just kept hitting. In fact they didn't stop hitting until they had themselves seven more runs (and their third homer of the game) and a 19-4 after three complete. And for all practical purposes, that was the game.

There were some good points, though. The game ended with the Raiders getting six runs in the last inning, making the final score Moondogs-19, Raiders-12. Ken hit a two run homer for the Raiders in the fourth. I shutout the Moondogs for the last two innings (games only last five innings.).

But, the best news of all was that the game was just an exhibition game because the i.m. office has canceled the regular season games (thus, they don't count) and entered all teams into a single-elimination campus playoff tournament, which starts today.

Maybe I'll get a chance to redeem myself...

The game was still fun, even without the thrill of victory. The agony of defeat disappeared with the fact that it was only a practice game. Exciting plays? I got to see us hit into an inning-ending double play. And last but not least, the only strategical moves made, were inserting new players into the lineup-figuring it couldn't hurt. You could ask why a new pitcher wasn't put in-but I had faith in the starting pitcher.

You win some, you lose some..

Irate letters to Steve Saraceno

Dear Steve Saraceno:

Your article on gymnastics (4-24) leaves me confused and sick to my stomach. Are you advocating a four sport, ''meat and potato'' athletic program for UMass? You claim that football, basketball, hockey, and baseball are the major sports on campus. Where does your information come from, and why are there four major sports and not one or eight? If your priorities for sports are spectators, than you had better reconsider the inclusion of baseball. If national promience is the criterion, a rethinking of hockey is in order. If financial management is your criteria, football's disproportionate allocation and spending may puzzle you. And if the names of waterboys is important, you had better ask your average sports fan to rattle off the basketball team's helper. Just who is this average fan and what data do you have for your article?

Your search for involvement through sensationalism is ill-founded and inaccurate to say the least. You must possess a rare understanding for sport and human behavior. In fifty-one illogically written lines you have written off one of the world's oldest sports, eleven other UMass. men's sports, and forty-five thousand potential taxpayer and student petition signatures. Have you ever seen a gymnastics meet? Or are you content with knowing Al Skinner's locker combination? ''It is not a sport to get excited over'' is some quote. Please come to a meet in the cage and tell the 3,500 present not to get excited. Tell the turn away-crowds at the auxiliary gym not fall asleep while Gene Whelan (WHO?) is on the apparatus and their concentration is almost as intense as his. The only reason some of this campus' minor sports are minor is because of similar mentalities to yours. If the amount of money poured into the Big Four was cut into ten equal parts, the minor sports would be more major. Gymnastics at UMass has improved to the point of attracting athletes with only a minimal amount of scholarship money. UMass has the potential for a big time sport, but columns like your are hindering this occurence.

You have missed the point. The athletic department's financial crisis is the problem not the justification of gymnastics activity. My question is why gymnastics and why not a more unpopular or more expensive sport? The athletic department has not offered a sport priority list and I hope your's never is proposed.

I fail to believe that any outside the Collegian knows your name better than the name of the custodian on the eleventh floor of the Campus Center and therefore you should be shot.

Sincerely,
Michael L. Kasavana

Dear Mr. Saraceno,

I would like to make a few comments to your article in Wednesday's (4--4) MDC.

Why are football, basketball, baseball, and hockey "meat and potato" sports? Because if one is good enough, one can make money at it? Certainly not because of spectator support!

Basketball and football may have large spectator appeal, but gymnastics is also a "bonafide" spectator sport. In the middle of an NIT season, the basketball team could not even fill the Cage to one half its capacity, the football team never once played to a full house, even on Yogi Berra Day, but the gymnastics team, in one of its best years, played to a non-full house just once, during a heavy snow storm, one week after intersession, and they still put 3500 people into Curry Hicks Cage.

In a random sample survey taken recently 65 per cent of the students on campus could name at least one member of the men's gymnastics team and the same percentage knew that 10.0 was the top score receivable and that an 11.8 did not exist. (31 per cent also knew some of the janitors in Boyden.)

This sample may not be large enough to be considered a valid sample, but it seems to show that the gymnastics team is something other than "as anonymous as Boyden's janitors."

And finally, most people know that 10.0 is the perfect score for an individual gym routine, not "11.8" or any other score.

So, Steve, the average sports fan, forget Evil Knievel and skeet shooting, and watch the symnastics in between and learn something.

Sincerely,
Donald C. Fuller, Jr.

To The Editor:

In reference to Steve Saraceno's article on ''meat and potato'' sports.

Granted, scoring in gymnastics is not quite as basic as scoring in the ''meat and potato'' sports but let me point out that, first I have confidence that the majority of students on this campus have the mental capacity to deal with basic averaging of decimals and I think Mr. Saraceno has no right to insult the students by saying ''it is difficult to understand...''. Second, there is absolutly no need to do any math whatsoever. At the beginning of each meet the scoring is explained, after each event the team score is given and the team total score is given. The fan need merely listen.

In regards to the overall anonymous character of the gymnasts themselves, I believe this to be a result of the type of ''meat and potato'' journalism written by people like Mr. Saraceno. Let me point our that while Gene Whelan, through his hard work and dedication, became an All-American, took first place in the Easterns and recently took third in the World Game trials, he rarely, if at all, got any back page coverage.

Finally, let me comment on the excitement of gymnastics, which Mr. Saraceno believes non-existent. As in any sport the excitement level is only as high as the level of competition. When the football team plays Vermont the game seems quite a bit longer than when they play such teams as Boston College. So it goes in gymnastics. If the team meets a team, like MIT, whose calibre is closer to that of high school level, something which will become more frequent if competition is restricted to New England, then of course the meet will be boring. What I suggest for Mr. Saraceno is that he attend a meet, such as when UMass met Southern Conn. During this high calibre meet the crowd, which packed the Boyden Auxiliary Gym, had no difficulty following the scores, suddenly even the least knowledgeable fan knew who the pressure was on and by name. Might I suggest, Mr. Saraceno, that you attend such a meet and feel the energy which flows through the crowd before you make any statements on the excitement level of gymnastics.

Sincerely,
Charles F. Hall

To Mr. Saraceno:

Your article concerning gymnastics in Wednesday's Collegian must be argued with on its basic premise; That gymnastics is too esoteric and dull.

Websters Dictionary defines esoteric as ''intended for or understood by only a chosen few.'' With the popularity of gymnastics higher than it has ever been before, you have hard proof that it does not fit the definition.

Gymnastics, at its best here, appeals to all. It is a total sport which involves a highly tuned body with a mind to match. You pose a similarity between gymnastics and a math class. Yet you fail to realize the ultimate value that each offers. The spectators are at meets as students. They are still undergoing a learning process. And, if you had been present at the women's Easterns you would have seen that dull is not an acceptable adjustive to describe dymnastics.

In addition I don't think that you can make a case for the other sports by saying that ''rabid fans can reel off names of other players.'' What is important is that gymnastics provides a pleasant diversion from run-of-the-mill athletics. The standing-room-only crowds at Boyden Auxiliary Gym proves my point.

In conclusion, you should research your ''facts'' more carefully. Calling a team that is nationally ranked and a quality program ''low esteem'' is narrow minded at best. If the gymnastics program is phased down as planned a large gap will result in the athletic program. And not only will the effect be felt here but in the surrounding community as well. The impact of the sport is too widespread to be dismissed like so much garbage. I sincerely disagree that the average campus sports follower will not miss gymnastics, as you say. For an athletic program to be well-rounded it must teach all aspects of sports. By excluding gymnastics this goal cannot be fulfilled. I submit that the University community will not let this happen.

Chicago wary of Esposito, Orr

CHICAGO [AP] – The Boston Bruins don't have their backs against the Stanley Cup wall yet, but it could happen soon if the Chicago Black Hawks keep harnessing Phil Esposito and Bobby Orr.

As the Hawks strive for a second successive victory and a 3-1 edge over the Bruins in Chicago Thursday night, Esposito and Orr own only two goals between them in this semifinal Cup series.

Brilliant Hawk goaltending by Tony Esposito mainly has been responsible for holding brother Phil to two goals while Orr has gone scoreless.

Tony made three straight fantastic saves against Phil Tuesday night in an overtime 4-3 victory at the Chicago Stadium which may have taken considerable starch out of the free-wheeling Bruins.

Phil managed the first goal of the series at Boston last Thursday when Tony again was superb in a 4-2 triumph. Phil got his other goal Sunday when the Bruins caved the roof in on Tony with an 8-6 bombing.

Hawk coach Billy Reay contends his club is not paying special heed to Phil Esposito, who banged in 68 regular season goals.

"We're not keying on Esposito, but we are keying a bit on Orr. We try to swarm Orr as soon as he gets the puck."

The Hawks still were far from chesty after their dramatic rally erased a 3-1 Boston lead and pulled out a 4-3 decision on Jim Pappin's goal at 3:48 of the sudden death overtime Tuesday night.

"That go-ahead game was a great lift for us," said Reay, "and it must be demoralizing for them to have lost a two-goal lead in the third period.

"But Boston is a great hockey team and we've still got a long way to go."

Veteran Stan Mikita, whose goal with 42 seconds of regulation time left forced the overtime, said, "I thought Boston played a helluva game. But we didn't open up as much as we did Sunday and didn't give them as many chances."

Phil Esposito blamed over-cautious play for Boston's sudden collapse Tuesday night.

"We got too defensive with a 3-1 lead," said Esposito. "That we cannot do. We're still in it and they know it. Tony stopped me three consecutive times Tuesday night. Maybe the next time, I'll get three consecutive goals."

Celts finish off NY; advance to NBA finals

By DAVE O'HARA

BOSTON [AP] — John Havlicek and Dave Cowens turned a close game into a virtual rout with a devastating attack in the fourth period and the Boston Celtics defeated the New York Knicks 105-94 last night to advance to the National Basketball Association championship round against the Milwaukee Bucks.

The Celtics defeated New York's defending NBA champions 4-1 in the best-of-seven Eastern Conference final. Boston will meet Milwaukee, the Western Conference champion, in a best-of-seven series opener starting Sunday on the Bucks' home court.

Havlicek, who kept the Celtics close with 19 points in the first half, finished with 33, including 10 in the final 12 minutes as Boston broke away from an 80-79 lead at the three-quarter mark.

Cowens had six points and a couple of key assists while completely dominating the boards after picking up his fifth personal foul with the fourth quarter less than two minutes old and the Celtics still nursing a one-point lead.

The big center also came back after sitting out much of the third period to score two crucial three-point plays as the Celtics fought back from a 52-45 half-time deficit.

Cowens' layup and free throw after being fouled by John Gianelli in the closing seconds of the third quarter put Boston in front to stay.

Veteran forward Paul Silas gave Boston a big shot in the arm in the third period as he grabbed 11 rebounds, many of them with Cowens sitting on the bench, and the veteran also contributed eight points in the big spurt.

Havlicek scored six points and Cowens two before Phil Jackson cashed two free throws for New York's first points with the fourth period more than 4¼ minutes old. The Celtics added six more points, four by Cowens and two by Havlicek to pull away to a commanding 94-81 lead and the game was decided.

With his 33 points, Havlicek, the Boston team captain, boosted his playoff total for his career to an even 3,000.

Cowens and Don Chaney each had 19 points for Boston, while Silas had 14 and Don Nelson 13.

Jackson led the Knicks with 27, with Walt Frazier contributing 23 and Bill Bradley 17.

Earl Monroe had only six points for New York.

The Celtics jumped to a 2-0 lead on a hook shot by Cowens in the opening seconds of the game, but then committed seven consecutive turnovers. Despite the Boston errors, the Knicks were unable to pull away and the Celtics went in front again 21-20 just before the buzzer.

However, the Knicks took command in the second period, hitting on 12 of 21 floor shots for their 52-45 half-time advantage. Jackson scored 10 points in the surge and also helped the Knicks control the boards.

Boston had only seven rebounds in the second period.

DeBusschere was given a standing ovation by a capacity crowd of 15,320 at Boston Garden as he left the game on his last appearance as a player in Boston.

GARBER's GORILLAS-UMass lacrossers, Billy Collins (21) and Billy Arnold (34) battle for a loose ball with a Cortland State player while the referee checks the action. UMass faces Holy Cross today.

Crusaders hunt gorillas

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Garber's Gorillas will meet Holy Cross today in a game starting at 3 p.m.

The ninth-ranked Gorillas are now 4-2 after defeating Boston College on Tuesday night, by a 13-8 score. They lost their first two games to Hofstra and Cortland State, respectively. Since then they have won four straight, defeating, in order: the University of Connecticut, Harvard, Fairleigh Dickinson University, and Boston College. The Gorillas have been averaging thirteen goals per game, although they haven't been playing to their full potential.

The Gorillas relaxed a bit in those games. Their play was lackadaisical at times. However, in the Boston College game they showed signs of just how well they could play. In the first half of that game they executed well. Their running and passing was excellent and their fastbreak clicked. There was a lapse in the second half but the Gorillas' overall play was better in the Boston College game than it was in previous ones.

Holy Cross will be coming into town, looking to upset the ninth-ranked Gorillas. Said Coach Garber, "We are the big game on their schedule, so they'll be really psyched up for the game."

Last week Holy Cross defeated M.I.T. by a 13-7 margin. Last year the Gorillas blasted Holy Cross, 13-5, on a wet and sloppy day in Worcester. UMass also has a very impressive record against Holy Cross over the years. Thus far they have won thirteen, lost three, and tied one against the Crusaders.

Holy Cross coach, Harry Tiffany, is only in his second season. His team plays a rough, defensive game. The Crusaders have a combination football-lacrosse team. Many Holy Cross gridders play lacrosse also. They have some good players from Maryland Massachusetts. Their main attack consists of Claude Priolet, John Moriarty, a junior from Rochester, New York, and Fran Meagher, a senior from Baltimore, Maryland. Other standout players for the Crusaders include: Rick Gaudette, from Needham, Mass., Jack Thaler, from Rockview, Maryland, and Brian Fortes, from New Jersey.

While Holy Cross relies heavily on defense, the Gorillas rely on their speed and finesse, where they can beat the Crusaders.

Is the decision final?

Editor's note: The following is the last in a series of articles by a special Collegian investigating team about the recent decision to phase down the UMass gymnastics program.

By BEN CASWELL

Everyday you can read in most any newspaper about inflation. You can read about the rising costs of anything and everything. Those factors are no different in a university structure such as the one we attend. Budgets are being cut or trimmed in certain places or programs and we can certainly look forward to more in the line of reductions all around. Starting next year budget cuts of 4-5 percent will be initiated throughout the Athletic department encompassing all of its twenty-three sports programs. The issue at hand, relating specifically to men's gymnastics is one that looked at from a logical business-like standpoint seems a feasible decision. Interim coach Tom Dunn has no state appointed position, men's gymnastic travel expenses rate high on the budget list, henceforth to not make a state position is what seems to be the correct decision to make. This way the phasedown of men's gymnastics along with the cut of its budget will take place much easier. According to Athletic Director Frank McInerny, "we did not single out gymnastics, it is just the position that they are in, there is no state position available for Tom Dunn."

"Next year it will be business as usual, we will honor our schedule and scholarship committments and Tom Dunn will stay on as gymnastics coach. My hope is that after next year the school will be able to come up with someone who will have the adequate qualifications to coach gymnastics. It will be more of a part-time assignment, maybe someone who is doing something else in the school," these are A.D. McInerny's feelings on the future of the men's gymnastics program. Dean of the school of Physical Education, Bischoff hopes that the program can be kept at the New England varsity level, also with a part-time coach. Associate A.D. Director Bob O'Connell feels the same as does McInerny about the New England level facotr.

Right now gymnastics has far exceded that point, competing and doing quite well on all national levels. Individually Jay Aronstein and Gene Whelan have taken N.C.A.A. All American honors, the first major college N.C.A.A. All Americans this university has ever had. Relating to them and to coach Tom Dunn what I could see was the epitome of frustration. They know what gymnastics has done and what it could do but a decision such as the one that has been made will certainly negate the future. Having to live with their memories of the past and their frustrations is in direct contrast to the optimism for the future and confidence in the worth of their decision that I saw in McInerny and O'Connell.

To logically, financially, and in a business-like manner look at the gymnastics decision is to do what appears to be right, but can not be completely so. There are other athletic programs in this university that have had much more to work with and have achieved much less than gymnastics on a quality level. Whose ever decisions warranted this series of articles also warrants I feel somewhat more of an insight by all of this universities' members as to how, why, what and where hundreds of thousands of dollars of your money is going. A decision such as the one that has been made, no matter what the "obvious" reasons are is certainly only the beginning of what could be many other decisions that people may disagree with.

The background, history, decision policy and future of the men's gymnastics program was made known to you in this series by our investigating team who's interviews of certain involved parties and research of the subject was geared towards letting you know what is happening or has happened. Our feeling is that hopefully an insight has been provided that might require further persuance. Men's gymnastics is certainly on the verge, or more likely past the verge of drastic reduction in stature, quality, and motivation. The situations and persons involved must be sorted our and made perfectly clear in relation to the rest of the Athletic department and its policies before the worth of any research or interviewing can ever be seen. The futility and incomprehension on the faces of those affected is something that must be remedied. It is our hope that it can be done in the best interests for all those involved.

Big Green gets revenge cools off track team

By SCOTT HAYES

Dartmouth's powerful track team combined with Tuesday afternoon's rainy weather to cool off a red-hot UMass squad 116-38. The winners swept seven events on the path to victory, set two meet records and tied a third. The loss dropped the Minutemen to a 6-2 record.

Evidently, Dartmouth wanted to make up for last Saturday's loss to UMass, and the Big Green poured it on. Bob Cummings set a new javelin record with a fling of 236-10 and pole vaulter John Carmony cleared 14-9 for another record. Dave Woody and Chet Gray, both high jumpers, tied the meet standard of 6-4 as they finished in a tie for first.

The trackmen did get outstanding efforts from Curt Stegwerwald and Bob Adamson. Stegerwald equalled the Dartmouth mark in the 440 hurdles with a time of 54.6 and Adamson broke the triple jump record with a leap of 45-2.

The only other bright spot in a rather dismal day for UMass was a first place finish by co-captain Jim Hennessey in the 120 high hurdles. Hennessey, who owns the school record in the 120's, was timed in 14.9.

The loss snapped a streak of six dual meet wins and a championship performance at the BC Relays. The Dartmouth meet was another case of Coach O'Brien having to rest some of his top athletes because of the demands of a tough schedule.

Members of the team will be departing Thursday and Friday for Philadelphia's Franklin Field, the site of the prestigious Penn Relays. The trackmen, fresh off their exciting team performance that earned them top honors at BC, will be up against some stiff competition in the city of brotherly love. Villanova, Bowling Green, Indiana, Michigan and Manhattan are among the best teams entered in the Penns. Dave Wottle and Tony Waldrop are expected to be among the field of fine individuals.

The distance-medley relay team of Jack Maloney, Steve Crimmins, Bill Gillin and Devin Croft should have plenty of incentive, running in the tough Championship of America Division. The foursome qualified for the meet's highest level of competition with a 9:58 over the weekend.

UMass will also be aided by the return of the number one distance runner, Randy Thomas. Thomas is coming off a slight knee injury that kept him from taking part in the relays.

LONG JUMPS — Next week's meet against URI is the last of the dual meets, with a possible meet against the Greater Boston Track Club on May 4, an open date. The rest of the meets on the schedule are all big ones — the YanCons, New Englands and IC4A's.

Professor Marion Brown

The Second Night of the Purple Moon — Observe Poison from Gomes

The 'First Night of the Purple Moon' was presented this past summer in New Jersey, and featured Larry Young (Khalid Yasin) former Tony Williams Lifetime, Miles Davis, etc., and the Art Ensemble of Chicago.

The 'Second Night' was no less startling than either of its predecessors — llst year's Black Musicians Conference, or its namesake.

Marion Brown and Clifford Thornton took the stage first, with percussionist-extraordinaire Steve McCall and bassist Reggie Willis.

Marion approached the soprano and alto saxes most reverently, giving homage to the predecessors on the instruments (and which provides for much of the continuity of so-called 'Jazz'), while retaining his whole musical and unique self through the horns.

Marion is currently an Associate Professor at Bowdoin College in Maine. He is also a professor of the music he plays, having been tutored by Sun Ra, Ornette Coleman and Archie Shepp. And, he is carrying on a storytelling tradition through his composition and playing. I've seen him only once before, with trumpeter Leo Smith at Smith College, and he was more senses-staggering there, but the set that he played at UMass was highly-charged, delicate, and full of Spirit. Marion is a teacher — a folk historian.

The lesser known poets, Amus Mor, Robert Ruff and Tony McNeill appeared, and did some of the most effective readings these ears have ever heard. Mor, although very serious in intent, consciously threw in little puns to make us let down our guards.

The Richard Abrams Sextet appeared, with Abrams on piano, mouth flutes and electric piano; Steve McCall, percussionist and co-founder of the AACM; Wallace McMillan, multi-reedplayer; Reggie Willis, bass; Kalaparusha Ahrah Difda (Maurice Benford McIntyre), saxophonist who has released two group albums on Delmark records; and lastly (but certainly not least), Henry Threadgill the incredible composer, arranger, writer, etc. plus gut saxophonist of the first caliber.

Abrams started out the set with a solo piano piece that brought back memories and empathetic vibrations of feeling for Cecil Taylor, but Abrams, although unique in possessing the power he does on piano and is, in that regard similar to Taylor, has his own distinct percus-elodic structures, from extremely low and cyclical to very high and burning.

The rest of the band joined, McCall picking up a stray percussion device, joining in the rhythmic thrust Abrams was developing, then he and the McMillan joined in (McMillan on searing soprano), then finally the entire group breaks out into this most innredibly fast march time you've ever heard in your life! And Andrew Mac sits next to me shouting rituals profane and holy — together — march for victory. Hoo BOY! Steve McCall is rocking the entire place now, a picture of perfect discipline, with outbursts of electric energy, not unlike a highly disciplined martial arts expert. McMillan fades out his solo, and Threadgill takes over the stand. Whew! He rocks back and forth, as tho' he's about to rip up the entire stage, accentuations of the high and low "GUTS" on his instrument, then bursting upward in gales of sound.

Finally Kalaparusha gets up, an extremely lyrical player, very much in tune, and his sax matches the relentless drone of the rest of the group.

What? Now, upper drone. Flutes pierce the still nite area, fast and light descend, giving way to more improvisations, developing the piece.

Steve McCall, in particular, was a veritable joy to watch, as he co-led the band with Abrams.

At the end of the concert, Professor Max Roach approached Steve McCall, and told him he felt like he'd been watching an octopus. McCall replied that he was still paying his dues to Professor Roach.

And if we'll be honest with ourselves, we all are, since this music is as essential to intelligent life on this planet as blood is to real life. Humanity has a duty — not to destroy itself. If we ignore this music, and the life force it could represent to us, then we are dooming ourselves to a living death. And what more hellish existence is there than that?

Appetite plus Atmosphere – Discover the Alamo

By Anna Livia Plurabella and Charles Dolan Jr.

THE FIVE COLLEGE CULINARY GUIDE

You might walk by The Alamo for years before discovering it. Once you do, however, it's the kind of place where you could easily become a regular. There's a definite personal style to the restaurant that sets it apart from the proliferating fast foods empire. The owner, who also cooks all the food, sets the style. She has firm ideas on exactly what a restaurant as well as everything else should be like. In an informal, down-to-earth way she was amenable to sharing these opinions with her customers.

All of the items on the menu are based on old family recipes. The food is Texas-style Mexican served in an unpretentious friendly atmosphere. The kitchen is not completely seperate from the dining area, and there are no frills to the place. The Alamo is a two woman operation, cook and waitress, and we were told it gets a little hectic on Saturday night. The place is small, so it's a good idea to call ahead for reservations on weekends.

As an appetizer you can get a large portion of guacamole stuffed into a big red tomato ($1.75). Pleasing to the eye and the palate, the serving is enough for two people and should not be passed up. The tamales (chili) at $1.30 were fair. We felt they could probably use a little more filler. The tacos were a definite improvement on the Taco-Belle, or Jack-in-the-Box variety. The enchilladas were delicious. We recommend them highly. There's also a special ($2.75) that combines an enchillada, a tamale, refried beans and corn chips. That was good, but it's more economical to buy the items separately. For side orders, we tried refried beans ($.40) and Mexican rice ($.40). The beans were very good and the rice okay. The food was not as spicy as we would have liked, which may be because it's Texas style. Hot sauce is available. The waitress told us that all the ingredients are flown in from San Antonio, Texas.

One dessert is offered on the menu, paradise pudding. It was a different sort of pudding, sweet and rich with a fruit flavor. It's definitely worth trying. The Alamo does not have a liquor license, but people are welcome to bring their own.

The Alamo is open from Thursday to Sunday 5-10 p.m. A word of caution: the owner closes at 10:00, so be there by 9:30. If you want to make reservations on weekends, the owner suggests making them before 5:00. We liked The Alamo. If you want to eat someplace different from slick. assembly line restaurants, then remember The Alamo.

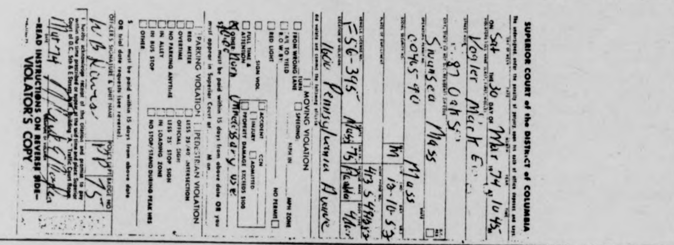
Vogler Horny – Gets Ticket



SUPERIOR COURT of the DISTRICT of COLUMBIA
Vogler Mark E.
Swansea Mass
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue
—READ INSTRUCTIONS ON REVERSE SIDE—
VIOLATOR'S COPY

This past spring vacation Mark Vogler, writer for the Collegian, received his second ticket in less than three months for illegal use of horn. Both so called violations occured in front of a large white house located at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue in Washington.

I personally witnessed this last episode which saw Vogler begin honking his horn at one end of the White House and ended at the other end when he was rudely greeted by three policemen standing in the middle of Pennsylvania Ave.

A request was made for license and registration upon which Vogler supplied his license and a receipt for Firestone Tires. Finally Vogler found his registration and I overheard the Police saying "another one from Massachusetts." After much discussion the three "park police" managed to issue the despondent Vogler a ten-dollar ticket. During this time Vogler was vehemently arguing that his horn had just happened to stick and it was just a coincidence that it was in front of the White House. It was quite difficult to make out the rest of the conversation seeing that myself and two other cohorts were laughing hysterically in the back seat. The argument soon ended and Vogler was ordered to move his vehicle and thus he did--right through a red light--and when he reached the other side his horn just happened to stick again.

This was merely the beginning of a very interesting night which peacefully ended with Vogler changing his oil in front of the White House aided by a young lady in a drunken stupor who was intermittently honking for impeachment.

Freedom of speech is not dead and Vogler is the perfect example of this stating that if he had had $100.00 he would have honked 9 more times just for the principle of the matter.

Friends, it has been fun, hasn't it? For the past six weeks we've been treated to a most interesting talk between David Miller and Andrew MacKenzie of Below The Salt learnings, and the travelling two from the Firesign Theatre, Phillip Proctor and Peter Pergman. They've taken us across the Edge, near the Brink, into the Beginning... and now... The End.

This final soliloquy by Phil Proctor concerns Life, Death and Those nvolved. He also delves into shades of capitulation (he's only human), but he still winds up with the stirring 'The truth never lies' bit. We salute the creativity and reality involved with these Fellows Against Junk.

No more of this

Proc.: We brought Clem into the world of the hologram, or the automitron, in the Park, by putting him physically into the Dioramas, as Peter explained, whereas on the record, in order to get into the workings of the machine, he has to clone himself, which is perhaps merely a way of deceiving the machine into thinking that he is part of the function, and therefore he is able to communicate with it on a closer ... What we discovered seems to be one of the basic themes of Bozos, as we look back into the work; it asks the question: Is it possible to "take off your shoes for Industry"? Is it possible to smoke dope, let's say, or to live a life with less restrictions or with less of the social expectations, and still be creative within the "State", the system? And that's what we're asking: Can the new revolution of consciousness — of social consciousness or non-social consciousness, as the case may be — Individual social consciousness — The new revolution; how does it affect the old system? How do you get it into the old system, because it is there, there is no denying it. There's more of it than there is of the new, and we're asking the question that the Symbionese army seems to be posing in its own drastic way, which is, can we create free food programs; Can we not take the consciousness and translate it into something that's of the old; but with the breath and the feeling of the new, without going into these horrible terrorist tactics and all the rest of these terrible violent dreams that America and most of the world has been fostered on. So, in simplest terms what we're saying is, if a machine is turned on, does that mean that it's happy?

THE CONQUEROR WORM

Farmworkers Continue Struggle

Think, Don't Drink

by Bob Callahan

The initial United Farm Worker grape strike lasted from 1965 to 1970. The UFW continued its organizing efforts through the early seventies, and the union continued to win contracts for the grape and lettuce pickers throughout California and Arizona. By 1970, 85 percent of the grape workers in California were under UFW contracts. After decades and decades of terrorism and exploitation directed at the farm laborers of this country, and countless aborted organizing attempts by outside unions, the UFW finally emerged in the late sixties as the first union to develop organically from among the workers themselves and to accomplish what had never really been accomplished before. It finally seemed as if farm labor was to be successfully organized on a large scale.

In the spring of 1973, the vast majority of the UFW contracts were due to expire and the union began to inquire about renegotiating them with the various growers. After the expiration of the contracts, most of the ranches suddenly announced they had signed labor contracts with the International Brotherhood Teamsters. The Teamsters had never approached or attempted to organize the workers; indeed, the announcement of the contracts was the first time the farmworkers had even been aware that the Teamsters were representing them. The workers had never elected the Teamsters or expressed any desire to be represented by them. Later the California Supreme Court was to rule that the selection of the Teamsters was solely that of the growers, to the complete exclusion to the desires of the workers. Kind of a management union. It certainly stretches one's conception "union representation."

The day after the Teamsters contracts were announced, 90 percent of the workers walked out of the fields in the biggest single strike in the history of farm labor. Again the UFW had to conduct a strike with its meager funds. Picketing began almost immediately, and the Teamsters responded by hiring "protective vigilantes" (goons) at $67.00 a day to intimidate the strikers. As the summer rolled on, thousands of farmworkers were injured and arrested on picket lines. Eventually two men were murdered. Due to the escalating violence directed at the farmworkers, the union was forced to recall the picket lines. With the end of picketing, most growers were able to recruit enough scab labor to keep their farms operating minimally. Eventually, lack of union funds and the desperate poverty of the workers forced most people back to the fields, where they had to sign up with the Teamsters.

The Teamsters contracts offer drastically reduced benefits for the worker. They are an outside union that workers have no input into and which has never really made any attempt to establish contact with the workers. The Teamster approach to organizing workers is to sign a contract with a grower behind closed doors, then to come out, yell "surprise!" and tell the workers they are organized and under a union contract.

Teamster interest in farmworkers has been openly admitted and explained. The potential of two million dues-paying members are quite alluring, but also, most Teamster members are employed in agriculture-dependent industries. Most Teamsters either can, process, package, load or truck fresh fruits and vegetables. An aggressive farmworker union is a threat to the security of these workers, as a strike would eventually effect them. The Teamsters maintain they must control every link in the industry, and this means sacrificing the rights of the Chicano farmworkers. There is also a strong feeling among Teamster officials that Chicano people are unable to operate a union "properly." Consequently, officials have stated that there will be no significant Chicago representation in the union hierachy. Farmworkers will have to simply be content with just being members.

When the picketing ended last summer, the boycott, which had been so instrumental in gaining the union's initial contracts, was reimposed. Now the boycott represents the workers' only hope of putting enough pressure on the growers to force them to recognize the UFW, and recognize the workers right to a free election to choose their own union. The grape harvest begins at the end of April and continues into the fall. This is the first full season that the harvest will be exposed to the boycott. With the drastic loss of contracts, this boycott is crucial to the success of the UFW. The union does not have the funds to support a long, large strike and the contract losses have hurt. Right now the union's only real source of strength is the support of the workers. The UFW has the ability to completely shut down virtually any Teamster farm for a short period of time. Already, strike activity has resumed in California and Arizona. There have been several walkouts this past month that leave fields empty for a few days at a time. The union will continue to organize short term walkouts at peak harvest periods throughout the summer. However, the only source of solid, consistent pressure that is capable of producing elections and contracts for the workers, is the boycott.

It is imperative that people boycott all table grapes, non UFW iceberg lettuce, and Gallo, Guild and Franzia wines. It is also important not to shop at stores that stock these products and to never, ever shop at a store that is being picketed. There is nothing worse than a scab. Locally, Finast, Stop & Shop, Food Mart and Big Y are clean for lettuce and grapes. They don't carry non-UFW produce. For package stores, the Country Package Store in Leverett and Russell's and C & C's in Amherst do not sell the boycotted wines. Right now A&P supermarkets and Four Seasons package store continue to sell scab products and they are being picketed. To support the farmworker struggle, people must not shop at these stores for any item. Five picket lines operate every weekend and this Saturday there will be a mass picket at A&P in Northampton. Picketers are desperately needed. For information on picketing call 665-3567. Your support is essential. Also the United Christian Foundation is sponsoring a debate concerning the UFW boycott between Matt Tackeff, a Collegian columnist and critic of the boycott, and Bernie Lougee, a member of the local Juan de la Cruz boycott committee. The debate will take place today at 12:15 in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. All are welcome.

Waterfields 1974 — Sculpture in Rhythm

by Anne Hamburger

Robert Morgan, a graduate student at U. Mass. performed last Monday night, a sculptural event titled "Waterfields 1974." The piece dramatically appeals to the emotions through the spectacle and grandeur with which it is performed. The Naiads, the university synchoronized swim team, were directed by Morgan to swim in varying rhythmic patterns accompanied by music. The musicians solemly stood by the pool clashing their symbols which reverberated throughout the room. The only other sound to be heard was the sound of the swimmers in the water. While the piece involved symbolism, spectacle and drama it can still clearly be viewed as a sculptural event rather than a dramatic performance.

Morgan clearly sets himself up as an authority figure, the swimmers almost seem his puppets, as he directs them when to begin to swim. He further accentuated his authority and power by performing an act upon the high dive silhouetted by a spotlight focused on the wall behind him. Morgan swings a bucket through the air in an arclike pattern till it hits the water. He fills it up with water and then pours it back into the pool. The sound of the pouring water is amplified by mike. The lights are shut off and the audience is forced to depend solely on audio for information.

Rude, Crude Scrawlings Found On UMass Walls

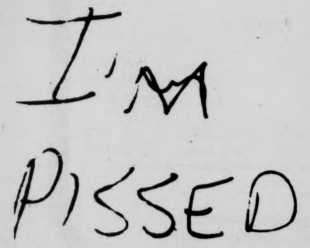
Michael Gery

UMass Graffiti Review

Some striking attitudes toward the University experience are expressed on the walls surrounding public toilets on this campus. While most of the communication is short-lived, rubbed out within 24 hours, new cries and whispers pop up just as quickly to grab the attention of whomever comes next to move his bowels.

There are a great many bathroom wall writers at UMass who cover a wide array of subjects from many different viewpoints. Naturally, some writers are more prolific than others. Some are more creative, some more angry. But their expression is significant as subliminal comment on life here. They mean for it to be heard, most of us read it, so it deserves review.

The most common deliverance is FUCK YOU. That is the loudest message of them all. In some stalls it draws response, but in most it stands alone, unchallenged, just cursing at you.



Bathroom graffiti are strange notes. They are brief public statements made by anonymous, invisible people. We read and write the stuff when we are alone on the toilet, and we relate the writing to the toilet business. It tells what we think when we shit and piss — what comes from our mind when excrement comes from our body. Like human waste matter, it is washed away soon after it is made. It is utterance before utterance becomes sewage.

In the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary it reads "graffito (graf, fito) P1.-ti 1851 (It., f. graffio, a scratch). A drawing or writing scratched on a wall or other surface, as at Pompeii and Rome. Also, a method of decoration by scratches through a superficial layer of plaster, glazing, etc. on a ground of different color; chiefly attrib., as in g.-pottery, etc."

The writing appears in many forms. There are jokes and riddles, philosophical theories, limericks and poems, witticisms, curses, drawings and conversations. Men arrange dates with one another or announce the availability of certain women. Math problems are solved, sex fantasies revealed, opinions registered, films reviewed, warnings given, all by solitary writers locked in toilet stalls.

Psychologists, anthropologists, sociologists, archaeologists, official writers and investigators all have studied lavatory graffiti and have offered theories to explain them. They believe them to be "crude youthful efforts" to express personai identity or alienation. Some consider them territorial markings. Some consider writing graffiti a game, where players compete in brevity and wit within boundaries and against time.

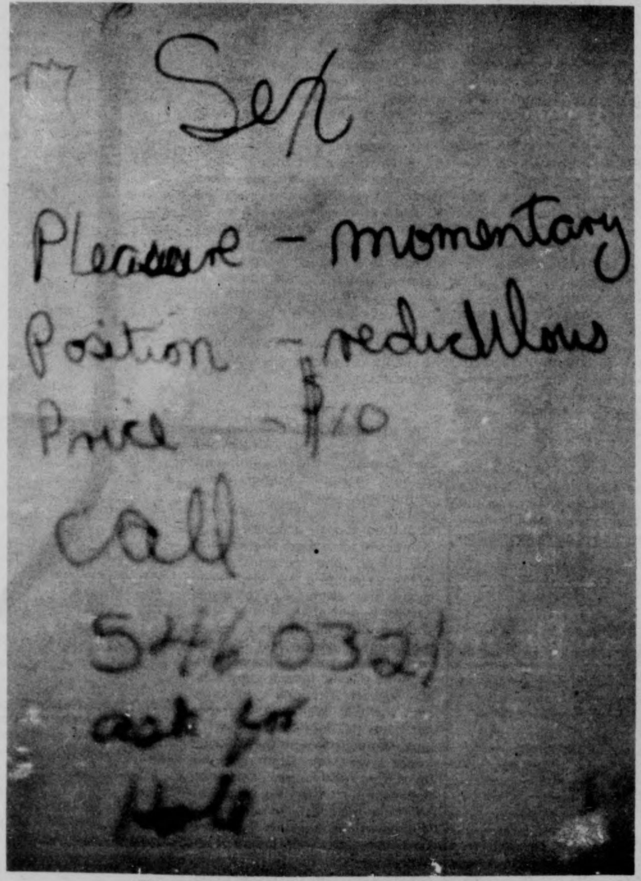
The Massachusetts laws against this form of "malicious mischief" were enacted before the Civil War. But the one that proscribes defacing of school property was ammended in 1960 to increase the punishment. It reads "Whoever willfully, intentionally and without right, or wantonly and without cause, destroys, defaces, mars or injures a schoolhouse, church or other building erected or used for purposes of education or religious instruction, or for the general diffusion of knowledge, or an outbuilding, fence, wall or appurtenance of such schoolhouse, church or other building, or furniture, apparatus or other property belonging thereto or connected therewith, shall be punished by a fine of not more than one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment for not more than two years, or both." A similar law, providing less punishment, concerns state buildings.

The city of Philadelphia spends more than $1 million a year to scrape paint off walls of subway platforms, and officials they estimate that it would take an additional $2.3 million in cleaning materials alone to cleanse the schools, bridge abuttments and recreation areas. Walls in some buildings are treated with special chemicals that make cleaning easier. At UMass, toilet stalls in the newer buildings restrict graffitists with poor lighting, scratchproof, easy-to-clean metal walls painted black or dark blue, sandy-textured wall surfaces, and tiny wall tiles laid so close together that it is impossible to write even on the mortar in between.



Will graffiti ever fade from the UMass scene?

But graffiti will not be licked. In the men's room of the physical sciences library, the black walls bear crayon and paint markings, or messages scratched into the metal. One says: BLACK WALLS STIFLE SOCIAL COMMENTARY. Another BLACK CAN'T STOP GRAFFITI. WRITE ON.

Every day, university custodians wash off what they can. When soap and water does not work, they use a gritty cleanser that scrubs off the paint. Frequently-used stalls hold graffiti longer than others because, as a Herter Hall janitor points out "the more I wash off, the more they write. It takes a lot of hard rubbing to get that shit off."

Dormitory graffiti differ from the graffiti in the more "public" buildings on campus, such as classroom buildings, professional buildings, research halls and gathering places. Residence hall graffiti are more homogeneous, for one thing. And they reflect more the living and playing aspects of university life than the learning and working aspects. The FUCK YOU and FUCK notes seem more prevalent there. Dormitory graffiti require a separate study. This review examines the "downtown" bathrooms on campus and the "academic" graffiti found there.

One startling fact about the writers is that most are men. Somehow women are less compelled than men to use the medium of the toilet stall. As a result, men graffitists seem more familiar with the medium and more practiced in the form. Women cover the same general topics as men, but their writing is less creative and less hostile. In addition, men are more blunt and aggressive in their language and drawings.

Janitors commend the women. The day janitor in Machmer Hall believes "they aren't the slobs like the boys. I hardly find any in the ladies' rooms. They're always cleaner on the whole. Women--good women--don't talk filthy. Just look at this wall, then look at the women. No, they don't give me a problem."

A Herter Hall janitor has noticed an increase in female graffiti. "The men's stuff has been steady," he said. "You can't get any steadier. But the women's is getting worse. And the gay boys in the basement! You wouldn't believe what's down there."

Some fair comparisons of women's and men's bathroom graffiti at UMass:

Sex and romance graffiti by women are I LOVE YOU; I LOVE WOMEN (with two circle-T female symbols crossed by a single line); A HARD MAN IS GOOD TO FIND; representative male comments in the same vein are BLOW DONKEYS; SUCK MY ASS; VIRGINITY IS LIKE A BUBBLE, ONE PRICK AND IT'S BROKEN; I NEED SOME FUCKIN LOVIN; and drawings like two arched spread legs forming an "M", with a hole and two upright breasts in between; or simply an erect penis.

Some political comments by women are IMPEACH THE DICK; SISTERS MUST UNITE TO FIGHT THE MALE PIG ESTABLISHMENT; OUTLAW RACISM; WHAT THIS COUNTRY NEEDS IS A LONG VACATION; LEGALIZE SEX AND POT. Again, men scrawl more political graffiti: PAT PATS DICK'S DICK; SAVE ENERGY-SWITCH OFF NIXON; NIXON PULLS COX; PRAY FOR IMPEACHMENT; NIXON IS ROSEMARY'S BABY; GOOD LUCK, MAO.

The co-ed "people" bathrooms in the corridors of the dorms - turned - office - buildings - Hampshire, Berkshire and Middlesex - have hardly a scratch on the walls.

The major themes of UMass academic graffiti, in order of popularity, are sex, race, politics and education.

About half the sexual graffiti allude to homosexuality. As many requests for homosexual blow jobs appear as do names and phone numbers of "good fucks." Nearly all drawings are sexual. Obviously, toilet stalls are conducive to sexual thinking and expression. It seems that individuals find that taking a shit in a public john offers the best opportunity to make public remarks about sex and sex fantasies. Many remarks are sadistic or "obscene," but many are not. MY MOTHER MADE ME A HOMOSEXUAL. THE HEAT OF THE MEAT IS PROPORTIONAL TO THE ANGLE OF THE DANGLE.

Racial graffiti are the most hostile and offensive. Found mostly in well-used toilets along major thoroughfares like the ground floor of Hasbrouck Lab or outside the Student Union ballroom, racial writing draws more response that any other type. It is long-winded, often political or philosophical, and entirely without humor. Some pronouncements and conversations concerning race are:

ALL NIGGERS EAT SHIT, THAT'S WHY THEY LOOK SO DIRTY

—(response) SAY IT IN PUBLIC AND SEE WHAT HAPPENS

PR'S SUCK TITS & BEER

BLACKS (replaced by "NIGGERS") ARE NOW REALLY TOGETHER AND POSITIVE ABOUT THEIR IDENTITY. THEIR IDENTITY IS MORE POSITIVE THAN THAT OF WHITES.

HAVE YOU EVER SEEN A NIGGER MAJOR IN A PHYSICAL SCIENCE?

—I'M A NIGGER, AND I HAVE MY PH.D IN GEOLOGY.

—FIGURES "ROCKHEAD"

—THAT SHOWS THEY'RE SMARTER THAN HONKEYS

—EYES A NIGGER AND EYES GOT ACCEPTED HERE WITH EASE.

—CAN WE HELP IT IF BLOWING COMES EASY TO YOU?

Q: WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A CAUCASIAN AND A DOG?

A: NOTHING

Q: WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A NIGGER AND A BUCKET OF SHIT?

A: THE BUCKET

Politically, UMass graffitists lean heavily to the left. Nixon and government are never defended seriously. Cries for liberty and justice are usually accompanied by denouncements of oppressors. Understandably, most political graffiti are in the lavatories of the Student Union's second floor, where student government and Collegian personnel often shit.

Witty political remarks are abundant, and more than any other type, they are repeated on stalls all over campus. The most popular political graffiti is IF YOU VOTED FOR NIXON, YOU CAN'T SHIT HERE. YOUR ASSHOLE'S IN WASHINGTON, D.C. That notice has brought these responses:

—IF YOU VOTED FOR McGOVERN, YOU CAN'T SHIT ANYWHERE. YOUR ASSHOLE GOT WIPED OUT.

—AND IF YOU VOTED FOR WALLACE, YOUR ASSHOLE GOT PARALYZED.

Many calls for impeachment echo those seen on an accepted medium for graffiti - the auto bumper sticker. Some that do not are:

HELP KICK DICK THE PRICK

WHERE IS LEE HARVEY OSWALD NOW THAT WE NEED HIM?

—THE SAME PLACE NIXON SHOULD BE

IMPEACH THE TAPEWORM

ricHARD nixON

PAT NIXON IS A PIECE WITH HONOR

—I HEARD SHE HAS A DICK

Direct comments on UMass education are belittling, spiteful and funny. Graffitists see the University as an oppressive, worthless place to be. The most common reference to UMass appears above toilet paper dispensers and reads: UMASS DIPLOMAS, TAKE ONE (or TAKE A SHITLOAD). Second to that is UMASS SUCKS.

In a Whitmore Hall men's room:

DO THE COMPUTERS SHIT HERE TOO?

Sexual psychosis? Reactionary Babblings?Eggheads' Breath Of Freedom? Life Itself? Idiot's Plaype

Bathroom Doors Opened In Major Expose

In the library:

THIS LIBRARY SUCKS

IT'S AN INTELLECTUAL VACUUM

THIS PLACE IS FRUSTRATING. IT MAKES YOU WANT TO WRITE ON THE WALLS.

In Hasbrouck Lab:

In Tobin Hall:

WHY ARE THESE WALLS SO EMPTY? I'VE LOST ALL MY FAITH IN UMIES AND THEIR EDUCATION

—(GONE STREAKIN')

In the Student Union (by women):

HOW CAN YOU RENEW ENTHUSIASM FOR SCHOOL IF YOU COME TO DESPISE IT?

—QUIT!

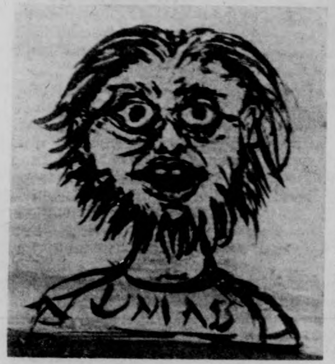
—FIND OUT WHERE YOUR INTERESTS LIE AND PURSUE THEM

—IT'S HARD NOT TO LET SCHOOL GET IN THE WAY OF GROWTH. I WENT OFF FOR A SEMESTER & WORKED & THOUGHT & SINCE I'VE RETURNED, I FOUND LITTLE IN MY WAY! ONCE I KNEW I COULD MAKE IT & SURVIVE, AS A WORKER, I KNEW I DON'T NEED THE UNIVERSITY, AND I FREED MYSELF OF FEAR OF FAILURE.

The last example demonstrates the dialectical form that some graffiti assume. Conversations take place, one anonymous graffitist replies to another, and topics are examined from many angles. The longer graffiti survives, the more sportive the conversations become. MARSHA FUCKS LIKE A BUNNY — I KNOW MARCHA — I AM MARSHA — I AM MARSHA'S HUSBAND — I AM MARSHA'S HUSBAND'S BOYFRIEND.

In one of the best graffiti buildings on campus, Marshall Annex, that long gray shack housing the sculpture studios, an "add-on" piece is being written above a urinal:

WHILE LOOKING THROUGH THE LENS I SPIED... A HERD OF... RATS... HUGE... MOTHERFUCKERS... BREAKING BRANCHES... WITH THEIR KNEES... BREATHING CLOUDS OF ATOMIC DUST...



It goes on.

It is interesting how graffiti in specialized-interest lavatories reflect the business of the people who use those rooms. Comments on life and experience are further classified according to the academic discipline of the graffitist. Prospective civil engineers in Marston Hall write things while they are on the pot that would never come from the arboriculturists in Fernald Hall. The writing and drawing of the English, speech and art students using Bartlett Hall bathrooms, for example, includes work of high literary and artistic caliber.

In Goessman chemistry lab:

LIFE IS A HYDROLYSIS

IF YOUR FARTS COME OUT AT 273 DEGREES KELVIN, YOU'RE ALL RIGHT

—FROZEN, BUT ALL RIGHT

The steps toward a chemical conversion to paraNitrobromine.

In Chenilworth food science lab:

I USED TO BE A CUB SCOUT, UNTIL I ATE A BROWNIE

TITRATE 11 SAMPLES OF BENZOIC ACID TODAY

A third floor men's room in Hasbrouck physics lab holds some long-lived graffiti scrawled by men who study physical phenomena. A chart was drawn from copious data obtained from a posted questionaire which reads: I AM DOING A STUDY OF THE CORRELATION BETWEEN COCK SIZE AND MASTERBATION. YOUR HELP IS APPRECIATED. Some results were that 60 per cent of the men using that stall came to masturbate, and the average penis length there was eight inches.

The same stall displays five graphic studies of nude men and women, as well as the following material:

SURPRISE! E-MC2 (AL)

F(X)equals X4-80X2-4000X-2G

1) WHAT IS F?

2) WHAT DOES THE GRAPH LOOK LIKE?

In the home economics building, Skinner Hall, women wrote: LEVI'S; EDNA SKINNER SAT HERE; HOW WOULD YOU LIKE TO PISS IN MY FACE?; HI, WHAT ARE YOU DOING HERE?

The cause or an innocent bystander?

The biologists in Morrill Science Center wrote responses to a brown smear on the door of a stall: MODERN SHIT; ARTIFICIAL COLORATION; 1-10 of 1 per cent BHT (BROWN-HUED TURD) ADDED AS A PRESERVATIVE. And to a drawing of a two-pronged penis: BI-ANTERIOR PLATYHELMENTHES. And this: E. COLI EAT SHIT.

These all seem to be inside jokes.

Shitters in the Public Health Center are warned:

YOU'RE SITTING ON VIRULENT PASTURELLA PESTIS

It brought response:

—SHOULD I WIPE MY ASS, OR STREAK IT OUT?

—SO LONG, OLD BUDDY

—TODAY IT'S GONOCOCCUS EXUDED FROM A FRESH LESION

—MY COCCUS IS EIGHT INCHES LONG

Outside political science classrooms in Machmer Hall, the Soviet hammer and sickle symbol is carved into several stalls. Someone there drew a cornucopia overflowing with spread female legs.

In the Boyden Gym locker room, which is washed daily:

JOCKS SUCK (written with soap)

DRUGS DON'T MAKE ME LAZY AND COCAINE DON'T MAKE ME CRAZY AND IT AIN'T NOBODY'S BUSINESS BUT MY OWN.

AS THE P.E. MAJOR SAID JOCULARLY: FUCK YOU YOURSELF

The natural resources people in the new Holdsworth Center do not write on the bathroom walls.

Depending on which floor you are on in Herter Hall, you can view culturally-tainted graffiti.

Germanic languages, fifth floor:

WER REITET SO SPAT DURCH NACHT UND WIND?

—FORKEN SUE

Slavic languages, fourth floor:

PHBHO DYNAE NIN TOARO ROBHOASUNE

—YOU SLAVIC PILE OF HORSESHIT

—CAL JACOBS IS DEAD

Romance languages, third floor;

NON SEULEMENT SE PASSE-T-IL QUE DIEU EST MORT

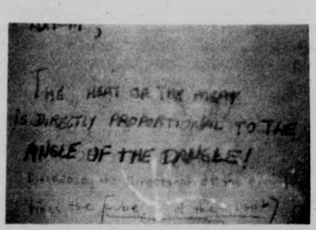
—UN PLUMBER AUX FINS DE SEMAINES

History, seventh floor:

CAL JACOBS IS DEAD

Among the bathrooms of the Newman Center, the hall of religious fellowship, there was only one line written in tiny letters: GRAFFITI IS THE VOICE OF THE COMMON MAN.

But the highest quality and most significant graffiti are in the bathrooms of Marshall Annex sculpture studio, outside Engineering East auditorium and near the liberal arts classrooms of Bartlett Hall.



Brief descriptions of these champion centers are necessary.

Upon entering Marshall Annex, one notices graffiti all over the white masonite walls. PATRIA FUNGI is rubber-stamped hundreds of times. A trail of paint spots runs up the wall, across the ceiling, and in and out of rooms. Below the MEN sign on the first floor bathroom door is written MAN. Below it, DOOR. The toilet stalls have no doors, and the walls are whitewashed. There is written:

THIS MEN'S ROOM IS MORE DEHUMANIZING THAN BELCHERTOWN STATE SCHOOL

ALL YOU SEE IS YOU

PHIL LESH IS A FIGMENT OF YOUR IMAGINATION

There is also the continuing story of "What I Spied Through the Lens," and primitive oil paintings in strange locations. Colorful and spontaneous etchings and ideas decorate not only the bathrooms, but also the corridors through the building.

The auditorium in Engineering East is used by large classes of students who hear lectures on varied subjects, and who use the nearby bathrooms for relief. The bathrooms are never clean, and accompanying the odor of cleanser, soggy tissue and dung is a great abundance of graffiti. Most appears to be "freshman" material - repetition of popular shithouse slogans, mis-spellings, crude drawings of genitals, and playful notices. But the outstanding characteristic here is the length of the entries, some of which are inventive.

—YES, IN A CLOCKWISE DIRECTION

ATTENTION - ONLY BROWN DROPPINGS ARE ALLOWED IN THIS STALL. GREEN, YELLOW, OR SPECKLED TURDS WILL ACTIVATE A PHOTOSENSITIVE BEAM IN THE BOWL, THEREBY TRIGGERING AN EJECTION DEVICE, THUS HURLING THE OFFENDER UP THROUGH THE CEILING.

—BETTER LIVING THROUGH SCIENCE

FUCKING THE 15-YEAR+OLD STAR OF "THE EXORCIST" IS ONE HORROR I WOULD ENJOY

—SHE'S ONLY 12, YOU PERVERTED FUCK

—YOU FOOL, SHE IS 15 IN REAL LIFE. OF COURSE ENGINEERS LIKE YOU WOULD NOT UNDERSTAND REALITY IF IT KNOCKED YOU ON YOUR SLIDE RULE.

All the popular diddies appear on the Engineering East lavatory walls. Reading them is like watching familiar and tiresome TV commercials. Some are immortal limericks and shithouse quotations from way back. Others are new on the hit parade:

TO DO IS TO BE - PLATO

TO BE IS TO DO - KANT

DO BE DO BE DO - SINATRA

SAVE A TREE, EAT A BEAVER

Bartlett Hall liberal arts graffitists turn out rich material. It is the wittiest, most poetic bathroom expression on campus. The exchanges are thought provoking, the drawings are excellent, the emotion runs high. When the janitors scrub the stalls in Bartlett, they destroy good art. And the graffitists protest: LET MY ART BE! and WHO KEEPS ERASING MY DRAWINGS?

Some samples:

WHAT IF A DAWN OF A DOOM OF A DREAM BITES THIS UNIVERSE IN TWO-SPRINKLING NOWHERE-ME AND YOU?

LET'S SEE SOME MORE EXISTENTIAL GRAFFITI

—WHY?

—WHY NOT?

THE QUALITY OF MERCY IS NOT STRAINED-IT DROPPETH AS THE GENTLE RAIN FROM HEAVEN-UPON THE PLACE BENEATH-THE SHIT FLOWS DOWN EASY

ARE YOU SHITTING MORE AND ENJOYING IT LESS? MAYBE IT'S TIME FOR A CHANGE. TRY PEWKING FOR BETTER RESULTS. NOT ONLY CAN YOU DO IT STANDING UP, BUT YOU LOOK GOOD DOING IT. ARCHAEOLOGISTS REALLY DIG A PEWKING MAN.

Above a detailed drawing of a nude man running is a cloud indicating the man's cry: STREAK? WHATEVER HAPPENED TO STIKE?

As seen in the academic bathroom graffiti at the university, this ancient form of expression has taken new and interesting turns. The interchange of impressions and ideas on shithouse walls offers a unique display of changing usage in basic language, as well as insights into a base level of our consciousness. Bathroom graffiti in particular represents part of the organic battle against indiscriminate use of soap and water. Even as outpourings of frustration, the notes have considerable worth. As with all kinds of expression, the valuable effects of bathroom graffiti extend beyond the soul of the isolated individual who relieves himself.

The Apocalypse According to Ozzie and Harriet

by David Miller

ROLLER MAIDENS FROM OUTER SPACE
PHIL AUSTIN (AND THE FIRESIGN THEATRE)
Total Playing Time: 44:00 (Epic KE 32989)

Before I completely lose my co, co, co, co, coherence I want to explain that a rational linear review of the latest Firesign solo album, Roller Maidens from Outer Space, would be not only impossible but pointless. Its strength lies in its arrangement, which isn't at all linear, though it does tell at least one story. But before I go into my Hunter S. "Marshall 'John Cage' McLuhan" Thompson act, I want to ask a special favor of all you who tend to skim Firesign reviews if they don't look like the return of Nick Danger. Read on to the end, O.K.? Thank you ...

All Right.

1) Quotations I. "Ralph Spoilsport is not frozen in history — he's available at any time, as long as there's a car salesman left in this country, Ralph lives. I mean, he can sell marijuana, he can sell cars, he can sell trips to the moon; as long as he's there, he's good." Peter Bergman, BTS, 3-21-74.

"C'mon Jesus, c'mon and show yourself."

"We have discovered the American Salesman. He got written into the 'How Can you Be In Two Places At Once' side of the record, which was to be his apotheosis. The apotheosis of Ralph Williams because he talks over himself, five times ..." Philip Proctor, The Firesign Theatre's Big Book of Plays.

Read Nick Exxon for Ralph Spoilsport where appropriate.

2) The Music on Roller Maidens, where did it come from? It works into your brain, a perfect complement to the action. Austin and his band, Red Greenbacks and his Blue Boys, move in and out, a real chorus, doing pastiches of Talking Blues, Square Dance, Rockabilly. Switchblade Pitchforks. C'mon Jesus.

3) Ozzie Nelson meets Lucy and Dicky and Nick Danger meets Misterrogers meets the Flintstones meets several historic congressional committees and Beezulbub meets the Boss and the Electrician (in a hidden cameo role) meets Dick Exxon and Jesus.

4) We've all heard quite a bit about the return to the '50s, which is a neat trick in itself, but with time flying faster than ever, we're also in a return to the '60s'. All in the '70s. All these decades are present in Roller Maidens From Outer Space.

5) Jesus comes back. He was thumbing in L.A. The Roller Maidens were ready for him. But Jesus has got Exxon's numbers. He turns the gasoline to wine, and fights off the armies of the world with the cross and the switchblade. "What's gonna happen? Who's gonna win? If you know the question, send the answer in." It's scary.

6) Are you looking for references to other Firesign albums? Roller Maidens has references to Nick Danger, peorgie and Mudhead, Bozos. It's got the TV mind format of Don't Crush That Dwarf and TV Or Not TV's channel-switching and the working out of a plot through communication between channels and shows. The '50s and '60s situation comedies are forms in which to work out the Apocalypso. Dumb husbands and wacky wives. Dick Private, Private Dick's channel-swimming reminds me of nothing as much as Alice's travels across the chess board in Through the Looking Glass.

"And there were flashes of lightning, loud noises, peals of thunder, and a great earthquake such as had never been since men were on the mearth, so great was the earthquake." Revelations 16+17-18.

6) We're not allowed to see the Boss face to face, but he's on TV all the time, and it's Remote Control. Dick Exxon asks for your sympathy (courtesy and taste, use all your well-earned politics ...). He meets the personal ads and S-M, and so do Ozzie and Jesus.

7) The Television Mission is headed by one Rev. Uhuru, which is also the name of the satellite which sent back evidence relating to the first probable black holes discovered in outer space. Roller Maidens From Outer Space is a hard album, but the rewards of listening! It's a strangely amoral, thoroughly American apocalypse; shortages and species evolution are what's going to make us. Ozzie and Harriet as Ethyl and Regular are all dreaming the same dreams. That's us.

7) "Why are we whispering?"

7-534-8½l.

Out of all the Firesign-and-related-material I haven't heard yet, this is among the best.

Leo Kottke, Down Watt Human Guitar

By Mike Kostek

In Concert:
Leo Kottke
Tom Willits
Amherst College Gym
April 21

Leo Kottke sits up on a stool on stage, tuning his guitars in a pre-show sound check. One of the idle Amherst College hangers-on interrupts to ask him if he saw a certain review in Stereo Review. "The one that said you were inventing the twelve string guitar."

Leo smiles, a bit embarassed, and continues his business. "Yeah," he grins, purposefully throwing his answer away to the floor. "I like that."

—00000—

While Leo would never himself say he was inventing the twelve string, he appreciates a compliment the way the full-house audience Sunday night appreciated a fine folk-flavored show of music from Kottke and Tom Willits.

Willits played first, and gave a fine performance, especially flavored by strong harmonies and a deft, delicate touch in his music, which ranges from pure folk to rock.

The best thing about Willits is his pureness and sincerity, even if it occasionally gets in his way. His singalong version of "Bird Dog" late in his show seemed quite out of place in the narrow and simple way he presented it to the relatively hip Kottke audience.

"I can't help it," said Tom afterward, "That's the way I am." An interesting and engagingly human performer.

—00000—

Human is also quite the word for Leo Kottke. There is absolutely no 'star'-ness about him. He's much more relaxed talking about his friend's firing a cannon back home at the Minneapolis City Hall or going ice fishing than he is discussing Richard Perry or James Taylor.

Talking with him was a bit of a chore, as Leo kept yawning as if he'd been prematurely awakened in his motel room by an anxious caller, and never could seem to remember much of what he was discussing after he was done yawning.

So naturally the first question had to be about how such a decidely non-'image' such as he got the unique acceptance and recognition he did.

"I really was lucky. I just seemed to come along at the right time. After the Beatles left such a void, one guy doing instrumentals seemed to fit then."

(Note: this quote and all others flow much more smoothly here on paper than they did out of Leo's mouth. To begin to get an idea of the slow original process, try a five second pause after each sentence.)

Any record company problems?

"I suppose commercially I would be happier on a more hypey label, but I've gotten to know every one in the (Capitol Records) Tower, and I get along okay. There's no interference in what I record. Ice Water (Leo's latest album) has sold around 150,000 copies, which is surprising, as I us ally sell about 100,000."

I asked him about the different 'rockier' things he was doing on Ice Water.

"You know, I read a review saying 'Every three albums Kottke loses all confidence in himself and tries something new.' Well, the truth is that every three records I get bored with myself. That new stuff on Ice Water was to keep interested.

About his singing, self-confessed to be in the 'geese fart' range: "The critics have been rather kind to me about that on the new album. I can sit home and sing, and come up with some beautiful stuff, full of (smiles wryly at using such critics' words) resonance and color, and it sounds great. When I get in front of a microphone, it's different, as my breathing isn't trained, you see, it has to be controlled from deep inside, and in front of a mike it doesn't sound too good. On Ice Water I worked harder on my singing than ever before, and for the first time I sang in a booth like most people do."

How has road life and a heavy performing schedule affected him?

"I don't complain any more about traveling around, because I realize this is a rare opportunity to do what I'm doing. One thing, though, bothers me. I've developed tendonitis in my right arm, and something else is wrong with my left. That makes it hard. My doctor tells me I'm going to go out like Sandy Koufax. I don't know. This trouble came right after a long long time of work, and isn't so bad now (Almost on cue, Leo accidently whacks his right arm on the chair arm, grimices and smiles ironically). Right where it hurts, too.

"There's not much you can do about it. Either an operation or cortisone shots. That's basically why I play larger halls rather than clubs. It's better for me to play one set a night than two."

Has he ever tried touring with any additional players?

"I've tried a few times playing with a second guitarist, and once with bass and drums, and neither worked. The audience's reaction was the opposite of what you'd expect. Instead of getting interested in the additional players, they'd seem to go 'Wuuh' and lose all their steam and seem to say 'What's going on here?'"

—00000—

Kottke's performance that night was a typically fine, polished display of his amazing twelve string talent. His songs came mostly from his albums, and were delivered with a grace and fullness than superceded the absence of the bass and drums from the records. Leo needs no rhythm section, as he is quite able to handle and fill everything with his twanging guitar, using speed not for speed's sake, but rather to reach those feelings lurking only in that realm. The slower numbers reflected his sharp, sensitive ear, played with an honest feel not at all cheap or cloying. His occasional missed or slipped note (about one every eight songs) serve to remind us how hard it is to be playing what he was a well as he was.

Leo had listened before the show with an interested ear to Richard Asinov (The Valley Advocate's representative) tell of Thelonius Monk's (a great black jazz artist) walking off stage when he detected that the audience wasn't really listening. Leo was put off.

"I could never do that. If I saw they weren't listening, then it would become a job, and I'd just play for myself. It's not really any of my business if they listen or not. I've already got the money anyway. But when they do listen, well, that's what it's all about."

IT'S TOO LATE TO STOP NOW — VAN MORRISON (Warners 2BS 2760) time 86:52

The words 'over-indulgence' and 'over-extended' kept wanting to creep in here, and I guess they did after all. But their visit to this little corner must be accepted with less than their usual overbearing presence.

The way we should take their arrival and apparently lengthy stay (see, they're still here) is thusly: even Van the Man falls into the two-records-is-too-much category here. And Morrison is usually able, like any raw and impassioned talent, to fight his way out of any label. To be simple about it, there is enough on here for one high quality record of interest for everyone; the other disc should be sold through Van's Fan Club, as it will certainly interest his rabids, but will bore Mssr. or Ms. Casual.

Why? Too much time here is spent in too little. Live albums can only justify their existence in new insights and revelations. While none of the proceedings here are dumb or bad, only about half shows us much of Van the shining showman, Van the awesome Presence on stage. These moments are golden for sure, but it's hard to say if they carry the $11.98 price tag by themselves. Borderline case. B

Smith College, April 19

(Editor's note: We did send a quite eager reporter to Smith to cover this event, but she left after four of Liv's tunes.)

SPACED+OUT BACH
JOSEPH PAYNE, HARPSICHORDIST (RCA)

Not another joke, please Icouldn't take it. Well,it appears that Gomes has met his Sam Ervin album at last.

How can you fault Bach, the composer?— answer: you can't. Bach was not only a whiz at writing the notes down, but whippin' 'em out as well. He liked to jam, put succinctly, and I'm sure that he (you know, the original guy!)—I mean Sebby could probably give a tinker's cuss in hell (south of Strondheim, where all German composers go when they die—the place of departed spirit and sprite bottles) as to what anybody does to the music he wrote back then. Bach isn't going to rise up from his grave and condemn us all to death if we offend; so, we have things like this, which is just the rearrangement of Bach's music for over-dubbed harpsichords and studio engineering of high imagination. The acoustic thing is startling, and one can hear ratios of sounds one could never hear in the confines of a normal studio recording (with the bored musicians sitting in studios and sending their best tapes along) so the engineer—the real hero of the story—splices and edits the best parts of the performance. Canned music you say—how about the Beatles last albums (except Let It Be, if I recall...isn't worth it—I forget.)? and the most current 'classical recordings.?).

So, from the tip of the hat of the master procreator, Bach, to Producer and recorder Nate Johnson, and master engineer, Ed (win this one for the gipper) Begley (no television ties) for a superb job of putting together the entire deal.

2nd note) I disliked Switched-on Bach, not only because of the ridiculous cover (this one's even more ludicrous), but because I like the Moog too much to hear it tormented somethin' unnatural. I like this, because it's broadening the dimensions of the traditionally "weak" harpsichord. Hey, did you know Sun Ra was playing Bach fugues when he was in Europe? Both are remarkable.

RADIO CITY — BIG STAR (Ardenr ADS-1501) time: 37:12

"Music so loud-You can't tell a thing" begins to explain the potential magic in this three-man pop throwback. The most outrageous hype and reviews have spawned and encouraged each other into saying Big Star are the new Byrds, Beatles, Hollies, etc. Don't let yourself fall into exactly believing this, as it's simply not true, but don't pass off in reaction to it either. You'll be missing some fun music.

A lot of the music here hits that magic chord that only good Pop can — that catchline with those 'ooh' harmonies, or that perfect intonation, or that one bit that makes it irresistable. These old Box Toppers do physically sound like a Cross of old middle Byrds and Hollies, and do keep enough magic flowing to be worthy of one of those 'should develop' classifications B+

LONDON REVISITED — MUDDY WATERS & HOWLIN' WOLF (Chess CH 60026) time 35:09

These are leftovers from both Howlin's and Muddy's respective London Sessions albums , but unlike most leftovers, this is high-class stuff. The variety of having two of the greatest blues singers on one record (one per side) makes for a most appealing and interesting album. B+

'electric musick', spirit beauty, A Blessing

He comes from the kitchen where he has put out MY PART IN STARLESS AND BIBLE BLACK (his supper to defrost) King Crimson, (Atlantic)

Documentary by Gary Gomes

Starless and Bible Black played by King Crimson and Gary Gomes — former as group, latter on a series of stereos and radio devices — with crickets from an Environments record filling in the background on the Edge City Show every Saturday 2 6o 6 a.m. — I KNOW WE '(Andy an' Yours TRUMan)' re goddam craze-wah to doit, but it's on MUA every flippin weekend — and they fit.

Robert Fripp has been developing and developing in stature ever since the auspicious, but drrraagggiinnng first album. And most of the really important things he's been doing since In the Court of the "Commie" King have been unknown to the average consumer, because they weren't of — uh, how shall I put this?!Ah! — commercial relevance.

Any number of very significant things and—or people could have had bearing on this current musical development, which sounds like a very advanced Cream — that is, picking up where Cream, and Soft Machine left off and took their own directions. This is a truly eclectic fusion of musicks built into a solid, "white noise" (tones that encompass every tone — not unlike radio static), but not of the musicks McLaughlin employed, which were nice scale patterns, but with very little melodic sense — which leads us back to influences.

First, when Fripp was in a group called, initially, I believe, the London Space Orchestra. — later to become Keith Tippett's Centipede, which featured Keith Tippett, London "free jazz-er", Julie Driscoll — ex Brian Auger, and Robert Wyatt, in and out of Soft Machine.

Secondly, his encounter with Wicca (protective magick and ancient knowledge, i.e. mystic codes like "Have you travelled far?" and theosophical answers like "Ten miles or less.")

Third, his second association with Wyatt, in producing Matching Mole's Little Red Record, one of the best efforts in English-perverto-Burroughs "class struggle" rock type materials.

Fourth in a series of influences! Fripp decides to get together with super-drummer-percussionist Jamie Muir for Larks' Tongues in Aspic LP, and the group (consisting of ex-Family and R&B-U.S. style bass player John Wetton; the formerly trapped percussionist from Yes, Bill Bruford; and "classical" violinist David Cross) finally knew what it was to push themselves as far as possible.

Fifth, Fripp records the beautiful (no pussyfootting) album with erstwhile Roxy synthesizer-player Brian Eno, and Fripp's guitar work is beginning to sound like about the only new thing to come along in the past five years.

Rather strong? Yes... but so is Fripp's musick. Starless and Bible Black has an opening instrumental passage that would put Mahavishnu to shame for speed and tightness. However, Fripp seems to be on a slightly higher understanding of the harmonics and tone colouration of the instruments involved.

As an album, this thing is unified, at least in one studio technique — abrupt breaks in the instrumental passages, to give a "jarred" feeling to the album, building up quite nicely to the last piece on the album, "Fracture", (more on that a bit later.)

Since the near classic Larks' Tongues LP, Wetton's voice has certainly gotten better, while his bass is more prominent as a driving force in the improvisations. On "The Night Watch", Fripp's guitar shows an ever-increasing diversity of sound, souding almost like a super-charged mandolin, while on "The Great Deceiver" it bleeps in and out like a radio signal. He is truly a gut guitar. Wizard, the only logical successor to Hendrix really.

On the title cut, the entire band joins in a sound improvisation, with Bruford and Cross afforded ample time to demonstrate their talents. And Fripp, now that he's got this 'Cosmic-drone' on his guitar, just won't quit. Remember "Moonchild" from Court of Crimson King? Well, this is what it's finally come to. Fripp weirded out.

Lastly, we have "Fracture", no doubt named by Fripp, and written after he was messing around with some torturous whole tone (remember — on the piano it's 1-2-3-4+-5+-6+-8, or c-d-e-f sharp - g sharp - a sharp. Or on the guitar it's every fret held in equal distance over on fret on the fretboard (i.e. illustrated guitar fretboard going up).

Then the song begins to splinter, as Bruford adds some percussion, and Fripps's still tinkering around with his whole tone scale, and the bloody thing SNAPS inside your mind, and turn down the volume, and I'M HAVING TREATMENT. My Gawd, this is the best interplay in a rock group I've heard since Cream. Bizarre, static ideas, and the like, noxious fumes, and Fripp is about as good a guitarist technically as Coryell or McLaughlin, and less prone to cliches, get me?

You know something really hilarious? Robert Fripp discovered Greg Lake (of ELP) cleaning toilets in Covent Gardens. At the risk of raising the ire of Emerson, Lake and Palmer, Fripp is still discovering things, while Lake is still cleaning out toilets.

This is the new 'electric' musick, men and women (in all senses of the word electric). It comes originally from Sun Ra, originally from our Creator, and has been adapted to the Rock Orchestra. Fripp's moon-sun-guitar-international band should not be missed — under any circumstance. Starless and Bible Black is very good — and that can change to spirit beauty. A Blessing.

A Wizard Goes Too Far?

In Concert:
Todd Rundgren
Todd Rundgren's Utopia
April 17, Orpheum

A huge truck bearing the words "for the show on the road" blocked the entrance to the Orpheum. Although it was locked and seemingly lifeless, two or three girls nervously hung around, as if at any moment Todd would appear from behind its steel doors. Occasionally, they'd leave their truck-side vigil, hoping to catch a glimpse of a roadie. So was the setting at 5:30. Within an hour the masses began migrating toward the entrance, and the two or three girls were lost among the hundreds of others, toting instamatics, desperately trying to keep their balance on platforms. The concert itself didn't begin until close to 8:30, although some will maintain its starting time as 5:30.

In the first half Todd did most of A Wizard, running around the stage like a madman. You could have closed your eyes and imagined the recorded versions of "I Saw The Light", "Never Never Land," "Lord Chancellor's Nightmare" and "International Feel", never knowing you were sitting in the Orpheum.

"Hi. I'm Todd Rundgren representing K-Tel Record Co. bringing you the greatest hits of the 60's and 70's" he says wearing a slightly cynical smile. He talks of his last visit to Boston and is interrupted by some stoned-out-of-his-mind-degenerate that screams out, "You want the obvious you'll get the obvious!! "Todd looks out toward the voice and yells back something to the effect of, "You'll get the obvious!" Again, the same smile, and all of a sudden I'm not sure of who's laughing at who. This seems to be the purpose of this portion of the concert: to sing the songs he's known for a long time with the recorded backgrounds, and make all the 'wow-rundgren-man-he's-the-one-who-sings-we-gotta-get-you-a-woman' element happy, and then expose them to the more recent with Utopia during the second half. He does the more mellow ballads at the piano. "A Dream Goes On Forever", "It Wouldn't Have Made Any Difference", "Hello, it's Me" was messed considerably when he ventured into the crowd, as the audience reacted like a typical David Cassidy crowd. Rumor has it that even Michael Bloom of Boston Phoenix fame found it hard to resist as Todd's arm neared his trembling face. Considering the amount of screaming, clawing women landing in his lap, there was good reason for a spasm or two of trembling.

Utopia's members are Mark Klingman, piano; JohnSeigler, bass; Kevin Ellman, Ralph Schuckett, and Todd Rundgren, vocals, and guitar. Utopia played everything that the band is involved in on Todd, with excellent jobs on "Don't You Ever Learn," and "The Last Ride"; "Is It My Name?" and "When The Shit Hits The Fan" from A Wizard; "Black Maria" and "Slut" from Something-Anything? But as soon as they expanded into the never-recorded-before, voiceless three minutes, a majority of the simple minds slammed shut. Ceiling staring-at and fingernail cleaning seemed to substitute for listening. Once during one of Utopia's suites, two lines of "We Gotta Get You A Woman" slipped out, and like a superior calling, like a reawakening, people looked up, their attention renewed. The Utopia travelled far away from 'we better get walking', and the finger nail cleaners continued.

A total of 21 songs, not counting the suites by Utopia, in a span of 3½ hours. The solos, however were too long to hold attention and fell just short of being interesting to listen to.

The concern left the audience a choice: to replay Something-Anything? until it wears out, or to accept the fact that Todd is an ever-changing musician. Now that he is straying into a band on equal footing, it's presenting a new side of Rundgren that is so different from Something, they are unsure of making this most recent trasition with him. While his In Concert and Midnight Special appearances were painfully embarrassing, the Boston Concert left you dumb at the quality, and the promise of Utopia. Nowhere did I see a stagehogging, egocentric, tar and feathered maniac — only Todd Rundgren and Todd Rundgren's Utopia.

Laying An Egg Over Easy

GOLDIE HAWN
THE SUGARLAND EXPRESS

By Jeffrey Polman

THE SUGARLAND EXPRESS
Starring Goldie Hawn, Robert Atherton, Michael Sacks, Ben Johnson, directed by Steven Spielberg

This film has been most often praised as a promising feature debut for the 26-year-old director Steven Spielberg. Time and Newsweek even went so far as to call it one of the best American films this year, particularly reserving their good words for Goldie Hawn's acting. I went to see it only because I happened to read all of these optimistic reviews. Did it live up to its reputation? When I left the theatre, I had only two after effects from the movie: 1) a feeling of spiritual emptiness and 2) a strange desire to race my car out of the parking lot like a raving maniac.

The Sugarland Express is apparently based on a true story which occured in 1969 Texas. A young mother (Goldie) helps her husband (Robert Atherton) escape from the federal correction center so the two of them can travel across the state to Sugarland, Taxas and rescue their baby boy who has been taken into unfair custody by a foster home. Soon after they escape from the correction center, however, difficulties set in. They unwillingly become involved in a hair-raising car chase with a state trooper (Michael Sacks) and after they crash safely, resort to taking the trooper and his car hostage. At gunpoint, the young couple force him to drive them to Sugarland. This seems like a fine way to solve the problem, but soon an endless motorcade of police cars ensues behind them, waiting for the couple to make a mistake. As the suspense-knotted caravan passes through small towns, Texas citizens show their support for the couple by whipping up parades and filling their car seats with gifts.

They reach Sugarland safely by the end of the movie and are allowed to proceed to the foster home. Of course, the police in the meantime have moved the baby to a different location and replaced it with two sharp-eyed Texas rangers sporting high-powered magnum rifles. What happens here is a semi-tragedy, and I'll leave it to your imagination.

Seeing that 75 per cent of the movie takes place inside automobiles, Spielberg doesn't have too hard a time keeping the action moving. His extravagant use of the lone-range telephoto shot throughout the film is very effective in making the line of police cars look like a flock of vultures lurking for the kill. In fact, Spielberg does a better job of portraying the police than he does of the couple themselves. A pair of Louisiana troopers are rendered as young, bubble gum-chewing smart alecks who decide to get a piece of the action and instead cause trouble. Another good character study is that of a group of "volunteer" policemen who get up early in the morning to ambush the criminals for the good of America.

Goldie Hawn might be cute and bubbly and wear well in her tight dungarees, but she is, as yet, no dramatic actress. Her actions at times were over-hysterical and unrealistic, and when she was sweet I felt she didn't have to be. Charm is a fine element for a movie if the movie calls for it, but here it didn't. This lack of total seriousness was probably Spielberg's main fault. I can understand the director's attempt to replay Bonnie and Clyde, but in that film Arthur Penn was taking outrageous humor and contrasting it with repulsive violence. Spielberg's humor is partly there, but there is no real violence to reflect off of it (only one person dies throughout the entire movie).

Robert Atherton, who plays the husband, does a much better job. He is constantly nervous and compulsive, showing the unbalanced outlawish mind which Goldie lacks. While Atherton brandishes the gun throughout the film, Hawn sits in the back seat and plays travel games. She is a big name in Hollywood and so feels she can take it easy by simply going along for the ride.

If the Sugarland Express had not been a true story, it might have been a better film. At the climax, one of the main characters is shot (I won't say who, of course), and it is here where I feel the movie lays its uncalled-for egg. If neither of the two characters were shot we would have had a happy ending. If both were shot we would have had a new Bonnie and Clyde. But by eliminating only one of the characters, an emotional vacuum was formed in my head, and as the ending credits rolled up the screen I could feel neither complete happiness nor complete sorrow; like a tie score. It may have been what actually happened, but Spielberg should have known ahead of time what effect this would have on the audience and made a few plot changes for entertainment's sake.

The Sugarland Express is not a bad movie, but it could have been fantastic if it was completely fictionalized and Goldie was left back in Hollywood. Its idealized portrayals and police car emphasis made it resemble a made-for-TV movie. I'm sorry; I don't like television, and I don't like tie scores.

The 100 monkeys sitting at the 100 typewriters finally came up with something, and it wasn't Paradise Lost. As a matter of fact, contrary to the advertising, it didn't have anything remotely to do with paradise. Yes, the movie is as bad as you feared and hoped it was, with sledgehammer dialogue, pointlessly tragic ending and a lot of funny little silly things. (Though actually, some of us thought we could detect profound yin-yang counterthemes and other college type stuff in there — try it yourself.)

Let me spoil it for you by stating that Chesty Morgan is afflicted with varicose veins and stretch marks, no waist and definite marks of advancing age. All of which, of course, wouldn't be bad in a human being, but none of which are allowable in a sex symbol And she must lead a rotten life, you know?

Paradisco: Fine Poetic Prose

Paradiso
by Jose Lezama Lima
Farrar, Strauss and Giroux
466 pages
$12.95

Reviewed by Kevin Mack

At one point in Paradiso, the novel by the Cuban poet, Jose Lezama Lima, the main character speaks of the "sadness of beings and things without number which die in us when our memories are extinguished." These memories of feelings, thoughts and images are the stuff of consciousness, and they are part of what separates individual human consciousnesses. Yet these remembrances which exist in the human mind are also the essential tools of communication, the means by which human beings express the community of experiences and, occasionally, impart some of an individual's accumulated wisdom.

Paradiso attempts to portray the contents and texture of the mind of its hero, Jose Cemi. In the process of doing this, the author, who is also Cuba's best known poet, tried, in his own words, to describe "as closely as possible the daily life of a Cuban man and his family."

Cemi's mind is a complex one and to accurately represent its contents, Lezama begins his novel with Cemi's family history for the past three generations. There is Cemi's grandmother and matriarch of the family, Dona Augusta, a genteel dignified old woman, the mother of Cemi's mother, Rialta and of his uncle Alberto, the passionate, though misdirected man of letters. Cemi's father is a colonel in the Cuban army, a man of vast intellect and irreproachable character.

Cemi's family is the prime molder of his destiny, which, as one of Cemi's adolescent friends says, is being frustrated by the times, causing Cemi to search elsewhere for the roots of his destiny. Cemi's family belongs to an extinct upper class-people of superior breeding and intellect — a class which, perhaps justly, finds no niche in Cemi's Cuba.

During his adolescence, Cemi befriends two erudite and controversial university students: Fronesis, another son of the wealthy class, and Focion, the lively homosexual who is in love with Fronesis. The friendship of the three students provides a significant influence in the establishment of Cemi's identity as an artist and an explorer of the human mind. The three engage in long discussions concerning ancient and modern philosophy, their own lives, and the lives of the people around them.

However these friendships do not last. Fronesis leaves the country to tour the world and Focion goes insane and is killed by a bolt of lightening, while he is wandering about an asylum's courtyard. His friends gone, Cemi is alone, at least until he meets Oppiano Licario.

Cemi's friendship with Licario forms the third part of the novel. Licario, another learned Cuban, an antiquarian, was acquainted with Cemi's long dead uncle Alberto and was present at the death of Cemi's father, the Colonial.

The dying Colonel, impressed by Licario great learning, asked him to seek his son and tell him some of what he has learned from life. Ten years after the Colonel's death, Licario and Cemi meet, by chance, on a bus in Havana. The meeting provokes further meetings and the two men build a profound and influential friendship. Licario's wisdom is a timeless sort; he accepts no temporal limitations to his world view; the wisdom of the ancients and the philosophies of this century live with equal vigor in his consciousness. But his wisdom is one of attitude rather than of consciousness. And he teaches Cemi that it is better to attack life in an "hesychastic style" of spiritual equilibriium than in a "systolic style" of tumultuos passions.

This style or attitude is the same which Lezama takes in the language of the novel. Lezama is primarily a poet and there is poetry in almost every line of Paradiso. His language, though dispassionate, is intensely florid and almost baroque in its embellishments. Much of Paradiso is heavily symbolic; its illusions range from the classics of ancient Greece and Rome to the history of modern Cuba. Lezama almost never describes an event in a simple manner. For example here is Cemi suffering an attack of asthme: "That sluggish smoke was expanding through the pores occupying the whole organism like a divinity that created a carpet to transform every human footstep into a miraculous scale of rhythms, one of cottony silence multiplied by their infinitives in the half open grottoes of transparent cathedrals, created by ranks of stalactites clinging to a roof and oscillating in the crisscross rain of the reflections."

Most of Paradiso is written in this heavily over-laid, poetic style. Indeed in places Paradiso is much more like poetry than prose. This, I think, is the great beauty of Lezama's work — his way of seeing things, his attempt to find beauty and grace in the most mundane, sometimes even the most perverse occurrences.

So "Ya Wanna bea writta," huh? Well after you go through the deep rigors of learning how to write. Putting in hours polishing up that favorite story for your creative writing class, or finishing up your "apprenticeship" on the Collegian, perhaps you'll try to get some financial rewards for your effort.

It is a funny thing, but despite how little the pay is, it feels very good to get "something" for your work. That first check from the Valley Advocate that breaks down your hours of toil at six cents a line feels might good even if it only reads "Pay to...three dollars and 38-100's."

Many really fine writers don't go on to write for pay because they are either too lazy, tired, busy, or distracted by other needs to look into possible markets for their work. Well folks, for all you hopeful Hemingways let the excuse of "ignorance" be stripped away from you. The Editors of "Writer's Digest" have just come out with a super book, Writer's Market '74 that is a must for all of you regular or fringe writers who likes to consider yourselves as "freelance writers", even if it is only in your dreams.

Writer's Market '74 gives information of 5178 paying markets for "Novels, Stories, Fillers, Plays, Articles, Gags Verse & Photos". If it sounds impressive, skimming through the book it is all true. In addition the book gives you information concerning copyright procedures, preparing your copy, how long you should be prepared to wait for an answer, etc.

The magazines listed, with their address and description of what they are interested in range from "The American Legion Magazine" thru "Hoisery and Underwear" to "the Atlantic Monthly". As you can see, this book lists the most obscure as well as the most prominent magazines and book publishers. It gives the impression that there are so many possible markets that any half decent writer who is willing to go through "the system" and wait for a response will do just fine.

They make it look so easy. Of course you have to do the writing. Writer's Market presumes that you can already write, and is not a manual or a style book in itself. However it is an excellent book to pick up if you feel that you have something to write about, and are looking for markets to sell it to.

So "if ya wanna bea writta," come on up to the Collegian and test out your skills. However if you've been working too long for nothing, then pick up a copy of Writer's Market and give trying to write for "bucks" a shot.

If you need extra money, if you are pleasant and outgoing, if you would like to be "on call" or if you would like to work only a couple of days a week — let us train you for a specialized field. Write —

Insidious Revolutionary Activity?

On The Other...Hasson

Interview with Bill Hasson
by Gary Gomes

(Editor's note: Bill Hasson has been a prime force for the presentation of Black Music on this campus. He has also appeared on two Marion Brown albums: Geechee Recollections and Sweet Earth Flying Marion's latest release on ABG—Impulse! records).

Gomes: How were you able to get the musicians for the concerts?

Hasson: Well, most of it is that the majority of the groups and stuff that come through here were pretty close to Boston; and there's the Jazz Workshop and of course, Lenny's On the Turnpike. As a consequence, a lot of concerts have been spun off through groups coming to play at those clubs. And I notice the trend of it happening, but only on a small scale — Smith might have one or two small concerts a year, Amherst might have one or so, and UMass — well they have none, you know.

So, looking very closely at those clubs and having people come through, we simply went up there and talked to them, and whether, if they were in the area to do something down this way. And, as a consequence of that, the Black Music Series out at Amherst College went along the same thing... and, I was able to, over a couple of years of time, to contact musicians as they came through Boston and set up an engagement for this area.

Hasson: Well usually you get one group who are willing to do the legwork — you know, it takes bodies. With a concert of that size no one group can pay for it.

This ranges anywhere from five to seven thousand dollars. So you have to find interested spirits, you know, you have to go around and beg as much money as you can. And it's been very difficult because this campus certainly doesn't have a Black Music mentality. As you see, it was five days last year because it was a very new concept, and this year it was only one day concert, because people would say "I'm not really. I'm interested in it, but I'd much rather spend my money on beer and lawn parties," and stuff like that.

Regardless of that, I still think that it's important for it to happen, consistently until you build up an audience. The interesting things about the audience is that we still have a lot of people there, although people didn't support it financially, we still had a lot of people there.

Gutted Henry Threadgill

Gomes: Well, I think an important thing is to discuss the business aspect there...

Hasson: Yeah, right... the thing of it is with musicians is that they're craftsmen with their instruments, but to a very large degree they're very poor businessmen.

Most of the musicians that were invited to the conference were musicians — it's like a spread — you invite musicians who know about business and those who don't so that when they get together they can exchange information about copyright laws, and the best way of finding that out is by cats who you know are good, but he's not working. You know, if a guy is good and he's not working, you know that something's wrong whether it's with the agency, or the agent. And by reading the various publications — musicians' publications — you can see how much actual control they have of their own medium. They're very open in terms of talking about it when they come up.

Soprano fire McMilian

You take, for example, copyright laws: they haven't been changed, and guys are still being ripped off, and yet I think it's a conspiracy in that a lot of musicians are getting maybe one or two record dates a year, they may sell a lot of records, but when you see them in person, he's living in very poor conditions, you know.

Their salaries are not commensurate with their talents.

Gomes: A strong example of that is Anthony Braxton (Braxton is a reedman-composer from the AACM whose Delmark album, For Alto, has sold over 250,000 copies)...

Hasson: Anthony Braxton... a lot of them have to run away to Europe, run away to various other things.

So, it's an issue, I think, a supreme issue that has to be dealt with and that's why one of the very heavy emphasis is on the business aspect of a conference with the workshops, because they don't do anything other than talk about the business aspect — that's one of the most important things we want to deal with.

Gomes: You also said something about the music being strong...

Hasson: When I say "strong", I mean it as what the music is operating in opposition to.

You see the airwaves and the television and in concert and this, that, and the other all these mechanisms which are supposed to be reflecting the culture. To a very large degree, the culture they're reflecting doesn't offer any kind of real comfort for people to leave that experience and want to do something else. And most of the time when these musicians come and perform the music does have regenerative qualities to it.

It was in New York this weekend at the Bitter End, and they had people like Marvin Peterson, Norman Connors, Carlos Garnett — these guys are used to playing for an hour-and-a-half at a time, but because of the gig they were only supposed to play for forty minutes —, because the top act was some comic, a Lenny Bruce-type of character. I mean, like they went overtime and the management really got angry at them.

..Gomes: Like the cabaret card system... (now abolished — an old system where 'jazz' musicians would fill out a card and get approved to play in New York. If the musician was busted in any manner, he'd lose his card and his livelihood.)

That's just one example of the exploitation that goes on...

Hasson: Well, it's part and parcel of the record industry wanting to have a large amount of the profits stay within the organization.

Gomes: So, as a consequence of that, they won't bring out pure music they should...

Hasson: But you find that on some obscure labels too.

Another thing that may cause them to do that is that a number of Europeanlabels — mainly ECM (Germany), and there's a Japanese label called Japo; there's a label up in Canada which records Dolar Brand (Pianist-composer).

And the guys — you've got the distributor who literally puts the records in his van and drives from Toronto down to Detroit, and he meets people there and they spread out to Cleveland and Chicago, and they spread out to New York and that's the only way they can get the records to the country. And the music is just so — up there — you know.

You see, to a degree the music would become almost classical, if the musicians were allowed to create and distribute it the way it should be.

I mean, you find some records that are really classics. You buy maybe four or five records by an individual and he may lay out four or five years and not create. Those records are so strong that you don't have to worry about them.

Beethoven and Mozart only wrote out so many pieces — they weren't allowed to put out a new tune every week. And the demands that are being placed on musicians because of the kind of system that the music industry operates on, then, is that they don't let a cat stretch out forty or forty-five minutes unless he puts out a 'two album' jacket, and that costs you ten dollars or more. Yet, when you go see them live, these cats really can stretch out, and it's an experience that stays with you a long time.

Gomes: When it comes down to, say, a Cecil Taylor playing live as opposed to recorded, it's entirely different.

Hasson: Right. The album itself is just as stunted as the creativeness of the record companies. They're out to make money, and that's their prime concern — just to make dollars.

And they have all kinds of excuses — the price of vinyl this and that... And there are guys making all sorts of fantastic salaries, doing all sorts of innocuous things, to put out a product. Whereas the musician, once he does the album — that's it, you know? A lot of times he's required to do other people's tunes, and he doesn't get paid for them — the publishers want to get some money from those tunes.

Gomes: Well, Marion Brown's playing for Impulse! now, right?

Hasson: Right.

Gomes: Who is Richard Abrams going to record for?

Hasson: Richard? Well, there's a new album out now by the Art Ensemble of Chicago which features Richard Abrams (Fanfare for the Warriors, Atlantic SD 1651 — the Art Ensemble of Chicago is just one of the groups that evolved out of the Association founded by Abrams. An ecelectic, spiritual and highly theatrical (but honest — with their state presentation and with their instruments) group, they have recorded both here and abroad, returning to the States, are still engaged in legal problems with SACEM, the biggest publishing company in the world. And Bill goes on to explain...), but that was the last of the Atlantic Records Series. Atlantic gave them a raw deal. They ripped off that Ann Arbor Concert (also featuring Sun Ra), you know, without any contractual arrangements or anything like that. I'm sure that they're BMI and ASCAP (music publishing firms), but the original contracts for that concert were not kosher with the Art Ensemble of Chicago. So they had one more commitment, and this was some stuff that was in the "can" to put out this 'Richard Abrams album. I heard some of the acetates of it; it was very good. — But I know myself that even with the last record date, Sweet Earth Flying — Marion Brown's new album, is that he was allowed to do two takes of a Richard Abrams' composition — one was three minutes and the other was six minutes, but when they came here and played it at the musicians' concert, he played that piece for, about 7 or 8 minutes (it was the opening piece). I mean, it was restricted.

But, if you were at the workshops, a lot of cats in the band were saying that they're not going to compromise with their music — they're not going to record with Blue Note and all those other big labels that let them play ten or fifteen minutes and that's it. So they just prefer to play workshops and woodshedding at home, you know, and when they can do a concert — they'll do it.

..Gomes: And to do it as their life.

Hasson: Well, it is their life.

Gomes: And they can afford it, then...

Hasson: And they can afford to stretch out...

Gomes: So, that would be the kind of thing that musicians would be warned about at the conference?

Hasson: Right... but a lot of cats, they're locked in, and still haven't busted out of the old cabaret thing. They've got to eat, got families, so they play the cabaret scene. You've got to play the cabaret scene — that's the way it is.

I had thought at one point, after I had been involved in this for three years (organizing Black Musicians Concerts), we'd try to build it up to an Ann Arbor or a Newport Kind of thing. I think eventually that will happen. I see it happening — but I think there has to be a kind of credible relationship established between the musicians and this campus and the kind of music that they play, so it will carry itself over a period of years, where you're bringing in this kind of music...

1974 No More

'64 Found — Who Lost It?

by Bob Estelle

WHAT REALLY HAPPENED

The 1964 season was probably the most exciting in the early part of the decade. After last week's "preview", this is what happened that year and what's happened to some of 1964's contemporaries since.

HANK AARON, Milwaukee Braves

WARREN SPAHN, Milwaukee Braves

The Yankees won their last pennant in 1964, but they had to fight to do it. Their main challengers were the White Sox and it was a crazy year. Under rookie manager Yogi Berra, the Yanks got off to a slow start that year. After an incident in Chicago with Phil Linz' harmonica, they pulled out the flag, beating the White Sox by one game. Another major factor in the pennant race was Mel Stottlemyre, who was called up from the minors in June and worked his way into the starting rotation. His success had to be one of the main factors.

The Twins finished third, only to dethrone the Yankees the following year. They had 1964's rookie-of-the-year in outfielder Tony Oliva.

The American League's Most Valuable Player was Brooks Robinson, Baltimore's (then and now) third baseman. The Orioles finished fourth that year.

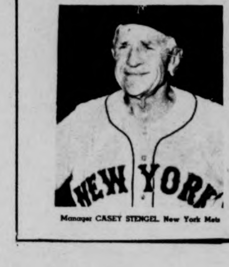
The National League race was also exciting, going down to the last day. The Phillies, lead by Jim Bunning (who pitched a perfect game on Father's Day against the Mets) and rookie-of-the-year Richie Allen, lead most of the way. They had seven games left in the season and they needed to win only one to clinch the pennant. They didn't win any of these games.

The Reds had a chance, but the Cardinals won it out with Bob Gibson beating the Mets to win the pennant for St. Louis. Cincinnati finished second and the Phillies finished third.

The Dodgers, expected to be the next dynasty in baseball, finished a disappointing fourth, won the pennant the next two seasons, and faded from contention when Sandy Koufax retired.

The big factor in St. Louis' drive to the pennant was a mid-season swap between the Cards and the Cubs. Pitcher Ernie Broglio was sent to the Cubs for outfielder Lou Brock. At the time, the Cardinals were criticized for trading a 19 game winner for a .250 hitter, but look what happened. Brock is still an All-Star outfielder for St. Louis while Broglio lasted only a few years. Besides, even in 1964, St. Louis was in dire need of a halfway-decent outfielder. Brock helped even then.

The National League's MVP was third baseman Ken Boyer, brother of Yankee third baseman Cletis. Only one Cy Young Award was given out in 1964, and that went to Dean Chance of the Los Angeles Angels.



Manager CASEY STENGEL, New York Mets

CURT FLOOD, St. Louis Cardinals

The World Series was exciting, going all seven games. Whitey Ford was injured and could not pitch, but they had enough heroics to force the Cards to seven games. Bob Gibson beat Mel Stottlemyre in the finale and, as it turned out, it was the Yankees last hurrah.

Managerial changes went crazy afterwards. Only one mid-season change occurred, with Mel McGaha replacing Ed Lopat in Kansas City. But others followed after the season was over. The Cardinals let Johnny Keane go in favor of Red Schoendienst, while the Yankees fired Yogi Berra and hired Keane. The Red Sox hired Billy Herman to replace Johnny Pesky, and Harry Craft left the Houston Colt .45's. Luman Harris was hired to manage the Houston Astros.

One more change did occur and that was due to the death of Cincinnati manager Fred Hutchinson. Hutch found out that he had cancer in late 1963 but still managed the Reds in '64. He died that December. Dick Sisler was hired to replace him.

As for the players, let us go team-by-team: the Yankees' Jim Bouton and Tom Tresh flopped after 1964. Al Downing, now a Dodger, gave up Henry Aaron's 715th home run. Berra, of course, now manages the Mets and became only the second manager ever to win pennants in both leagues last season. The last of the Yankee greats, Mickey Mantle and Whitey Ford, will be inducted into the Hall of Fame in August.

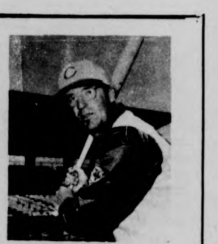
Harmon Killebrew will surpass the 550 mark in home runs this year, Tony Oliva is still around as are Boog Powell and Brooks Robinson.

Dick Williams, described as a utility infielder for the Red Sox last week, managed them to a pennant in 1967 and won World Series in '72 and '73 for the Oakland A's.

Willie Mays retired after last season, Juan Marichal is now a Red Sox pitcher and Willie McCovey is playing for the San Diego Padres.

Mgr. FRED HUTCHINSON, Cincinnati Reds



EDDIE KASKO, Cincinnati Reds

1964 was Warren Spahn's last season as a Brave. He spent 1965 with the Mets and the Giants and then retired. he was inducted into the Hall of Fame last year and is currently the pitching coach for the Cleveland Indians. His former teammate, Eddie Mathews, now manages the Braves.

The Phillies 1964 alumni are second baseman Cookie Rojas, an All-Star with the Kansas City Royals; Red Sox pitcher Rick Wise and Richie (now Dick) Allen who is a superstar with the Chicago White Sox.

Willie Stargell is now Pittsburgh's leading star, with the death of Roberto Clemente. Rusty Staub toils for the Mets and Jim Wynn is now a Dodger.

One more thing that ought to be mentioned in closing: while Henry Aaron broke Ruth's record, people have overlooked another milestone that several of the 1964 contemporaries may reach in the next few years. That milestone is the 3,000 hit plateau. Except for Stan Musial, Willie Mays and Henry Aaron, the only players that have reached this plateau played in the pre-1930 era.

Al Kaline, with 2,861 hits going into 1974, should reach 3,000 by the end of the season. Frank Robinson, now the Angels' designated hitter, has 2,783 going into 1974. If he can last until the end of 1975, he should reach it.

There are three more players from 1964 who have a chance at it. Vada Pinson, now a 35-year old outfielder for Kansas City, went into 1974 with 2,574 hits. But he has had trouble hanging on. He may end up with the same fate as Luis Aparicio (2,677 career hits).

If Billy Williams can play a few more years, his 2,397 could do it, but it would take four to five years and he is 35.

Brooks Robinson, with 2,539 hits, also has a chance. But, again, it will be three to four years and Robby is 36.

Other 1964 contemporaries with over 2,000 hits are Lou Brock (2,194), Ron Santo (2,171), Pete Rose (2,152), Carl Yastrzemski (2,112), Felipe Alou (2,101), Willie Davis (2,091) and Joe Torre (2,000). Some may have a chance, some, of course, don't.

So much for nostalgia. Let's get on the 1974. Let's Go Mets!

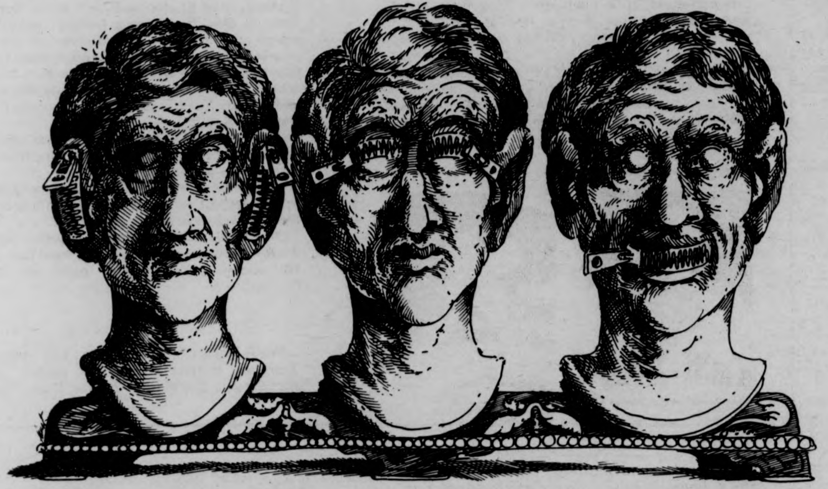
You Give It A Name

by Tom Powers

It's funny being a white nigger. Other white people think you're just white while the real niggers, the black ones, are too smart and wily to embrace you. There is all sorts of funny protocol that has to be gone through too I guess, but I'm staying away from all of you. I'm kind of enjoying the self-anointed role of white nigger for a while. It has its advantages. Not long ago I answered a summons in one of the local courts around here. My license had been taken away for faalure to answer the summons on time, but that was my own fault for changing addresses. The court had sent the summons to an old address of mine, and much to my chagrin I realized that I had not informed them of my move. Which did not seem illegal at the time. In fact I remembered carrying furniture out in broad daylight; but anyway...



I remembered my first appearance in court, that same court mind you, and I had used the old 'I'm a veteran applying for a police job' theme, and for a while I'd have been willing to wager that no better defense threw so much weight in the court systems around this country. However since tempus do fugit, I realized that was a trump card to be used only once, and it had allowed me to leave the courtroom that day with a clean record and the awareness that my acting career in society had just begun.

This time I pleaded 'not guilty', and was told to go to the office at the rear of the courtroom so that I might apply for the services of a public defender. I filled in my correct name and falsified the names of my parents', seeing no reason why they should have to be involved in my business. Psychologically it may be hard to completely snap the umbilical tie, but legally it is impossible.

A white man came in the room and I recognized him as one of the lawyers who had been in the courtroom. He joked to the male Clerk who was seated about "all the Sammy Davises out there", nodding his head towards the corridor. I had noticed before that there were a significant number of real black niggers standing around the hall as well as inside the courtroom itself. "Those are your people", the clerk answered, but his manner was jocular as he continued, "I remembered your saying before that you liked Sammy DAvis," and he smiled one of those 'got you dead to rights smiles', and went back to work. The lawyer had weaved his way back to the courtroom. I had made my way over to the files, since the girl who was helping me seemed bewildered.

"I have a Thomas Powers, but he has different parents", she was saying, and I tried to give her the old hush sign, explaining that the person in the files was indeed me, but this awkward attempt at subterfuge was for naught as the booming voice of the clerk broke in:

"Don't let him look at those files."

I tried to explain that I was only trying to help, and that I considered some of the information too personal. His manner softened, and he said that he understood this reasoning, "but that it's all for your own good that you give the proper information"... The clerk went on, now informing me that the charge was not serious enough to warrant a public defender, and if I so desired I could defend myself that very day. The girl told me that she would take the notice to the bailiff, and she told me to go back into court.

I had interrupted one woman there, and she was helping me out. I heard "I'll go upstairs and use the one upstairs, but they're probably up there." Two policemen had walked into the office in the meantime and one of them was on the phone.

"Yeah send the two who are working the BLURR... shift, he was saying. The woman who had been talking was now peering out the window. She had spotted something which was causing her great excitement, for she started speaking in shrill tones.

"Lookit," she was motioning to her fellow workers, "Lookit, there's little ones coming too." The little ones must have gotten closer because the woman settled back to her desk, and I could hear the outside door being opened.

There's a hundred and one of us, I thought. One hundred real niggers of the black type and me making a cameo appearance. I laughed to myself and realized that there were probably fifty, maybe sixty real thems in the building, but I could understand how one hundred is a nice figure to play with. The Bailiff had come into the office from the courtroom and, spotting me, asked the woman who was helping me what I was doing there. She informed him that she was filling out the proper forms, and he told her that I could not receive the proper forms until I had paid the entire fine. Embarassed that my second lie of the day was causing a second woman undue harassment, I thought quickly and came up with this one: "I just met a friend in the hallway who loaned me another ten dollars."

He told her to tell me to wait outside explaining, "He's been enough trouble already."

I decided that this was one of the better horror shows I had been in in a while, as I walked out of the office and into the hall, past two or three men dressed in suits and two policemen. I scoot by in my best bushy tailed dumb innocence stroll, and sit down on a bench a few feet away. These men talk in quiet, low tones, and while they might be talking about the last Sox game, I can't help but get the impression that they are talking about 'them.' After a little bit, the woman comes out of the office and hands me my "everything's okay" slip, and I scoot by them again, out the ront door, and it's a beautiful sunny day.

The fellow who picks me up starts talking about the wildlife in Springfield; birds mostly, though a few racoons been about, and it's all pretty interesting, but maybe I'll ask around and find out what happened between they and them.

The Bailiff leaned over to record this matter and I spoke once more, "The officer who gave me the summons told me I would need a court extract to get my license back." The Bailiff had had enough, and, turning to me, said something about going to the office at the front of the building where someone there would take care of me. I pulled a twenty out of my pocket and walked to the front of the building, glad to be out of there so early and also pleased that I would be able to pay the fine without need of an extension period.

There were four women working in the front office and they were busy typing, filing and doing that brand of job that many of the young female liberationists I meet are as busily criticizing. I had to admit that the job didn't look too great, but these women seemed happy to be at their desks. However, there was one woman who kept talking about "them". "There's a hundred of them all over the place", she was saying to her co-workers. "They're in the halls, the courtroom's full of them, and I've gotta use the ladies room."

There were three black people standing outside the courtroom door. "Excuse me", I said. The two women turned around and looked at me as if I had said something distasteful. The man with them turned, and in a long, drawn out voice which would be the envy of any aspiring thespian, articulated.

"YOU mean excuse us, man, we're trying to get in also". WE exchanged some silly banter — male egos at work and all that, and then one of the women said something about, "not again", and we all started nudging our way into the courtroom which was filled to a standing-room-only capacity. I could hear my name eing called, and was surprised at the speed of the judicial process while at the same time enjoying the absurdity of the situation, I squeezed in and gave a heaaty "Yo" while raising my hand to the Bailiff, who was scanning the room for the owner of that voice.

There was no way I was going to wade through that sea of the bodies in a short time, and I could see that the Bailiff was eager to get on with the long list of cases he was holding in his right hand. He spotted me at the back, and told me to come around the hall and through the side door. I wondered why the woman who was helping me had not just told me to follow her in the first place. To make a long story short, I was fined twenty dollars by the judge. I had about fifty dollars in my pocket, but such is man's greed that I blurted out to the judge something about not having enough money to cover the fine, as the Bailiff was ready to enter said fine into the books of officialdom. "Perhaps he'll lower the fine to ten anyway," I thought, but the judge outflanked me on this one. "Enter a balance and give him an extension until May...", the judge answered.

In Portugal—

Troops overthrow government

Censorship ends

LISBON [UPI] — The newspaper Republica announed to its readers yesterday that it was publishing without censorship for the first time.

Under a red headline "The Armed Forces Take Power", the moderately liberal newspaper carried a factual account of the overthrow of the regime by the armed forces.

A red box on the front page informed readers that "this publication was not seen by any censorship commission".

LISBON, Portugal [AP] — Rebellious troups pledging democracy at home and an end to the costly war against black independence movements in Portugal's African territories overthrew the authoritarian government of Premier Marcello Caetano yesterday.

Gen. Antonio de Spinola, apparent leader of a new military junta, went on national radio and television early today to promise freedom of thought and speech, free elections to the National Assembly and "justice with the citizen having his rights."

Seated beside him were six of the seven junta members, including Spinola's old military boss, Gen. Francisco da Costa e Gomes. The two were ousted from the leadership of the armed forces in March after Spinola published a book attacking Portugal's policy of tight military control over its African territories.

Delirious crowds surged through the streets of Lisbon last night and a navy ship fired a triumphal salvo. Unconfirmed reports said at least four persons had been killed in Lisbon, including a police inspector.

Rebel broadcasts said Caetano, 68, and several of his Cabinet ministers had presented their resignations to Gen. Antonio de Spinola after tanks surrounded them at police headquarters in downtown Lisbon. Caetano's resignation would signify the end of the authoritarian civilian regime that the late Antonio de Oliveira Salazar set up in 1932.

The newspaper O Seculo said Caetano later was escorted to a plane — reportedly by Spinola — and forced to leave for the Portuguese island of Madeira.

Portugal, the poorest and most backward country in Western Europe, has been spending about 40 per cent of its budget and maintaining 142,000 soldiers in Africa in its struggle to hold on to Angola, Mozambique and Portuguese Guinea.

Junta announced

LISBON [UPI] — The Armed Forces Movement, which overthrew the government of Premier Marcelo Caetano yesterday announced early today that Portugal will be run by a seven-man junta headed by Gen. Antonio de Spinola.

Another member of the junta was Gen. Francisco Gomes, who was fired by Caetano at the same time Spinola was dismissed. Gomes, former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, had sided with Spinola in the controversy over African policy.

Glazov urges closer radical ties between U.S.-U.S.S.R., despite cultural differences

By MARTIN J. WATERS
MDC Staff

Russian dissident Yuri Glazov last night called for closer ties between political radicals in the Soviet Union and the United States.

Speaking before an audience of about forty in the School of Business administration auditorium, the Boston College professor said dissidents in the U.S. and Russia, despite cultural differences, "should really unite in our position."

Glazov, a personal friend of exiled Soviet author Alexander Solzhenitsyn, proposed that unity take place at a middle position. He detailed a series of social and political issues where those who are called radicals within the two societies oppose each other.

In the U.S.S.R., Glazov said, nost "radicals" reject Marxism and often support capitalism, while in the U.S. the opposite is the case. Western dissidents, he said, are quick to reject traditional institutions. He pointed to religion and the concept of family as prime examples.

Glazov claimed European and American radicals are also prine to support terror, a concept condemned by Russian radicals. He pointed to the massive terrorism employed by Stalin as reason for that condemnation. "Our thoughtful people embrace ideas of non-violence and of tradition," he said, "practically to monarchism in some cases."

Glazov's appearance was sponsored by the Committee for Human Rights in the Soviet Area at UMass. The organization was formed earlier this year, and is currently conducting a letter writing campaign aimed at convincing the U.S. Congress to attempt to influence internal Soviet policy regarding free expression.

Speaking of recent relations between the Soviet and U.S. governments, Glazov urged caution concerning "so-called detente." He said: "One should be very cautious to approach the barrier where the notion of friendship begins."

Glazov referred to his specialty, linguistics, in attempting to demonstrate wide differences between Soviet and American society. It is his contention that those differences make communication and friendship extremely difficult.

Included in the linguistic examples employed by Glazov were the concepts of privacy and mass communication. In Russian, he said "there is not even a word for private, but 25 or 30 corresponding to alien or foreign." Russian is traditionally a communal society, according to Glazov, Western is individualistic.

In communication, he referred to the U.S. as "T.V.-based"; the Soviet Union as "rumor-based." To illustrate lack of knowledge about the West in Russia, even among intellectuals, Glazov pointed out Alexander Solzhenitsyn's condemnation of Daniel Ellsberg as a "traitor." In fact, he asserted, "the actions of those two men are very much alike."

Glazov told the SBA audience that word of the death of John F. Kennedy triggered his dissidence. "I knew that my time to be quiet was over," he stated.

Five years later Glazov was expelled from Moscow University, where he had worked at the Institute of Oriental Languages. In the fall of 1972 he was allowed to emmigrate, and now teaches linguistics at B.C.

Exile apparently has caused Glazov little regret: "I think, seriously, it is not very important where we live. Our globe is too narrow," he said, adding: "The problems of the world are very close to every one of us."

D.C. cases continued

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

The case of the two juveniles who were arrested recently in connection with Monday night's break-in at Hampden Dining Commons has been continued until May 14, according to Sergeant Philip Cavanaugh, head of the UMass Detective Division.

The reason that it has been continued to such a distant date, said Cavanaugh, is that there is a lot of evidence that has to be processed at the State Police Labs in Boston before the trial.

The case involving the juvenile who broke into Worcester Munchies on April 12 has been continued until April 30.

UConn profs called racist

STORRS, Conn. [AP] — Two University of Connecticut teachers of human evolution find themselves in the midst of a confusing battle involving race and politics that surfaced again this week in student sit-ins at the main library.

Critics of Profs. William Laughlin and Benson E. Ginsburg have called for their dismissal during recent campus demonstrations accusing them of spreading racist ideas in their writings and courses.

"I think we're pawns in a political game," Ginsberg said in an interview. Laughlin claimed five Marxists and one Maoist among the anthropology faculty members had helped spread the accusations against them. Both say they have never subscribed to the theory that any ethnic group is superior to any other.

"By no stretch of the imagination can our writings or teachings be legitimately construed as in any way supporting any form of racism", they said in a joint statement.

The charges, although seldom specific, persist. They stem mainly from minority-group organizations and left-wing activists on the 23,000-student campus but appear to be generally unquestioned among students.

Registration

Who's to blame for the screw-ups?

By JAN ALEXANDER
MDC Staff

Registration time every semester is also the time when students inevitably complain about screw-up schedules. The problems encountered are vast and varied and the majority of UMies seem to shake their fists at the omnipresent scheduling office in frustration over the black plague of oversubscribed courses.

But the scheduling office shifts the blame to the specific departments involved.

"The departments set the capacity level for each course or section," the principle clerk told the Collegian, "If a course is set for 50 kids, and we get 400, we notify the department, and send them a roster.

"They cut out students, usually freshmen and sophomores since they'd have a chance to take it again, while a senior wouldn't."

A junior bio-chem major pinpointed the problem in the chemistry department: "There just isn't enough space or enough teachers. Especially in Chem 111 and 112, the labs are overcrowded and the student-teacher ratio is high."

"We are close to capacity every semester," said chemistry department head John Chandler, "In that sense we have a problem."

But Chandler contends that the department has eight lectures and fifteen labs, and that "Most kids get in, although they may not get the section that they want."

Chandler added that other problems developed last semester when the computer dropped students who changed sections, and they had to be rescheduled by hand.

"In my major," said a sophomore business student, "the teachers who are teaching sections aren't listed in the schedule book, so we have to take pot luck on who we get. The only way you can get the teacher you want is to switch into his course. "But," he says, "I really don't mind it."

Another sophomore does mind it though: "It's good to know who you're getting in some gut courses like Sociology 101. Some can make it interesting and some are a real drag."

A situation which is less prevalent, but perhaps more annoying, is when a student registers for a course with a specific professor, but finds that someone else less qualified has been switched to teach it.

"Howard Ziff recommended taking a Mark Twain course from Plumstead," one English major explained, "But when I got into the course, Harold McCarthy was teaching it. I was really disgusted."

"I never drop a course unless it's really necessary, in fact, I never have before. But this course was so boring, I had to drop it."

"Professors have to be switched around due to unavoidable circumstances," said Roberta Soolman of the English Department, "These are either personal reasons or course load changes. Not just anyone teaches anything. We try to match teachers up with what they're qualified to teach."

McGilvray is wrong

Sylvan room fits 71 UMies

MDC Special

It took 71 UMies and a 640 cubic foot (8x8x10) dorm room, but Collegian cartoonist Don McGilvray has been proven wrong.

Keith C. Girard, a sophomore economics major from Randolph, wanted to show McGilvray, who uses the Sylvan Area as a target for many of his cartoon darts, that Sylvan was a better place than McGilvray portrayed it.

So Girard, a resident of 308 B Brown, decided to get as many people as he could to fit inside his room.

Inside the room was a wardrobe, desk and chair, bookcase, and bunk bed with the bottom bunk removed, leaving it about five feet off the floor.

The idea, spread by Girard and word-of-mouth, was enormously successful. In fact 71 enthusiastic Sylvanites wound up crammed into Girard's room, thereby proving for posterity that more than 12 people have been in a room in Sylvan at one time.

"I was amazed," said Girard after the record-setting feat, "that so many would come down to help out, and thanks to all who helped break the record.

"I hope Don is impressed. I think it's great Sylvan has finally found a place on the map, and I'm going to try for 100 next time."

Beware, McGilvray.

Health Council gets things done

By DONALD WILHELM
MDC Staff

UMass has an advisory group called the Health Council, which, though little-known, has great impact on the Student Health Service, and on other bodies on campus that deal with health. It consists of seven undergraduate students, two grad students, six faculty, two health service professionals, two union members, a member of the Prof. Assoc. of UMass-Amherst, the Director of Health Services, and a representative of the Mass. Dept. of Public Health. It is one of very few campus groups which reports direct to Chancellor Bromery and other high Administration officials, and is one of very few groups that really gets things done.

As of this term, the UMie with a toothache or other dental problem can find service and relief at the infirmary, and it's part of his health fee. This is in large part thanks to the Health Council, and as of this fall, also in large part thanks to the Council, specialists such as dermatologists, gynecologists, and opthamologists will be available as part of the health fee.

One of the council's long-term projects is the Amherst Health Program, which, when and if set up, will reduce medical expenditures up to 30 per cent for the university community, including students. As it will pay for outpatients services, examinations for eye glasses, dental care, psychiatric care, and other ailments not normally covered by health insurance plans, it prevents expensive major medical problems from cropping up, and thus saves money for all concerned. It also provides far more coverage, and provides actual medical service, rather than just checks after the operation.

Recently, Congress set up the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, which through a battery of new laws with teeth, promotes safety on the job. As UMass is a state facility, it does not have to comply, thanks in part to the Health Council, the University is at work fixing up its plant to meet the law.

I attended their meeting yesterday to see them in action. Much of the meeting was devoted to enlarging the number of positions for non-faculty staff members from the present two to four council members and six additional members of subsidiary committees. This must be passed by the Student Senate and the Faculty Senate in order to take effect.

SW Centers face budget cuts

With the new budget cuts pending in the state legislature, funding cutbacks are being anticipated all over campus. Southwest Centers are no exception, and ways are being explored to cope with the situation.

The problem which the centers are facing is they are funded under an 03 provision in the budget, which pays the salaries for temporary positions. The budget, when it is cut, is usually cut her first. Thus the centers will probably face cutbacks in personnel.

The main alternative at this point will be the sharing of teaching assistants and counselors among the centers. But one director feels, "We have already been cut to the bone." Another answer could lie in connecting resources of the University with the Residence area.

It is though that in order to assure adequate funding the only real solution is that the University look upon such programs instituted by the Centers as being valid and much needed programs.

Since the budget will not be in until July 1st, the real impact is not now known. Whether it will be necessary for one center to be abolished or for all centers to suffer.

Grant to support development studies

U.S. Rep. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass., and Sen. Edward W. Brooke today announced that a total of $122,148 in grants has been awarded to UMass by the National Science Foundation and the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development.

A $51,948 grant was awarded by the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development to support a study of pre-transcriptional control of development. Principal investigator will be Dr. Mark Fischer.

Three grants were awarded by the National Science Foundation. A $30,100 grant will support a two-year study of the stratigraphy and structure of nappes and gneiss domes in west central Massachusetts. Principal investigator will be Peter Robinson of the Geology Department.

A $24,300 grant will support a one-year study entitled "Metal Carbon Bonding in Transition Metal Pi-Complexes." C. Peter Lillya of the Chemistry Department will be the principal investigator.

A $15,800 grant will support a one-year study of "The Theory of Interaction of Mesons and Nucleons with Nuclei." Principal investigator will be Morton M. Sternheim of the Physics Department.

Financial Aid

Work-study to double next year

This is the fourth part in a six-part series on financial aid at UMass.

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
MDC Staff

The Work-Study program will be aiding more students next year - possibly double the amount of this year, if it receives an expected 200 per cent increase in funds, according to John Warlick, Assistant Director of the Office of Student Financial Aid.

During 1973-74, the program ran on a budget of $500,000, "a low year", according to Warlick. The Federal Government provides 80 per cent of the funds and UMass and "other sources" supply the remaining 20 per cent.

Approximately 600 students, undergraduates and graduates, are on the Work-Study Program. They are employed in the academic and staff departments, each earning an average of approximately $600 per year. Next year, according to Warlick, the Federal Government should grant $1 million on the program. He attributes the large increase to the efforts of Richard Dent, Director of Student Financial Aid.

"We requested more money from a state and regional panel of the Office of Education," explained Warlick. "We proved why we needed the money, and the panel approved 100 per cent of our request, which will increase by 200 per cent our percentage of the Federal money."

The panel decided what percentage of the fund a school receives; however, the Federal Government has the final decision as to exactly how much money the school will receive, depending on the amount available to the program. Warlick estimated that the University will actually receive approximately 30-45 per cent of their original request.

Warlick does not know if the increased money will consequently increase the amount a person would receive on Work-Study. He is certain, however, that there will be more people participating in the program.

"We may even be able to double the number of people on the program," said Warlick. There definitely will be no problem in finding jobs to fill."

In 1971, the administrators of the program stated that its purpose was: "to create jobs so that students can be assured of jobs to help finance educational expenses." It is specifically committed to finding jobs for students from low-income families.

According to the "Manual for On-campus Student Employment", put out by the Financial Aid Office, regulations require that students on the work-Study program:

1) Don't work more than 20 hours a week;

2) Don't earn more than the maximum amount decided by the Financial Aid Office while employed under the program;

3) Are eligible to receive an hourly pay raise only at the end of the semester after having completed at least 100 hours of satisfactory work, and only if the funds are available. (Warlick said that all students who had worked on Work-Study previously, received a 10 cent an hour raise last September.)

According to Warlick, a needy student receives half of his aid in scholarship and can choose to receive the other half in either loan form or Work-Study.

"There is usually enough money so that he can get his choice," said Warlick, adding, "no one is placed on Work-Study unless he wants to be there."

John Warlick, Assistant Director of the office of Student Financial Aid.

Warlick said that a person on the Work-Study program has a preference as to which job he-she wishes to take, providing that he-she is qualified. Each department has the final approval, which it usually decides on the basis of an interview.

Presently, only jobs paid for by the Work-Study Program are required to be filled by needy students. Southwest, the Campus Center and the Dining Commons, the biggest employers on campus do not have to hire employees on a basis of need; although the Campus Center will institute its own financial aid evaluation next semester. The Financial Aid Office refers many needy students to these and other on-campus employers.

A majority of these jobs are funded by the 03 account or special trust funds. Money under 03 is state-appropriated. The University receives a specific sum, which it divides and distributes it to the academic departments to be used to hire office help and assistants. Residence hall and food service fees, as well as graduate assistantships comprise the trust funds.

Warlick hopes to see most on, and to some extent, off-campus hiring done on a basis of need.

"Priority should be given to needy people," said Warlick.

The Financial Aid Office has requested that all job openings be referred to them. Although the Library does all of its hiring through the Financial Office, Warlick has not received as many requests for referrals as he would like.

The pay scale for those on Work-Study ranges from $1.85 to $2.50 an hour. Warlick hopes to raise these figures as part of a plan to upgrade the jobs.

"We don't want the students to be doing dull clerical jobs," said Warlick, "we want them to get an education from their work."

According to Warlick, of the 3,000 students who worked on campus in October, 1973, 306 were on Work-Study - 10 per cent of the total. Their average work week lasted 13 hours, and their average pay was $2.02 an hour.

1,165 students were employed under the 03 account - 39 per cent of the student employees. They worked an average of 9 hours each week and earned an average of $2.05 an hour.

There were 1,508 or 51 per cent of the employees who were paid for by trust funds, assistantships, etc. These students worked an average of 12 hours a week, and made an average of $2.15 an hour.

Fac-Sen endorses Institute for Man and His Environment

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD
MDC Staff

The Institute for Man and His Environment received endorsement and recommendations for continued support at yesterday's meeting of the Faculty Senate.

Other new business included the approval of a faculty annual salary increment policy, a first reading of the new by-laws revisions and announcements by Provost Robert L. Gluckstern concerning tenure decisions and the search for a new Dean of the Graduate School.

Originally the Fac-Sen had called for the establishment of the Institute for Man and His Environment (IMHE) in order that undergrad and graduate work could be synthesized into a study of environmental problems.

Cited as the most significant achievement of IMHE, since its beginnings, was the close working relationship it had established with the Mass. State government.

The concept of IMHE and its continuance received unanimous approval by the Fac-Sen.

Also approved was a faculty annual salary increment policy which would include a differential scale of annual increments and special awards for exceptional contributions and promotions.

Guidelines for these increment amounts would be formulated each year dependent on the University's budget and be presented each October to the Fac-Sen.

This increment policy procedure would not set up guidelines for evaluation of UMass personnel, but would tell how such evaluations could be rewarded.

Senator George T. Sulzner, Chairman of the Rules Committee of the Fac-Sen, then fielded questions concerning by-law revisions which were suggested by his committee.

These same revisions will be presented again to the Fac-Sen at its next regular meeting for final approval.

Vice Chancellor Gluckstern announced that the Faculty and Educational Policy Committee of the UMass Board of Trustees approved all tenure decisions at their recent meeting, with the stipulation that tenure policies should be reviewed.

Gluckstern also announced the formation of a search committee to find a temporary replacement for Robert L. Woodbury, acting Dean of the Graduate School.

The Fac-Sen will hold their regularly scheduled meeting next Thursday.

Prison reform activist speaks today

A young Black man, veteran of 8¼ years in the California penal system will talk on the use of drugs in prisons as a means of control today at 3 p.m. in New Africa House's Lumumba Hut.

Jimmy Dunn, former Director of the Georgia Prison Observers Project and member of The Committee for Prison Abolition, is a prison educated Black man who was sentenced to prison at age eighteen. He worked for four years in the prison hospital in Vaccaville & Soledad where he learned about drugs and their various effects. He observed the use of dangerous and destructive drugs on inmates resulting in "men being literally transformed into vegetables, psychotics, and victim to other kinds of psychological malfunctions."

A recent report published by "Urban Interpretors" supports Mr. Dunn's claims:

As a result of public testimony and the investigations of Jessica Mitford and others, the deliberately concealed facts about the use of prisoners for medical experiments are also beginning to surface. In at least 60 prisons in 27 states, medical doctors, many from nearby prestigious universities, are performing drug testing and other experiments on prisoners.

With funding primarily from the drug companies, but also the federal government (N.I.H. and the U.S. Army), these doctors are engaged in the wholesale exploitation of prisoners.

Medical experimentation on prisoners, as revealed by medical investigations and the public testimony of expert medical doctors, is the bleakest medical record in history with the exception of Nazi Germany, It is a record of risky, painful and attrocious experiments; it is also the record of needless research of no scientific significance, performed solely to allow drug companies to meet federal regulations for testing of new drugs before putting them on the market.

Investigation after investigation, has shown situations where people were not informed of true nature of the test they were undergoing and were not given adequate medical care while in the experiment."

Mr. Dunn will give specific examples from his prison experience as well as demonstrating how rather than rehabilitating men, prisons are in actuality creating very inhuman and beastly conditions under which prisons are rendered psychologically unable to function in our society.

Survey shows energy use up in U.S.

By ASHLEY HIGGINS
Associated Press Writer

Americans are relaxing their efforts to save energy now that the visible signs of the Arab oil embargo have vanished.

A nationwide Associated Press survey found evidence of increased use of energy throughout the nation since the middle of March: more auto traffic and higher speeds, rising toll-road receipts, declining use of mass transit and greater use of electricity.

Asked about The AP survey's results, William E. Simon, former federal energy chief, said in New York Wednesday that the nation is headed for further energy trouble if the survey is accurate.

The Treasury secretary-designate emphasized that "conservation has to be a way of life" and is the cornerstone of the government's energy policy. The end of the embargo did not bring an end to the energy crisis, he said.

The United States was forced to reduce its energy consumption by the embargo imposed last October by Middle East oil producing nations.

But the oil embargo ended March 18, apparently starting Americans back on the road to their former levels of energy use. Individual conservation efforts peaked in February and the first part of March, The AP survey shows.

"The energy office has been monitoring traffic to see what people would do once the lines at gasoline stations disappeared. People are going back to their old driving habits," said John C. Sawhill, who replaced Simon as administrator of the Federal Energy Office.

"There are as many people on the road now as here were in September before the embargo."

And Barry Budling, an official of the Connecticut citizens have gone back to their old gluttonous ways, people driving at the old speeds, one person in a car, the car pools having broken up."

The increase in auto use was reflected on several toll roads.

West Virginia Turnpike traffic for the first eight days of April was reported down about 1 per cent from a year ago. It had been down 4.1 per cent in the first three months of 1974.

Receipts for Connecticut toll roads on Sunday, Feb. 3, were $31,549 - 55 per cent below a year ago. But receipts for Sunday, April 14, were $82,671 - down only 3 per cent from the year before.

And police in several states said the number of speeding citations was up.

"Since they no longer have to wait in line for gas, they feel they should no longer have to go 55," said Chief Will Bachofner of the Washington State Patrol. He said troopers issued 2,992 tickets in the first week of April this year, compared with a weekly average in 1973 of 1,480.

"They've gone wild again...They're just flying out there," said Capt. John S. Timmerman of the South Carolina Highway Patrol, which issued 10,390 speeding tickets in February and 13,446 in March.

IN CASE OF FIRE SWIM TO SHORE — Fires hardly ever burn under water, but this fire plug at White Rock Lake in Dallas, Tex., stands ready just in case. The hydrant was overtaken by an expanding shoreline after a night of rainfall dumped up to 2.5 inches in some areas of the city.

Worst economy drop in U.S. history

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON [AP] — The productivity of American workers took its biggest nosedive on record as output slumped in all sectors of the economy during the first quarter, the Labor Department reported yesterday.

At the same time, the department said the value of workers' paychecks continued to shrink under the rising cost of living.

The combination adds to the already heavy inflationary pressures plaguing the economy.

Falling productivity — output per hour of work — puts upward pressure on prices as unit labor costs rise. Moreover, with real hourly pay declining, workers can be expected to seek higher wages to catch up with the cost of living.

According to the government's figures, real compensation per hour of work - adjusted to reflect rising prices - declined 5.6 per cent during the first three months to its lowest level in two years.

The decline in productivity, at a 5.5 per cent annual rate, was the largest on record and followed a decline of eight-tenths of 1 per cent in the final quarter of 1973.

Government analysts said the decrease resulted from a 6.5 per cent drop in output and a "modest decline" in the length of the work week, primarily from effects of the energy crisis on the industry.

Arnold Kanter, an AFL-CIO economist, called the report "further evidence that we are in a recession."

Despite the first-quarter decline in output, the Nixon administration contends the economy will stabilize in the second quarter and turn around in the third, avoiding a recession.

Judiciary committee lists investigation areas

From Wire Services

WASHINGTON [AP] — The House impeachment inquiry staff reported yesterday that it is concentrating its investigation on the major Watergate allegations and President Nixon's tax problems.

The staff told the House Judiciary Committee that it is halting its inquiries into 15 of the 56 original allegations against the President.

In each of the 15 cases the staff said "either there is no substantial evidence known to the staff that supports an allegation of wrongdoing or the evidence is insufficient to justify devoting the resources required to complete a thorough investigation."

Chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., emphasized that the final decision on dropping any allegation would be up to committee members.

Here are some of the 37 remaining high-priority matters under investigation:

—White House directed intelligence activities, including the planned fire bombing of the Brookings Institution and funneling payments to Watergate defendants.

—Creation of the "plumbers unit" and the burglary at the office of Dr. Lewis Fielding.

—17 illegal wiretaps and their concealment.

—The offer of high office to the judge in the Daniel Ellsberg trial.

—Forging cables to tie President John F. Kennedy to the assassination of South Vietnam President Diem.

—Illegal campaign spying activities by the Committee to Re-Elect the President.

—The plan to bug Democratic headquarters at the Watergate.

—Destruction of Watergate break-in evidence.

—Destruction of E. Howard Hunt's White House files and concealment of that act.

—Payment of "hush money" and promises of clemency to seven Watergate defendants.

—Attempts to involve the CIA in the cover-up.

—Decision to offer perjured testimony to the Watergate grand jury and trial.

—Use of the CIA to retrieve Watergate evidence from the Justice Department.

—Perjured testimony during the hearings into L. Patrick Gray's nomination to head the FBI.

—Involvement of high officials in the cover-up.

—Cox' firing oct. 20, 1973.

—The initial refusal to make available subpoenaed tapes.

—The 18¼-minute gap in the June 20, 1972 tape.

—Possible criminal fraud in connection with Nixon's 1970-73 income tax returns.

—Contributions taken for the promise of appointment to ambassadorships.

—Contributions from milk producers taken for lower dairy import quotas and higher milk price supports.

—Use of the Internal Revenue Service to harass "enemies" of the administration and reward friends.

—Antitrust suit against international Telephone and Telegraph ITT settled in return for a pledge of financial help for the 1972 Republican National convention.

—Influencing various government agencies to promote improperly Nixon's re-election.

—Solicitation and receipt of a $200,000 contribution from fugitive financier Robert L. Vesco.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR PHYSICS MAJORS (OR THE EQUIVALENT)

FOR WHOM?

If you are about to graduate with a B.S. in Physics (or the equivalent) or are already a graduate we invite you to consider our M.S. program in Mechanical or Industrial Engineering with a major in manufacturing.

Manufacturing engineers are those concerned with the planning and selection of methods of manufacture, the design of equipment for manufacture, the improvement of established manufacturing techniques and the development of new ones.

WHY CONSIDER THE PROGRAM?

1. The Society of Manufacturing Engineers (SME), one of the leading professional societies in the country, has determined that manufacturing engineers will be in increasingly short supply in the future. This is because one of the country's major tasks is improving industrial productivity and industry will be looking for people who will be able to help in this important work.

2. Last year fifty-nine percent of the companies who interviewed on Campus were looking for engineering graduates.

3. As a result of the rapid expansion of the manufacturing research program at the University of Massachusetts, several excellent research assistantships are now available. These assistantships have stipends ranging from $3,200 to $5,000 per year plus waiver of tuition.

INTERESTED?

South African party reelected easily

JOHANNESBURG [UPI] — Prime Minister John Vorster's governing National party coasted yesterday to its sixth successive election victory since World War II but had to acknowledge a surprise show of strength from white liberal elements.

With two seats undeclared, the Nationalists had captured 122 seats in the 171 member parliament, or five more than they held in the previous assembly. The party won 55.4 per cent of the national vote from 2.2 million white voters for another five-year term.

National party spokesmen interpreted the verdict as an endorsement of Vorster's separatist racial apartheid policies, envisioning white sovereignty in South Africa but carving away 13 per cent of the land area for the nation's 16 million blacks in independent "Bantustan" homelands.

The Progressive party PP doubled its national vote, securing 7.5 per cent and increased its seats from one to six in the new parliament. Its gains were made at the expense of traditional United Party UP opposition, whose seats were reduced from 47 to 39 as counting neared completion.

Led by Sir de Villiers Graaff, it stood for a federal structure of black-white power sharing by stages more gradually than the PP's proposals for immediate racial equality with a qualified franchise.

Vorster, 59, Nationalist leader since the assassination in 1966 of his predecessor Hendrik Verwoerd, campaigned for a "free hand" in the next five years, insisting Graaff's program, which could see a black prime minister in time, would be ruinous for white South Africa.

"Once relinquished, sovereignty cannot be regained except by force," he told supporters.

English-speaking newspapers, supporting the opposition parties, said the election showed a "spectacular vote for change."

The Rand Daily Mail, supporting the progressives, said "for all South Africans -black and white- it could mark the beginning of a new era."

US-W. Germany pact

BONN, Germany [AP] — The United States and West Germany signed a long-delayed agreement today under which Washington will receive 2.2 billion to offset foreign exchange costs of stationing 100,000 U. S. troops in this country.

The agreement replacing a previous two-year arrangement which expired June 30, 1973, was signed by U. S. Ambassador Martin J. Hillenbrand and Peter Hermes, a senior official in the Bonn Foreign Ministry.

A joint statement said the agreement, covering the period from July 1973 to June 1975, involves a total West German payment of 5.92 billion marks, or $2.22 billion at a conversion rate of .669 marks to the dollar.

"The agreement is based on the strength of the U. S. forces in the Federal Republic of Germany as of 1 July, 1973," the statement said, indicating that U. S. troops in West Germany will remain at their present 200,000 level for duration of the agreement.

FBI still on Hearst

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — Despite Patricia Hearst's insistence that she has joined the Symbionese Liberation Army which kidnaped her, the FBI said yesterday its investigation will proceed as before into the 80-day-old abduction.

"It certainly doesn't change our investigation," said Charles W. Bates, the FBI agent in charge. "It adds another bit of information."

U. S. Attorney James Browning had no immediate comment on whether the latest tape recording from Miss Hearst, received Wednesday, would result in a change in her status of being sought only as a material witness in the robbery of a San Francisco bank April 15.

In a caustic and bitter statement, Miss Hearst branded her father and fiance as "pigs" and "clowns" and reaffirmed her allegiance to the tiny terrorist group which kidnaped her Feb. 4.

After hearing the tape, her father, Randolph A. Hearst, president and editor of the San Francisco Examiner, said the family still believes she has been brainwashed by the SLA.

"No matter what she says, we still love her," Hearst said.

Kennedy-Soviet Jews

MOSCOW [UPI] — Eleven Soviet Jews said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy promised them in an early morning meeting yesterday he would do everything he could to help them emigrate.

The Jews, who made a recording of the meeting, quoted Kennedy as saying, "I will do everything I can to help because the issue is of great importance to the U. S. people and Congress."

A Soviet KGB secret police agent, apparently acting as Kennedy's bodyguard, accompanied the Massachusetts Democrat to the one-hour, 10-minute session which began at 1:15 a.m. Kennedy asked the Jews if they objected to the agent's presence and they said they did not.

Kennedy traveled to the home of internationally known cyberneticist Alexander Lerner in a government limousine put at his disposal shortly after he returned from a one-day trip to Leningrad. Lerner has been trying to emigrate to Israel for more than two years.

Mitchell-Stans fate up

NEW YORK [UPI] — A nine-man, three-woman Federal Court jury yesterday began deliverating the fate of former Attorney General John N. Mitchell and former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans after hearing the prosecution label them liars.

Federal Judge Lee P. Gagliardi sent the panel to the deliveration room at 4:55 p.m. EDT in the 45th day of the historic obstruction of justice trial after delivering to them a 3¼ hour charge on the law.

Judge issues injunction against 'Zebra' dragnet

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — A federal judge declared yesterday that an intensive "stop and question" operation by police seeking the "Zebra" killer was unconstituional.

Police already had discontinued the widescale questioning of black males resembling an artist's sketch of the "Zebra" killer, saying the tactics had proved "unproductive and ineffective."

Federal Judge Alfonso J. Zirpoli issued an injunction against the city, prohibiting indiscriminate stopping of citizens, at the request of two civil rights organizations.

Although police have discontinued the offending practices, Zirpoli said the "danger of repetition has not been removed."

He noted that the police and city officials acted in good faith in their hunt for the "Zebra" killer, assuming that similarity to the artist's concept of a suspect was grounds for questioning.

However, the judge said, "simple good faith is not enough" and the city was "mistaken on the constitutionality of the program."

Earlier the Police Department had assured the court that under revised guidelines in "Operation Zebra" the "personal rights and privacy" of citizens was being carefully respected.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the American Civil Liberties Union had filed suits against the police. They contended black males were being stopped indiscriminately and questioned merely because they resembled a police artist's composite drawing made from descriptions of the "Zebra" attacker given by witnesses and victims.

Nearly 600 blacks had been stopped by officers looking for "Zebra" when the operation was sharply curtailed Police conceded it had been unproductive and ineffective after six days.

Israel has peaceful Independence Day

TEL AVIV [UPI] — Israel observed a low-key 26th Independence Day yesterday with somber expressions of peace hopes by its leaders, a mass protest hike through Jerusalem and more artillery exchanges on the Golan Heights front.

The military command, which kept a full-scale alert on the nation's fronts, said there were no casualties in the skirmishes around Mt. Hermon and in the southern part of the Golan Heights, west of the truce line its forces overran in the October war.

Prime Minister-designate Yitzhak Rabin, who will be formally invested today with the task of putting together a new coalition, said he wished that in the coming year "we'll advance towards peace."

Panel says Hughes money not used

WASHINGTON [UPI]-Serial numbers on the thousand $100 bills President Nixon's friend C.G. "Bebe" Rebozo returned to billionaire Howard Hughes tend to bear out Rebozo's testimony that no use was made of the money during the three years he had it, according to Senate Watergate committee sources.

At least, the sources said, the numbers show the $100,000 was all printed prior to 1970, when Hughes aide Richard G. Danner delivered the cash to Rebozo in two equal installments.

The committee has been unable to determine, however, just when the bills were put into circulation. The sources said the Treasury keeps only sketchy records on this, and that bills do not go into public use until years after they are printed.

Rebozo has testified that, because of uncertainty about the purpose of the contribution from Hughes and possible embarrassment to the President, he kept it in a safe deposit box at his bank in Key Biscayne, Fla., finally returning it to Hughes after its existence was made public.

The committee undertook to date the bills after Herbert W. Kalmbach, Nixon's personal lawyer, testified that Rebozo told him some of the cash had been given to Rose Mary Woods, Nixon's personal secretary; the President's brothers, Edward and F. Donald Nixon, "and others."

Spokesman for Miss Woods and the Nixon brothers have said they never received the money. Rebozo also has denied giving any part of the Hughes cash to anyone.

Committee investigators obtained the $100 bills from Chester Davis, a Hughes lawyer, copied them, then returned them.

"We really didn't expect to find that they had been printed before 1970," one committee source said. "Do you think they would have turned over the bills if there was anything wrong with them?"

The committee has been checking on the Hughes money and any possible connection to Donald Nixon, a former business associate of a top Hughes aide.

The inquiry is focusing on the income tax records of Rebozo, Miss Woods the Nixon brothers and a number of Hughes associates. The committee has asked the Internal Revenue Service IRS to turn over any related "sensitive case reports."

Texas panhandle wheat is lost to drought, heat

AMARILLO, Tex. [AP] — The Texas Panhandle's dryland wheat crop is lost, the victim of a severe drought, bugs and several weeks of hot, blustery winds.

The cost to farmers: $160 million, perhaps more.

Officials in Washington said the impact nationally is minimal. The U.S. Department of Agriculture says that with the exception of some drought areas of New Mexico and western Texas, this year's crop is "generally good in all areas of the nation." And dealers note that wheat prices, while somewhat higher, don't appear to be reflecting the Texas drought.

But the economy of the Panhandle, already crippled by plunging cattle prices, is headed for another shock.

Texas usually produces about 5 per cent of the nation's wheat, much of it grown in the Panhandle.

If there had been a decent rainfall by April 15, some of the crop might have been salvaged. There was little rain.

"In this immediate area I don't think any dryland wheat can be saved," says Arnold Prichard of the Producer's Grain Corp.

With no water, the wheat never had a chance. Any sprigs surviving the dry spell were snipped off by insects, mostly green bugs.

Even irrigated wheat has suffered from drought and bugs. "Our irrigation wells have to have some help from mother nature," says Milton Johnson of the Producer's Grain Corp."

Prichard tells of an irrigation farmer near Bovina, Tex., who watered his 600 acres five times; sprayed insecticide three times and says now: "Hell, even if wheat was $5 a bushel I couldn't get my money out of it."

Knowledgeable producers forecast a Texas wheat crop of less than 50 million bushels, about half the 1973 harvest.

Sawhill claims fuel costs were too high

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Energy chief John C. Sawhill said yesterday U.S. fuel distributors may have overcharged customers by more than $100 million during the energy crisis, in thousands of cases of accidental overcharge or deliberate gouging.

Sawhill said federal investigators already had refunded nearly $15 million to wholesale and retail customers overcharged in purchases of gasoline, propane, home heating oil and diesel fuels.

In other major energy developments yesterday:

—The House Commerce Committee split the long-stalled emergency energy bill in half and sent it to Congress, hoping the separated proposals to postpone cleanair standards will survive on their own if President Nixon vetoes the main energy measure.

—William E. Simon, the Treasury secretary nominee, said in New York the nation must develop its own energy resources or accept sharply lowered living standaras and a position of dependency in world affairs.

He said investigators from his Federal Energy Office and the Internal Revenue Service had jointly checked more than 47,000 such allegations since Jan. 1 at both wholesale and retail levels.

"This program has already challenged or has under investigation some $100 million in cost pass-throughs," he said, with the result to date that $14,194,379 had been refunded from erroneous or deliberate overcharging.

Sawhill said a separate investigation into speculation in the propane industry showed "propane prices were being driven up by illegal broker activity, particularly by large markups that were being made without any product ever changing hands." He estimated about $21.4 million would be refunded to customers after audits are completed.

East German spy ring under Brandt cracked

BONN [UPI] — Federal criminal police announced yesterday they have broken up a Communist East German spy ring operating in West German Chancellor Willy Brandt's office with the arrest of a close aide, his wife and four other persons.

A spokesman said police officers arrested Guenther Guillaume, 47, and his wife, Christel, Wednesday morning in their villa at Bonn's diplomatic Bad Godesberg residence quarter.

He said Guillaume, who came to West Germany from East Berlin as a refugee, had been in charge of Chancellor Brandt's appointments and party papers.

The West German television station ZDF said others arrested in the case included Guillaume's mother, his mother-in-law and a married couple of servants.

ZDF said Guillaume was arrested when he returned from a vacation to prepare his escape. The station said Guillaume had made a number of trips to France recently to contact other East German agents.

A stocky mild-mannered civil servant with steel-rimmed glasses, hair combed back and a double chin, Guillaume told interrogaters he doubled as officer in the East German National People's Army connected with intelligence matters.

The spokesman said Guillaume fled to West Germany in 1956 and worked his way through regional Social Democratic party offices before entering Palais Schaumburg, the Chancellory, in 1970.

Government spokesman Ruediger von Wechmar said Guillaume had no access to secret or confidential papers and none of the other arrested persons were connected with the Chancellory.

Brandt returned to the capital early in the afternoon after opening a fair in Hannover to what political commentators said was West Germany's biggest spy scandal to date.

The opposition Christian Democrats called for a parliamentary session Friday to discuss the arrests.

Interior Ministry spokesman Herbert Schuling said Guillaume had been under surveillance for a year.

"East German espionage in West Germany has taken a terrible beating," he said.

The arrests came a week before the arrival in Bonn of East Germany's first official representative, Michael Kohl, the high-ranking civil servant who negotiated the treaty between the two countries.

The news hit parliament during a day-long debate on abortion and sent party leaders into emergency sessions, including the all-party "Men of Confidence" council responsible for intelligence matters.

The opposition Christian Democrats called a parliamentary debate on the arrests for today.

N.H. town votes on oil refinery

NEWINGTON, N.H. [AP] — Newington residents were to be given a chance last night to express their opinions on a 50,000-barrel-a-day refinery proposed for their town. The public hearing in the civic center was scheduled by the town Planning board to test local sentiment about the facility planned by the C.H. Sprague & Son Oil Co.

The $10 million refinery would be built in on land owned by Sprague near the firm's docks, tank farm and oil-processing plant along the Piscataqua River near Great Bay.

The area is already zoned for industrial use, but the town would have to grant a building permit for the construction.

Under a new state law, residents of a town or city also must approve refinery plans before such a facility can be built within the corporate limits.

State and federal approval also would be required.

Sprague says the refinery would increase river traffic by two ships a month and would cause a moderate increase in rail and truck traffic in the area.

Other specifications call for use of 420,000 gallons of water a day from a well already dug on the property.

During construction, 200 persons would be employed. The figure would drop to 100 for normal operation, which could begin as soon as the middle of next year, the company says.

N.E. governors ask for energy aid

BOSTON [UPI]-The six New England governors yesterday said the region pays a "disproportionate" price for heating fuel and gasoline and asked the Federal Energy Office to develop plans to equalize the cost of energy across the nation.

The governors' resolution asked the FEO to submit the plan within 30 days to the region's congressional delegation and the New England Regional Commission, which is made up of the six chief executives.

"New Englanders are paying a disproprtionate share of their income for electricity, gasoline, oil and coal," said Vermont Gov. Thomas P. Salmon, author of the resolution.

Specifically, the resolution asked the FEO to "make a determination of the extent and nature of the energy price differential suffered by the New England region" and "to identify the causes of that differential and to make recommendations for appropriate remedial action.

Sargent files bill to protect privacy

BOSTON [UPI]-Legislation designed to improve the protection of civil liberties and privacy of citizens charged with crime in Massachusetts has been submitted to the legislature by Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

The bill modifies the 1972 Criminal History Systems Act by giving the Securities and Privacy Council sole authority to determine whether the state's planned computerized criminal offender record system is connected to other computers including those of the FBI. The council now has only advisory powers.

The bill also would prohibit by statute inclusion in the computer of information on arrests not resulting in convictions. The independent Criminal History Systems Board (CHSB) has such a prohibition in proposed regulations but those are subject to immediate and long-range modification.

Mt. Holyoke discusses women in politics

SOUTH HADLEY [UPI]-"A vast area of natural expertise qualifies women for broadened participation in politics," Connecticut Secretary of State Gloria Schaffer said yesterday.

In an address prepared for delivery at a "Women in Politics" symposium at Mount Holyoke College, the first-term Democrat said the homemakers as well as professional women have skills required of public office-holders.

Among these are "a strong sense of economics, ability to organize and discipline and confident decision-making," according to a prepared text.

"We do not insist that all men in politics have degrees in law, political science or economics," said Mrs. Schaffer.

"We respect the qualities of intelligence, reason and committment. Yet too often we do insist that women candidates offer us more tangible proof of their capability."

Health costs to rise 5%

BOSTON [AP]-Representatives of the state's hospitals and health insurers yesterday told Gov. Francis W. Sargent they expected price increases of around 5 per cent when federal price controls expire next week.

David Kinzer, president of the Massachusetts Hospital Association, said after meeting with the governor the major teaching hospitals in Boston had told him they would have to increase incomes by 4 or 5 per cent in 1974 to permit wage increases.

Inequities in the GI bill education benefit program

The recent publicity surrounding proposed increases in veterans' educational benefits has concentrated solely on a debate over how much additional money should be granted, but the real pressing issues of inequities in the educational system and restrictions imposed on recipients by the Veterans Administration have been passed over thoughtlessly. The truth of the matter is: an eight per cent increase (approximately eighty dollars per semester) will not pay for exorbitant tuition costs and will not attract other veterans to use these benefits. Such an increase will only serve the relatively small number of veterans presently enrolled in low cost state universities which now enroll eighty-one per cent of all college veterans.

This increase will do nothing to alter the opportunities available to a veteran not the distribution of veterans throughout the educational system.

There would be no problem for the veterans if the educational system in this country had the same programs at each school; if each program, from school to school, was equally respected; and if tuition costs were the same at every school. But this is not the case. Tuition costs at a private school average fifteen hundred dollars per semester, tuition waivers for veterans to attend state schools are only applicable in fourteen states, and there are no scholarship provisions for needy veterans.

The veteran who was inducted from a state offering tuition waivers has a definite advantage over veterans inducted from the other thirty-six states without such a waiver. Yet this same vet cannot transfer this waiver to an out-of-state school regardless of that school's waiver policy. Moreover, this same veteran cannot, or will not take advantage of the educational benefits if the school he can afford does not have the appropriate program that he desires. Massachusetts is a good example of a state willing to give tuition waivers to veterans, but this state does not have a law school, veterinary school or a state divinity school.

As states' educational policies vary so do the caliber and quality of programs. The emphasis and discipline of any one program is not an exact duplicate from school to school yet a veteran is literally restricted in his choice of disciplines and forced to accept the curriculum available. This is not to say that all state schools are inferior, but rather to point out the fact that veterans are not choosing schools based on their individual needs but out of economic necessity.

The high cost of education and the discrepancies in states' policies preclude maximum veteran participation in the educational system, and an eight per cent increase in benefits will do nothing to increase participation. Critics, legislators, and veterans should end this debate over how much of an increase because the difference between an eight per cent increase and a fourteen per cent increase is exactly three dollars and thirty cents per week - hardly an amount worthy of debate. The debatable issues are in the educational system, state policies, and restrictions imposed on the veteran who receives benefits.

These restrictions are subtle and seldom challenged. Following World War II books, tuition and a living expense were granted to every college enrolled veteran regardless of tuition cost or book cost. The present policy of the Veterans Administration is to "lump" these costs together and come up with a flat grant for all based on the number of dependents. This major shift in policy is the basic cause of low Ivy League veteran enrollment which, following WWII, had a student body comprised of fifty-nine per cent veterans in comparison with the two per cent veteran enrollment at present.

Where the VA has made restrictive changes that have polarized veterans into state schools the same VA has failed to extend the length of coverage. Presently a veteran is given eight years to use his benefits but only for a maximum of eight semesters. Following WWII it wasn't necessary to have more than four years of education, today it is, yet this obvious fact has not been dealt with. The veteran after four years of college has not only used all the educational benefits he was "legally entitled to" but has also spent four years outside of the work force and doesn't have any money to pay for graduate school, anywhere. Critics who conclude that veterans can compensate for the minimal government benefits through part time employment miss three important factors: a job scarce economy especially for part time work; to receive full benefits a veteran must carry a full credit load; and part time jobs pay minimum wages which force long hours if money is to be saved for future tuition costs. These three points are extremely important when viewed collectively. They do not allow for saving and an education, yet the VA arbitrarily determines these factors and imposes restrictions that confine the veteran.

Following WWII benefits for veterans was not a debatable issue. WWII was a popular war and it was fought by individuals from every socio-economic class or background. These two concepts seem to explain the ease in which legislation was passed and its broad coverage. Viet Nam was not a popular war and Viet Nam was fought by individuals primarily from lower middle class or lower class backgrounds. Viet Nam was not fought by the sons and daughters of Washington legislators, so it seems doubtful that they care or really understand the problems facing college enrolled veterans. Or more importantly the greater problem facing a veteran who desires an education but cannot afford it because he is married, with two small children, and there is no tuition waiver in his state. The bureaucracy is only trying to smooth over a very difficult problem with token money that neither solves the problem not deals directly with it.

In conclusion a discriminatory educational system, differing state policies, an apathetic government administration, and a structurally unfit Veterans Administration are to blame for a mockery of an educational benefit program for veterans. The problems of this programs are not going to be resolved through an eight per cent increase or even an absurd twenty percent. The problems are inherent in the structure and must be dealt with on that level.

Letters to the editor

No alternative but to impeach Nixon

By BILL DENSMORE

The President's suggestion Wednesday that he will not turn over tapes to the special prosecutor, but only transcripts when a subpoena deadline comes next Tuesday makes it clear that there is not acceptable solution to the dilemma facing this country and the present administration short of a House impeachment vote and Senate conviction of Richard Nixon.

The government process can only bear so much strain, and Mr. Nixon shows every sign of stretching it up to, and beyond that limit in some vain hope of personal salvation or villification as the upholder of "executive privilege."

Fundamentally, there are two reasons why Mr. Nixon should be removed from office – either by impeachment or forced resignation. Impeachment seems most appropriate and justified.

First, the men who Nixon surrounded himself with during and after his 1972 election mandate have nearly all disappeared, forced to resign, fired to prevent embarrassment, or more dramatically convicted of felonies. Nixon himself has made several attempts to survive in office, rather than serve his tenure as the system demands.

Twenty-seven indictments against Nixon aides, evidence of tax fraud, complete lack of candor in reviewing Watergate and implications of personal involvement in the Watergate coverup all force examination of what the Constitution's "high crimes and misdemeanors" actually include.

If you believe scholars and politicians like former Attorney General Elliot Richardson, former special prosecutor Archibald Cox and Senator Edward M. Kennedy when they say a President must answer for the moral standards he sets, tell Congress to impeach Mr. Nixon.

Second, a President must have the respect of national and world leaders if he is to function in office with any degree of effectiveness.

A New York Times poll of international news bureau chiefs for that newspaper published this week said world leaders are united in the belief that Mr. Nixon will be forced to leave office because of Watergate. Although the world leaders were said to see no fundamental change in American foreign policy as a result, such a belief on their part cannot help but affect the way in which they view Mr. Nixon.

In three Congressional special elections in Michigan and California, Republican shoo-ins have been defeated by dark-horse Democrats, including, in the most recent case, the astonishing narrow victory of Democrat Robert Traxler in Michigan – after Nixon campaigned for the Republican William Sparling.

If in pragmatic wisdom you think the President should present a strong face to world leaders, if you fear the consequences of a lopsided single-party majority in Congress next year because of the Watergate specter hanging over Republicans, write Mr. Nixon and tell him to resign.

The cardinal rule of management theory teaches that the top man is responsible for actions of his subordinates. Deposed United Mine Worker's President W.A. "Tony" Boyle was convicted of murder this month, not because he pulled the trigger to murder, but because he knew it was to be pulled.

The evidence is not in, but it is increasingly clear that the activities of stealth, subversion, lying and tax fraud that flourished in the White House could not have existed without outright support, or at least acquiescense from the top.

If you feel a criminally indictable offense is necessary to impeach and convict, look no further than Mr. Nixon's tax returns, which he signed, certifying that the statements made on them were accurate.

Then look for a deed of gift for his Presidential papers, now verified as signed and dated long past the date such donations were legally acceptable.

Look to Mr. Nixon's personal tax accountant, who has now acknowledged that he felt parts of Mr. Nixon's returns were improper at filing time, but left them intact on orders from high up.

After you have looked, either conclude that Mr. Nixon is a crook, or a victim of his secretive and arrogant aides, some, like H.R. "Bob" Haldeman. and John D. Erlichman, are now under federal indictment.

If you think he was a victim, tell him to resign, because he is incapable of picking honest advisors – so essential to the functioning of a modern, complicated Presidency.

That Mr. Nixon maintained a telephone recording system that Erlichman now claims he had no knowledge of is ample indication that Mr. Nixon initiated action independent of his advisors and potentially could have controlled Watergate bungling that he now says he knew nothing about at the time.

If you think Mr. Nixon is guilty of conspiracy to withhold information, or if you think his taxes show he is a crook, ask Congress to impeach him.

Our political process can survive with a President who has lost effective leadership. Perhaps it could function with a crook as chief executive. It cannot survive both for long.

The Rodino committee, for the good of the country, should return an impeachment recommendation to the House. Congress should then put aside all other business to vote an impeachment resolution. The Senate, after looking at the ample evidence already public, should convict Mr. Nixon on the basis that he has headed the most morally shabby, contemptuous and surrreptitious, to quote Sam Ervin.

Finally, there is one quick and easy way to demonstrate support for the impeachment or resignation of Mr. Nixon. Tomorrow a massive demonstration is planned in Washington by members of the largely anti-war inspired National Impeachment Coalition. Go to Washington and demonstrate. Call the United Christian Foundation on campus to reserve a $14 ride to Washington tonight on a bus.

Antony C. Sutton

There are many facts of history that have been supressed by "the establishment" simply because this establishment does not want them to be known. Sometimes if these facts are brought out, clear and objectively, to the people, the people will force the establishment's government to change its policies in certain areas.

But these facts still can be found. There are publishers who do dare defy the establishment. One of these is Arlington House of New Rochelle, New York. It is run by the Buckleys and the Conservative Book Club.

Dealing mostly with free enterprise economics, Arlington House came out with a book that may be their biggest seller of all time. It is Antony C. Sutton's "National Suicide: Military Aid To The Soviet Union", a synopsis of Sutton's three other publications.

Sutton is a researcher on the staff of the Hoover Institute of War, Peace and Revolution located at Stanford University. His three previous volumes, published by this organization, deal with Soviet Technology from the founding of the Soviet Union in 1917 up to 1968. "Western Technology and Soviet Economic Development, Vols. 1 and 2 are available in the library and I hope that the library will order Volume 3 and make this available.

The Buckley's, naturally, were hoping that "National Suicide" would not be too popular but it just did not work out that way. The John Birch Society got its hands on the book and is currently offering it for sale not just through its chain of American Opinion Bookstores around the country, but through a bonus offer. By buying a subscription to their weekly magazine "The Review Of The News", one will receive a free copy of "National Suicide."

Their is one main conclusion to all of Sutton's work. This conclusion is that 90-95 per cent of all Soviet Technology is dependent on the United States and its allies.

Sutton backs this up with well-documented information as to how the Soviets have received all kinds of military equipment since the Lend-Lease days of World War II and that it has continued since then. Plane factories, truck and automobile factories, tire factories, tank factories, etc. have been built by American companies with the approval of the American government.

Sutton's research brings out two questions: Why did these companies do this and why are they keeping it up? The answer is that the government wants to build up the Russians as part of a plan to communize the United States, with the super-rich at the controls.

The other question is "Is this treason?" It most assuredly is. There is a federal law that prohibits any American company from trading with a country that is an "enemy country". Time and time again, Marx and Lenin and Stalin and Kruschev and even Breshnev have stated that they are our enemies and either they or us will ultimately be the victors. And yet, our government acts like a mouse before the Russian government. They also encourage business to trade with the Soviets. Yet not one U.S. Attorney will prosecute these traitors for what they are.

Yes, they are traitors as they are helping to strengthen the Russians. It is they and no one else that have made the Soviet Union the power it is. And they must be stopped. Sutton's books (all available in the library except for Vol. 3 of "Western Technology and Soviet Economic Development, as previously mentioned) have all the clear and objective facts that anyone needs to see who brought Soviet Technology to the place it now is. It tells exactly who these traitors are.

For the sake of our own freedom, let all Americans get together and stop this treason. Read Antony Sutton's studies and then work to stop this un-American activity.

Writing with love

No fault insurance, no fault divorce, no fault writing. Why not?

By DARIO POLITELLA

What this University needs is a good, no-fault writing course.

Required.

"No-fault" because there would be no grade-tags applied to achievement.

"No-fault" because it would in no way punish students for the failings of their teachers in early schooling, who subscribed to the "Write 300 times, 'I will not misspell the word spelling' theory."

"No-fault" because it would acknowledge that every literate person who makes it to college has something to write about, if he could only be guided on how to transfer thought to paper, according to his own needs.

"No-fault" because it would be a course in how to write, with love.

The course would prove that literary scholars who deal with the interpretations of what has been written are not necessarily the best teachers of how to write.

And the new no-fault concept would concede that assigning Teaching Assistants to such as Freshman Composition and other Rhetoric Courses is not only cruel and unusual punishment, but counter-productive, as well.

The academic powers-that-be must then concede at long last that writing is a craft that is best exercised by those knowledgeable in the mechanics of writing. Like journalists, who practice the craft every day to communicate with disparate readerships under difficult conditions where the only fault that may be assessed is when they have failed to produce accurately and fairly and completely by deadline.

A further concession by the literary powers must be that the teaching of writing is a vocational activity. No one has ever been taught to write simply by talking about it. Writers learn to write by writing. And preferably under the guidance of craftsmen who have been successful practitioners.

The journalist is one of these. For he has already experienced the four disciplines so vital to a no-fault writing course.

1. The discipline of writing on demand, rather than by desire or disposition. The only inspiration a journalist needs is his assignment.

2. The discipline of writing consciously to be read by a predetermined audience which has identifiable needs and desires. The journalist writes for everybody, and particularly for the least of those among us, by using simple words cast in simple sentences.

3. The discipline of writing to communicate, rather than to obfuscate; to express, rather than to impress. The journalist's road is no ego trip to a readable, meaty, authentic and authoritative piece.

4. The discipline of writing the truth, with love. For the journalist is early on imbued with the sensibility that knowing the truth will keep everyone free.

The old Frosh Comp course simply isn't making the grade. Nor is the new-fangled rhetoric course that seems to stress "Who are you, when you're writing what you're writing?"

These older concepts breed the self-consciousness that festers the fault of writing courses that profs have known about since they were pups.

What every person needs, to be truly educated, is training in how to communicate with an identifiable audience under specific conditions.

The emphasis in this "new" writing must be to focus on the reader. Who is he (degree of sophistication in the subject; education)? What does he want (need) to know? When does he need to know it (construction of story)? Where does all this happen (medium)? And how best does the writer tell him (format of communication)?

Admittedly, even with such a panacea as a "no-fault" writing course, there is no guarantee that after leading a student to paper, he will write on it.

But we should try it. We might like it.

And then, even Ann Kienitz might be satisfied. It was she who wrote in a recent editorial entitled "Change still needed for English class" that appeared in the UWis-LaCrosse Racquet: "Improve the product instead of putting the pressure on the student."

Dario Politella teaches what he preaches in two courses: Eng. 337A - "Journalistic Writing for Non-Journalists" and Eng. 339 - "Article Writing."

Remove carcasses

Jack Littlefield, UMass director of Planning, regards the dumping of animal carcasses in the vicinity of North Village as "news" to him -- as if it never occured.

Many student residents find the matter upsetting. What is more upsetting to us is that a University official has once again acknowledged a lack of concern to a student community he supposedly serves.

"I doubt its validity, and will have no comment until I check the matter out," Mr. Littlefield told us.

Certainly Mr. Littlefield would not tolerate that kind of action from the local Board of Health if he requested that an ugly and oderous horsehead was lying on the front law on his Pelham home be removed.

In fact he would be the first one to sound off. And indeed he would make certain that it would never again occur.

Does it take a College newspaper to correct a simple problem like this? We would think not.

However, it took some investigating reporting to force the University to temporarily correct a deplorable circumstance.

More unfortunately, the UMass administration seldom lives up to its claim of serving the student. Take this case as an example.

Putting more dirt on the animal pits near North Village does not solve the problem. What is needed is a commitment made by the University that animal carcasses will be disposed of in accordance with the sanitary landfill regulations.

It seems to us that if our distinguished representative in Boston, James G. Collins, can request action from the University on this matter--when he is bogged down with hundreds of other commitments--a person of Mr. Littlefield's status should not look down his nose at UMass students.

It's particularly displeasing to those students who take a civic interest in the state of affairs in Massachusetts to find that they can not get responsible action from those at this University who are employed by the state.

We think those inconvenienced residents of North Village merit some kind of appology on Mr. Littlefield's part. And we hope that maybe other officials will not dismiss this matter lightly.

Prison theatre performs

To The Editor:

Much has been said of late about prison reform. The recent occurances at Attica and Walpole point out the need for something to be done. The dismissal of John Boone shows the reluctance to change. Rehabilitation programs have been a farce as shown by the 85 per cent recidivism rate nationally. Correctional institutions are incubators for hostility and frustration. This energy can and must be chanelled into constructive efforts. There people deserve self expression and a chance to be heard without resorting to violence.

In New Jersey's Bordentown Reformatory and Yardville Correction Center an alternative does exist. The Cell Block Theatre brings professional actors, directors, poets and playwrights to the prisons to work with the inmates in order to get them to express themselves by using stage and writing techniques. Mime, theatre and poetry are used to give a sort of rehabilitation that is much more than just job training. Through these workshops the convict is forced to feel and use his feelings to better understand himself. The recidivism rate for people involved in this program is only 10 per cent. Men on parole can continue to work with the Cell Block Theatre in their New York studio. They present full length plays and poetry readings.

Six members of the Cell Block Theatre will be presenting a poetry reading at the University of Massachusetts on Friday and Saturday, May 3 and 4. The readings will be followed by rap sessions to discuss the idea of prison reform with those who know it best. The performances will cost $0.99, with all proceeds going to the Theatre in order to keep them in business. The performance on Friday evening will be held in Thompson 106 and on Saturday in the Campus Center Auditorium. Both will begin at 8:00 p.m. and continue as long as the rap session holds interest. There will also be a seminar on Saturday at 1:00 p.m. in 101 Campus Center. This is a chance for the members of the University of Massachusetts and Amherst communities to see how other institutions effect their occupants. And maybe this is a good chance to see part of the real world that is too often ignored.

Israel too retaliates

To The Editor:

In rebuttal to Jim Holdsworth:

You ask ''What compassion is the world to feel for a nation that always retaliates in blood?'' First of all you agree that international politics are not fueled by compassion, so what good would world compassion do Israel? Secondly, Israel has held off retaliating many times, simply because they're a small nation and can't afford a loss of man power. Lastly, in the fact that you have said that Israel retaliates — you lose your argument. Why should Israel have to retaliate? Why not stop the initial agression? — then retaliation will not be necessary.

Amnesty did not hinder past wars

To The Editor:

We find it necessary to write this letter in response to your opinion-editorial of April 18 on Amnesty — No!

Amnesty was granted in past wars, i.e. Civil War, W.W. I, W%.W. II, and in none of these cases, did amnesty hinder the operations of future wars, i.e. the military operations of W.W. I were not hindered by the ''precedence'' of amnesty following the Civil war.

The issue of unconstitutional amnesty fundamentally involves perspective. The men and women who by their conscience did not become part of the war machine, do not feel they did something wrong, something they have to pay for by virtue of alternative service or federal prison terms. Their perspective is that the Government was wrong. Yes! The acceptance of unconditional amnesty would be an acknowledgement of this governments immoral and illegal action in Southeast Asia and the acknowledgement that the position held by those who chose to refuse to fight ''were so perceptive, in fact, that they seriously questioned the Vietnam war far earlier than most Americans''. [and our involvement in other Southeast Asian countries]. These people are not asking forgiveness, they are asking people to understand the issues involved in Amnesty.

We can only hope — on evidence of things not fully seen — that the American nation has not exhausted its potentialities of acceptance for the conscientious decisions of its pacifist minority and that it may yet respond to the imperatives of a particapatory democracy by its acknowledgement for the liberties of those who can not join in its military defense.

And of cowardice...Who defines cowardice?? It is apparent in these not so United States, that cowardice is a word used profitably by the ruling capitalist class to create class antagonism and to prosecute the poor who refuse to protect ''private and corporate property and investment'', and chose not to take a life or to give their life for a lie.

And your analogy of the sailor. If the sailor refuses to mount a projectile, he is replaced by another more willing. In the case of Vietnam, where are these projectiles directed? What of the children, women and men these projectiles indiscriminately reach? One's analysis must extend beyond one's shipmates!

Immediate repatriation of deserters, draft evaders and all political prisoners....

Students only hurt themselves

To The Editor:

The office of the Student Attorney General has been contacted by the Campus Center-Student Union Board of Governors with regard to the problem of shoplifting in the University Store. As a result of these meetings a concerted attempt is being made to curb the problem. Ironically enough, shoplifting represents a rip-off of student funds, NOT the University monies. The Store supported by student fees, suffers losses through shoplifting which translate into higher student fees. The problem is being considered through a variety of avenues, through the management of the Store, the administration of the Campus Center, and the office of the Student Attorney General.

The Store maintains a security staff to apprehend shoplifters. When caught, a shoplifter is complained against in University Judiciaries. If found guilty, the defendant is fined. Recently, some fines imposed have been in the $25 to $30 range, with some reaching as high as $60. It's quite a price to pay for a book, pen, or toothbrush.

In addition, some violators not being brought to Student Courts, have been brought to District Court in Northampton, involving payment of counsel, court costs, and a record and period of probation.

Viewed from any perspective, shoplifting is a problem; to the Store and administration of the Campus Center it's a problem of management. To the shoplifter, it's a fine and a record, and to the general University Community, it represents another reason for the rising costs of getting an education. In any terms, Shoplifting is a Hassle, and since the issue is currently under consideration, those caught shoplifting can expect the harshest of punishments.

Abolition of Student Senate proposed

To The Editor:

When I first came to this campus four years ago friends told me that any time I was feeling low and wanted my spirits lifted, to go to a Student Senate meeting and be entertained.

While I have never taken this option, it has been my misfortune to have had to deal with the Senate on three occasions in the past three years and during none of these was I at all amused; the political incompetance displayed was, in fact, more reminiscent of vaudeville pie-throwing than any pretense to leadership by those who were elected under the presumption that they would lead.

My concern at each of these occasions was with RSO funding, and I left each of the sessions convinced that the Budget members were selected only on the basis of their personal arrogance and inability to comprehend financial transactions. During those mements when some semblance of order was maintained, I sometimes found it necessary to explain to individual Senators which part of the agenda was being discussed, which bill was being voted on, and have even had to approach the podium to request that the business at hand be attended to. The Senators, perhaps, didn't realize that outside their playpen this is a real world with real problems and real concerns.

My latest and I am determined my last knowledge of the Senate is that of the carnival, if you prefer to dignify what went on there with that word, performed Monday night. You've read about it in the Collegian; it was the election during which the out-going President rode in on a bike, turning a farce upside down again, during which confetti and streamers were tossed around while others pranced and danced about and still others squabbled over votes. Play if you must, Senators, but do it on your own time and money, not on mine, and preferably do it in private.

Did you know that these people control the over half-million dollars which you pour yearly into student activities fees? Were I to be here for another four years it would be my choice to withold such money from my semester bill and risk expulsion from the University rather than fund the antics of the boys and girls we have sent to ''represent'' us. That not being my option any longer I propose instead the abolition of the Student Senate. It would be preferable to the present system and less expensive if the Senators were sent with the other children to the nursery school the University maintains in Bowditch Lodge.

Weissman bites Christie

To The Editor:

In response to your front page article in Monday's paper which dealt with the health problem posed by the presence of aminal carcasses lying in open pits in the vicinity of North Village, I would like to add my voice to those who are concerned over this matter. Indeed, I have also seen this "cemetary," and I share the feeling of outrage expressed by Mr. Christie [the N.V. resident whose dog drags "presents" home from the pits].

However, it also occurs to me that the fact that Mr. Christie's dog is free to adventure to the pits is, in and of itself, indicative of a problem in North Village which, in my opinion, exceeds the problem of the pits. As any resident of N.V. knows, there are scores, perhaps even over a hundred dogs which roam North Village quite freely, and who equally "freely" deposit presents of their own sort all over the place. In addition to this health and aesthetic problem, I have been barked at and even kept from my own doorfront by some dogs whom I have no desire to confront, kept awake at night by dogs who are let out [unleashed and unsupervised] to do their thing, and observed large dogs jump on little kids [may be "play" for the dog, but can be dangerous and traumatic for kids]. To keep the record straight, I am not a neurotic dog-hater. I simply feel that some restraints relating to pet ownership make good social and medical sense, and if Mr. Christie would bother to check, dogs are illegal in North Village, and unleashed and unsupervised dogs are illegal throughout Amherst. Wouldn't it be nice if Mr. Christie and everyone else began to accept some of the responsibility for sensible and considerate management of their pets while they are complaining of irresponsibility elsewhere?

Daniels, tip of iceberg

To The Editor:

Although the Russ Daniels case at last seems to be receiving the attention which it so justly deserves, I genuinely hope that the general public recognizes that the tragedy of this situation is not confined to this one individual or one state school.

Rather, Russell Daniels symbolizes the countless individuals of this Commonwealth who have been released from state institutions without having been adequately treated, who have been thrust into society without adequate preparation, who have been turned away because of overcrowding, or perhaps worse yet, have been accepted into these crypts of neglect — doomed to spend their time in an environment nurturing its own self-perpetuation. And Belchertown State School is only one state institution of many which are unable to afford their patients even a minimal level of decent mental health care.

A few years ago I spent time as a volunteer at Belchertown. I left after only a few visits because the stench of human excrement and dried up urine made me physically nauseous.

Perhaps the sensual aroma is no longer as profound, but the stench of thousands of human beings subjected to lifetimes of psychological squalor and deprivation still permeates the foundation of mental health care in this state.

Russell Daniels personifies only the tip of the iceberg, Belchertown State School symbolizes only the starting gate of Mass. mental health care reform, and only the perseverance of the citizens of this Commonwealth can assure that sometime soon [perhaps after election day], the mentally ill citizens of this state will at long last be afforded services capable of guiding them to their individual potential.

For you who smoke over a pack a day

BOSTON [AP] — Middle-aged men who smoke more than a pack of cigarettes per day are six times more likely to have strokes than similar nonsmokers, regardless of other risk factors, researchers say. An 18-year study that followed 5,184 men and women found that heavy cigarette smoking was a significant contributor to the risk in men of a most common kind of stroke.

Results of the study, part of the long-range Framingham Heart Study of the Boston University Medical Center, were presented Thursday in San Francisco at the annual meeting of the American Academy of Neurology.

The renowned heart study for more than 25 years has closely followed the health of thousands of Framingham residents and is credited with isolating many of the risk factors of heart disease and stroke, such as smoking and fatty diets.

The study attempted to profile the stroke-prone person and found that during the 8 years, 196 participants died of stroke. Atherothrombotic Brain Infarction ABI, in which part of the brain dies because arteries supplying blood to the brain are blocked, was the most common type of stroke found in the study, accounting for 57 per cent of the total.

The researchers said overall ABI incidence was equal for men and women, but predominated in females older than 65 and in males 45 to 54. High blood pressure was the major ABI contributor for both sexes, they said, but heavy cigareet smoking also was significant in males.

"Among men, the impact of cigarette smoking is strongest and significant in...ages 45 to 54," the report said, "This effect wames with increasing age in men and is not significant in women in any age group."

Police get scuba team

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

The territory that the UMass police cover will soon extend to include underwater areas with the implementation of a scuba team, according to Alan Lawson, Assistant Director of the UMass Department of Public Safety.

The team will be on stand-by and will be available for any problems in the region involving underwater work.

Lawson announced that training would start next week for five officers who will get 30 hours training in Curry Hicks Pool and 20 hours in open water under varying conditions.

"We'll be training the men in deep and shallow water," said Lawson, "as well as in rivers and lakes. The men will be getting night experience and some through-the-ice work as soon as the weather permits."

Lawson said that although the program would for the entire region, it would be composed entirely of UMass police officers. The University will be paying for the training and the men will pick up the tab for the equipment.

The team, which should be available for assistance sometime this summer, will be made up of Officers Daniel Hagan, David Grader, Richard Grader, Robert Hawkins, and Jon Schmitter.

Global Survival next year

An opportunity to develop a program in Global Survival Studies under the auspices of the Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration program will be offered at the University next year.

Global Survival Studies includes such aries as population; resources; war, peace and world order; environmental deterioration; and cross-cultural communication and conflict. BDIC provides the opportunity for students to design their cwn major in consultation with a BDIC advisor and the supervisory committee.

The option would enable students who wanted to focus on any one of the Global Survival areas to build a program of academic study, experience and research.

For instance, someone interested in the use of film as a medium of cross-cultural communication could combine course work in various departments with practical experience and Independent study on the topic. Or a student might want to concentrate on the political consequences of population control. A proposed part of the program is a periodic seminar of all students choosing this option.

Students will be selected after they submit a course of study proposal to a screening committee. Interested students should contact Steve Guild, 237 Hills North, phone 545-3100.

Ricci stirs trouble for Sargent

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

If the Sargent administration has an enemy's list, chances are that a University of Massachusetts professor is included.

Dr. Benjamin Ricci of the exercise science department, probably looms as Gov. Sargent's biggest barrier to votes in the Five-College area - and possibly Western Massachusetts in November's gubernatorial election.

The reason is by no means Dr. Ricci's affiliation with the university.

His adversary relationship has developed with the governor's staff because of growing pressure and criticism applied by a group of angry citizens - the Belchertown State School Friends Assn.

As president of the citizens advocary group for the mentally retarded at the institution, Dr. Ricci has led a vigorous court battle for the past two years against the state for negligent and inhumane treatment of the residents.

After five judges hearing the case and continued pressure by the Friends, the state was forced to pay out over $3 million in improvements for all the state schools.

Recently, Dr. Ricci and a group of more than 25 UMass students launched another attack on the governor's re-election bid when they supported the reopening of the Russell Daniels case.

Daniels, a former Belchertown State School resident, is serving a life sentence in Norfolk for a murder conviction which even the governor now agrees was "unfairly" given.

Last Saturday, after nearly an hour's discussion with the students, Gov. Sargent acknowledged his administration's failure in providing Daniels with adequate human services. The case reflected the administration's short comings in the entire arena of human services, the governor conceded.

Several months ago Dr. Ricci said he intended to make the treatment of the mentally retarded and other disabled people in Massachusetts a campaign issue. He extended invitations to all the major candidates for governor to address the Friends.

Michael Dukakis was the first to accept a meeting with the Friends last Sunday. The Democratic candidate called Sargent's record in human services "outrageous" and said the proper way to do things is "no secret."

Ricci, recognized by many accross the state as a reform advocate in the treatment of the retarded, has been honored this year by the state legislature for citizen service since taking over the Friends in 1970.

"I agreed to become president with the understanding that we would engage in control militancy and use the legal process to attain human decency which we had been long lacking," he said.

"This bureaucracy just doesn't act until they are continually pressured. Until concerned citizens actively involve themselves in the political process, change just does not come."

The Friends president, who was also influential in forcing the resignation of former State Mental Commissioner Milton Greenblatt and requesting investigations into safety practices responsible for four deaths in a two-week period last year, made Belchertown State School an issue in the House race for the Second Hampshire County seat two years ago.

Of the four representative candidates who toured the institution with Ricci, 26-year-old James G. Collins of Amherst said he would make it a key issue on his platform.

Today Rep. Collins is a member of the Special Legislative Committee Investigating Belchertown and Monson State Schools. He has no opponent yet for his re-election bid this fall.

Ricci denies allegations that he is waging a vendetta against the governor.

"There's nothing personal; it's just a matter of his being irresponsible," he said.

"Gov. Sargent's probably a fine man. I don't know him personally. However, as an administrator, I don't have that high regard for the man."

Ricci believes the Sargent administration regards him as an enemy. He claims that FBI men have frequently been in the audience when he has delivered speeches in the eastern part of the state.

"I've had my share of harassment - and I wouldn't care whether I had 1,000 FBI men investigating me. I'm going to have my piece because I can document everything I say," he said.

"...And prior to the governor's meeting with the UMass group, some of his aides inquired as to whether a demonstration was being planned. That was harassment, pure and simple."

Many of the Friends and several state legislators consider Ricci was given an injustified snub last weekend by not being invited to participate on the Governor's Special Conference on the Developmentally Disabled.

Gunar Dybwad, a coordinator for the conference, told The Collegian that Ricci had been invited, "but had not responded to telephone calls."

"We wanted him to participate, but he would be too busy to have workshops...anyway, if you were Ricci, would you want to participate?"

"I most certainly would have," Ricci said at the conference Saturday. "I never turn down an invitation to speak."

"But I'd be about as invited to participate at that conference as a skunk at a lawn party."

Portugese gov't overthrown

The drain on the country's manpower and economy has caused major dicontent, and Spinola recently published a book recommending a political solution with rebel elements in the valuable African territories — perhaps a commonwealth system.

Caetano supported a multiracial society in the territories with gradually increasing self-government but retention of tight ties to Portugal.

Spinola and Gen. Francisco da Costa e Gomes were ousted as Portugal's two chief military officers soon after publication of Spinola's book. Subsequently, on March 16, some 200 army officers angered at the government African policy tried to enter Lisbon with an armored column but were turned back by loyal troops.

In Thursday's rebellion, the rebel broadcasts said President Americo Thomaz and Cabinet members were surrounded at a police strongpoint in Lisbon, but O Seculo said Thomaz was holding out in an army barracks at Monsanto near the capital.

Grants given

Six undergraduate women have been awarded the Carnegie Internship to apprentice in a profession traditionally considered to be male-dominated.

Each intern will be closely supervised to assure that she learns the practical and professional skills in her field. She in turn is required to submit written reports attesting to the quality of her experience. Each of the following women were granted $750.00 by the Carnegie Corporation: Mary Sullivan (Children's Services - Juvenile Judicial System) Edith April (Agriculture - Food Production) Geraldine Casey (Law), Darlene Dolan (Law & Psyciatry), Mary Gilbert (Animal Science), Celia Hooper (Plant Genetics).

We are very impressed and excited by the quality and diversity of the applicants for this summer. We hope that our program continues to encourage undergratuate women to seriously consider careers in professions in which women are not well-represented.

Schlitz-a-rama

The members of Phi Sigma Kappa Fraternity, in cooperation with the Greek Council and Muscular Dystrophy will present the 1974 Schlitz-a-rama at noon this Saturday.

Featuring a variety of contests, free prizes, food and live entertainment, "Schlitz-a-rama" will take place in the parking lot and surrounding area behind the fraternity, located at 510 North Pleasant St. Headlining the musical portion of the day's events will be the band Fate, recognized throughout the region as one of the top bands in New England.

Fate will be performing from six to ten at night.

Throughout the day, Doc Sullivan will reel tapes and from one to five in the afternoon the band Dark Horse will be on stage. During part of the day, the Muscular Dystrophy Dance Marathon will switch to Phi Sigma Kappa and continue to the sounds of the bands.

The motto of Schlitz-a-rama, as in the past is "Something for Everyone" the contests, raffles, dancing and beer will flow all day, culminating in the crowning of the Schlitz Royalty Contest winner in the evening. Voting for the Royalty Contest will take place in the Campus Center and at Phi Sigma Kappa the day of the Schlitz-a-rama with one penny equaling one vote, and all proceeds donated toward Muscular Dystrophy.

The day will be highlighted by another appearance of the famous Schlitz Mall Liquor Bull, a live bull berthed behind the fraternity. Students may win one of the hundreds of prizes for donations and help a worthy cause by enjoying Schlitz.

Mass. Vietnam veterans—

No welcome, no understanding

EDITOR'S NOTE: Massachusetts Vietnam veterans say they want understanding — someone to care. Veterans organizations say Vietnam servicemen are treated at least as well as servicemen of other wars. The plight of the Vietnam veteran in Massachusetts is explored in the following dispatch.

By DAVID M. ROSEN

BOSTON [UPI] — When most of the estimated 68,000 Massachusetts Vietnam veterans returned home, they received a "Dear veteran" letter from the governor, a free one-year membership in the veterans organization of their choice and — if they were lucky — a check for $300.

There were no parades or red-carpet welcomes. And for the majority of these men who came home tired, disillusioned or addicted to drugs, that was okay. They really didn't want people to stand up and cheer, but they did want someone to care.

"It's not really a welcome you want," said Gene Chapelle, 22, who returned to Boston from Vietnam in 1970. "You want an understanding. I don't want to be welcomed back for something I did, because I didn't do anything. I want an understanding that maybe I was ignorant at the time and shouldn't have gone. But I did go and I want people to understand why.

"I went under the pretense that I was protecting America," he said. "I went over there for America. Why I actually got on that plane and went over there is because maybe sometime a long time ago something was programmed into me saying 'this is America. I must protect my country. This is what the Army is for.'"

Kicks The Habit

Chapelle left the Army addicted to drugs. Without help from the Veterans Administration VA, he has kicked his drug habit and is attending the University of Massachusetts at Boston. Along with a number of other ex-Vietnam veterans he also helps operate a teen center at the Fidelis Way Housing Project in Boston's Brighton section. The center was set up with assistance from Action for Community Development.

"I've come out of it pretty good," Chapelle said, "but I know a lot of guys who didn't. They need special care and they're not getting it. I mean very special, individual care, even as far as the government giving them money, because they're not going to work. They're not going to do anything until they find out what the hell happened to them."

Chapelle's situation is typical of many Vietnam veterans in Massachusetts. In short-term financial ways, Chapelle and other Massachusetts Vietnam vets are better off than those in many states. But in more subtle psychological ways Vietnam veterans in Massachusetts face a tougher challenge than combat veterans returning to other states.

Some Times More

In dollars and cents, Massachusetts offers today's veteran as much as it offered any veteran and in most cases more than he receives in most other states. Vietnam-era veterans here receive a cash bonus and free tuition at state schools. Under the bonus program, veterans who served in Vietnam receive $300. Other veterans receive $200.

Since the program started in 1966, the state has paid out $46 million to some 210,000 Vietnam-era veterans, about 68,000 of them with combat service. The state also

MAN ON THE STREET

Is racism a problem on campus?

Landers Mendenhall "Problem and solution lies outside the campus"

Dick Davies — "Nothing too serious"

Frank Tolentino — "It's there, but people try to hide it."

In an endeavor to find how a cross section of the campus community feels regarding the issue of racism here at UMass, two Collegian staff members set out, armed only with a Nikon F lens camera and a Sony TC-90, cassette recorder to encounter the "Man on the Street".

The questions presented to several random passersby ran thus: "Do you feel that racism here at UMass is an important problem, and to what extent? Do you feel that appeasment to the demands brought about by minority organizations is an answer to the racism problem [if you believe it exists] here on campus, or do they present more friction among involved and outside members?"

Also discussed was the Collegian's creation of a Black News Affairs Editor and WMUA's formation of a similar position.

The first to render an opinion was Alan Surprenant.

"I think that demands have to be looked at and usually that's the only way to get them to be looked at, by doing something out of the normal. Sure a racism problem exists but it's a lot less than it is at other places. I think it's people's beliefs that make up the university, not the administration," he said responding to the questions.

"It seems to me that certain demands have to be met by the newspaper," said Elain Donovan after a deep breath of thought. "All institutions, especially state institutions have that bias already in them."

After a brief hesitation Keith Powers said that "It would depend on the demands made by the minority group. I don't think there are any serious racial problems on this campus. I wouldn't say its institutionalized racism, but it is blown out of proportion at times."

"A racism problem?" queried Alfred Morrissey. "No, not where I live; Southwest that is. Just a few kids here and there, but not the whole campus. I don't think there are any solutions; just time can help."

"Racism," said Elizabeth Hussey "is more of a personal prejudice. People have to overcome it on a personal basis. Appeasement to demands isn't a solution. Time and experience is all that can help. Everyone must overcome it themself."

Yes, I definitely think there is a problem," began Tony Armelin. "First of all, concerning the Collegian; I think that the Collegian hasn't been racist in the sense that it's been deliberately denying the University of Black news; I think it's been unintentional. It's absurd to say that there's been a conspiracy to deny the University community of Black news.

"It depends upon what demands a group has made," he continued, "If they're going to appease every demand...well, I think the demands that are being made now are warranted and I think that we can solve the problems for now. I think that we've warrantly given in. I'm glad they did!" he concluded with a chuckle.

Kris Thompson began the next interview out of admiration for the Nikon camera carried by photographer Dennis Conlon. In reply to the seriousness of racism she began: "It's being worked on. I don't think appeasement is a lasting solution: I think it can help. You alienate more people than you'd get in support through outrageous demands or a take-over.

"I don't think it's an institutional thing because I think more progress has been made in the years that I've been here. I think it's just a human thing that has to be delt with. It's a human phenomena that we all have whether we're black or white. It's like sexism; you have to approach it in different ways until you find a solution."

"It's a very unfortunate think that exists in the minds and emotions of people," said a campus employee who wished to remain nameless. "It's something that can only be overcome through an individual's coming to grips with himself. It's a wide spread social problem and each person must overcome it himself before we eventually overcome the problem all together."

"Do you think racism is a very serious problem on this campus?" "No" replied Wayne Albertini at point blank range. "It's just superficial." Short, but to his point.

Next, two students were interviewed while crossing the green near the Campus Pond. Landers Mendenhall and Stephen Goldman were very responsive.

"Do you think that what the Collegian has done by creating a Black position and the same with WMUA is a solution?" asked the reporters.

After taking a long drag on his cigarette, Mendenhall replied: "The problem of racism and its solution does not lie on the UMass campus; it lies on the outside. The people come in with these attitudes and they definitely will not change them here. The problem lies in the high school.

"The bussing is a problem. It's made it worst; I've always rapped about bussing. Consider that the white students are bussed seven miles one way and the black students are bussed five miles another way, and they meet in center of town for school. After high school the buses leave, they don't wait and there's no socializing.

"Socializing with a white person on this campus is a strange thing if you've never done it before so what can you expect other than racist situations?"

"In terms of the Collegian," said Goldman, "like it's pretty much the only thing they can do. The only alternative is two separate newspapers; there's nothing else they can do. Maybe it will get more Blacks interested in the paper and problems will fade out. It seems to me that if blacks didn't read or respect the Collegian before, having that black editor or whatever the position is, would promote interest in what that man is writing, the rest of the news, and the situation in general."

Alfred Morrissey — "Just time can help"

Kris Thompson — "A human phenomena; approach it in different ways"

Wayne Albertini — "It's just superficial"

Just outside the People's Market, Diane Luciani said: "I don't really think there is a solution. It's built up from generation to generation and even if there are a few people who don't think there is a problem, or are not prejudice, there's always like four more who do think it's a problem and are racist.

"I believe that what's more important than solution finding is that people aren't aware of what's going on. I don't think racism is as big a problem as ignorance of it is on this campus.

"I know that there are racism counselors in the dorms and people who aren't faced with the problem say 'why do we need this?' but if a black entered the dorm life it might change things.

"Some kids are effected directly by it. Like, when applying to the University, they ask you about minority and all. I know of kids that didn't make it who weren't of a minority and resent it."

At the stairs of the Collegian office, Student Senator Edward Faria had quite a bit to say concerning the issues.

"I would say that racism on this campus as it stands now is not really a great problem, but it's growing. In the future it will be. It's in one of those stages and by next semester it will be a good possibility.

"Racism is a think of the individual. The media can help, a lot of things can help, things that we are not allowed to get into because of racism has to be taken away, et cetera. The Collegian has appeased the situation.

"I see racial problems starting all over again. With new students entering each semester they bring their prejudices with them.

"Some students say well, 'if I'm racist, so what, I don't care, all I want to do is get a degree and get rich.' People have tried so much and they've failed. They won't put their energy to something they're failing in. I feel that it's just a social, mental thing anyway and where if you don't have to take the sufferings that go on with racism, you're not going to take on the problem of stopping racism forever.

"It's like a fad. I know that when people walk by I see that in a couple of years from now everybody's going to cut their hair like they used to. Everyone's also going to change their ideas. It's just like a temperature change. What's an issue now won't be an issue in a few years. A few years after that, it will be.

"The values of life teach you that you're basically a racist as I see it", he continued. "There's been a fight to stop racism in the last five years, now what good is five years if your father is still a racist, or your son or younger brother is a racist? Until this generation of five years difference grows up it will be just like it was.

"Like when my younger brother comes here in a few years he'll be just as racist as anyone, or anyone's younger brother; I'm just using myself as an example. But, well, it's going to be just like it was, just like it was."

On the subject of younger brothers, the next two interviewed were not members of the college community. Carlos Cordova and Sean McGahan are two local Amherst boys who frequent the pinball and game areas here at the Campus Center.

"I'm small, little, a kid," said Carlos, "so I'm getting along better than if I was older. Now I can go around with a lot of my friends and we don't know anything about prejudice so there isn't any. When you get older you know more about it."

"It's the same thing," said Sean. "When you're older you can be more discriminated against. Older people don't discriminate against younger kids; only older people. Kids can't go to as many places and these things don't happen like they do to older people.

Dick Davies, staff assistant at the Campus Center was a man of few words. He could see some racist feelings among the students that worked with him on campus, but nothing to serious. "I know of several students accepted on lower standards while others didn't make it because they weren't of a minority."

Jim Leas, a Teaching ASsistant in the Physics department feels that the Collegian's creation of a Black Affairs editorship was "a step in the right direction."

Speaking on other colleges, he said "Over the past few years, I know of several black editors, editors-in-chief, etc., and they've taken up revolutionary news that's much broader in scope than the Collegian. They've covered world issues that are of interest to blacks on their campus, not that that's all they read or printed.

"The Collegian does write some world news but it's not of particular interest to most people; especially to minority members.

"I don't think that the Black community is interested only in this news. The Collegian does not print news of particular interest, only general interest, and generally the majority interest."

"I don't interact with that much of the undergraduate body," said Dr. R.A. Guyer of the Physics and Astronomy department, "so I couldn't comment on the campus in whole.

"If racism is a problem, I'm not sure that the way they're proceeding is the way to go about things. First I hear that the blacks demanded a Black Editor and now they've given them one; I don't know the complete issue, if that's the full story or what though. Frankly, it's not one of the things that I spend time thinking about.

"From my experience with race problems, which are not in the North, I spent some time teaching in the South, I don't think that time is the answer to anything. Action, action is a possibility. Various actions depending upon the situations; not action that is aggrevating or outrageous to someone else, but it often has to be. You have to push people a little bit, sometimes a lot."

The Committee Against Racism, which originated at UConn but has spread to other campuses, has been one of the chief sources of criticism against Ginsburg and Laughlin. Associate English Prof. Rufus Blanshard, committee chairman, said an unacceptable part of their teaching is the view that some large population groups are superior to others in such things as art or music because of genetic differences.

Blanshard said he was not necessarily accusing the two of conscious racism but of teaching information with "racist implications."

For example, the "superior abilities" view, he said, suggests that genetic differences can cause differences in intelligence among races.

Ginsburg and Laughlin claim their critics have "maliciously" grouped them with controversial physicist William B. Shockley of Stanford University. He was prevented by demonstrators from speaking at Yale University on his view that race and intelligence are related.

The issue erupted at UConn Ginsburg said, "because the activists needed to have a Shockley on campus."

Prof. Dennison Nash, a former acting head of the Anthropology Department, said he was surprised Laughlin and Ginsburg had become targets of racist accusations.

"If there are any racist implications in their work they are innocuous," he said. Other faculty on campus have held obviously racist views, he added.

Master pianist Jaki Byard performs tonight on Hill

The Orchard Hill Residential College and Black Cultural Center of New Africa House are sponsoring a presentation by virtuoso pianist Jaki Byard tonight at 8 p.m.

Byard teaches piano, composition, and arrangement at the New England Conservatory faculty, Mr. Byard was an active touring musician playing with people like Rahsaan Roland Kirk, Charles Mingus, Maynard Ferguson, Booker Ervin, Elvin Jones, Richard Davis, Jimmy Owens and Duke Ellington. Presently he devotes most of his time to his teaching and his family. Jaki Byard is not given the public recognition due him, but is given the highest respect by critics and musicians.

Jaki Byard is a musician of diverse styles. He is a master of the piano, capable of bringing any given style to any piece he performs. He cites Earl Hines, Thomas "Fats" Waller, Art Tatum, Eubie Blake, and Bud Powell as his major influences. Byard also plays alto and tenor saxophone, trumpet, bass, trombone and drums. Byard is truly an exceptional musician.

Byard will be accompanied by two equally talented musicians, Reggie Workman on bass and John Betsch on drums. Reggie Workman, like Jaki Byard, has played with innumerable others, including John Coltrane, Pharoah Sanders, Yusef Lateef, and James Moody. He is presently president of the Collective Black Artists of New York and a faculty member of the University. This concert will reunite him with Jaki Byard, a person he recorded with during the sixties for Prestige Records.

Drummer John Betsch is a student here at UMass. He is involved with the UMass Jazz Workshop, with professors Max Roach and Archie Shepp, and with his own group, the John Betsch Society.

The performance is scheduled to begin at 8:00 p.m. and will take place in the Emily Dickinson Lounge on Orchard Hill. The Black Cultural Center and the Orchard Hill Residential College invite the public to the first program of a series of events that they will be co-sponsoring and to the first time that Messrs. Byard, Workman and Betsch will be playing together. It promises to be an exciting evening. The event is free of charge.

Mass. Vietnam veterans

'They don't care about you'

runs two medical facilities for veterans, but few Vietnam veterans make use of them. One facility is scheduled to close this summer. Ongoing financial assistance to veterans is offered through 320 local veterans service offices.

"I spent two months at Mass. Bay Community College and all the kids were like 18," said John Coyne, a 24-year-old Vietnam veteran. "They were telling me how much they pity the poor Vietnamese and Chinese working in the rice paddies every day. Nobody knew I was a veteran. I was agape. I couldn't believe the stuff they were saying."

Harsh Words

While most Vietnam veterans in the state seem relatively satisfied with the state's financial response to their problems, at least in comparison to other states, they have harsh words for the federal government and the American people.

"The American people want to ignore the Vietnam veteran and pretend he doesn't exist," said a totally disabled VIETNAM VETERAN WHO ASKED NOT BE NAMED. "They forget us the day they sent us over there. The people who would like to forget us the most are the politicians and the fat bureaucrats at the VA.

"I went to the VA two weeks ago to get my teeth fixed and the guy looked at my long hair and dark glasses and walked away.

They don't care about you. They're all in their mid 40s and 50s and as soon as they look at your long hair and dilated pupils they know you'd like to whack them in the mouth. The guys who work up there at the VA who served in 'Nam' get crap jobs taking urine samples or running the elevators."

Common Complaint

Perhaps the most common complaint of Vietnam-era veterans is the inadequacy of the federal allotment to those attending allotment to those attending college. For a single person the payment today totals $220 a month, barely enough to pay tuition at most private schools. World War II vets had their tuition, room and board paid in full by the government at the college of their choice and also were given a monthly living allowance. Vietnam veterans resent this.

When I got back from Vietnam in 1968 I went back to college and the VA gave me enough money either to sustain my life or pay my tuition," said James Vachon, 29, manager of a Wurlitzer music store in Boston. "I got $160 a month and used it to stay alive. I borrowed money from the government for tuition and I'm having trouble paying it back.

"The economy stinks and inflation is eating away at everything," he added. "I'm making more money than ever, but I can't seem to make ends meet for my family. Frankly, I don't think I should have to pay back the money. I put my life on the line for them and they owe me that money, just like the guys who fought in World War II."

Parking registration material ready for next year's system

Registration materials for next year's parking system are now ready. Persons presently registered in the system will receive a registration packet by campus mail. Those who did not furnish a valid campus address when applying for parking last year will be able to pick up the forms at the Parking Office in Hampshire House. If you have not received a packet by May 1, assume that it was not mailed.

Persons presently in the system have the options of renewing their present assignments (if the assignment was received by March 15), or applying for a change to another lot. The deadline for exercising the renewal option is May 15. A continuation of the present assignment is guaranteed for all renewals received by that date. Persons presently in the system who apply for a change (in the assignment they held on March 15) will be given priority over new entrants into the system until May 15; after that date, all applicants will be considered as new.

Change requests and new requests will be processed on the basis of sequence number. Persons over 60 years of age, or forming a new carpool, will have their sequence numbers improved by a factor of total applications received.

Present registrants requesting a change in assignment, or new applicants, will be asked to make three separate lot choices. If all choices are unavailable, because the lots are filled, the person will receive an automatic assignment to the peripheral lots. Anyone receiving a third or worse choice may request a subsequent change to any lot still showing open space, or may sign up for a waiting list.

Fees are basically the same as the current fees, except that the registration fee is reduced to $3.00 (from $5.;;) for renewals, and the total charge for carpools will be reduced by $5.;; for each vehicle in the pool after the first vehicle. Only the registration fee ($3.00 for renewals, $5.00 for change or new applications) is to be submitted with the application. The convenience fee will be computed by the Parking Office. All registrants will be notified when decals are available, and the amount of convenience fee payable.

Persons with unpaid parking fees for the current year, and persons who have defaulted on court summons' covering parking tickets, will not be issued registration materials until the amount owing has been paid.

Questions should be directed to the Parking Office, 103 Hampshire, Tel. 545-0065.

Girl, 10, gets chance at bat

BOSTON [AP] — The Peabody Little League will have to let 10-year-old Janine Cinseruli tryout for the team Saturday under a ruling issued Wednesday in Suffolk Superior Court.

The temporary restraining order issued by Judge Samuel Adams prohibits the team from barring the Peabody girl from the tryouts, the last set of which will be held this weekend.

The case goes back into court May 3 for a hearing on a preliminary injunction.

An attorney from the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts and Attorney Ruth Budd are challenging the Little League's boys only ruling as discriminatory.

The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination, which has already found probable cause of discrimination in Janine's case, will begin a full hearing May 6.

UConn profs are target of racist accusations

Nash agreed that a left-wing element had been partly responsible for the administration's decision two months ago to split the Anthropology Department in two.

Laughlin, a distinguished student of Aleutian Island natives, supported the split despite wide opposition among other faculty members, Nash said.

He characterized Laughlin's claim of six Communist theorists in the department's new sociocultural division as "an overstatement." Only half that many are political activists, he said.

He said although his own views "tend to reflect Marxist beliefs," he and others on the faculty have aimed to keep their political beliefs separate from their teaching.

Nash holds the same belief as UConn President Glenn W. Ferguson that studies by men like Laughlin and Ginsburg should be allowed to continue and be judged later by other authorities in their field.

The Summer School Dilemma

City vs. Country
Pro: the cultural and entertainment opportunities of a city; the excitement and fast-pace of city life.	Pro: the quiet and peaceful beauty of a campus nestled in the hills.
Con: the troublesome realities of city noise, confusion, and crowds.	Con: excessive seclusion and boredom that may be hazardous to your head.

AT TUFTS . . . YOU CAN HAVE THE BEST OF BOTH

—we're ten minutes away from Boston and Cambridge.
—we offer a 150 acre campus that's only an hour away from both Cape Cod and the White Mountains.

PLUS

—over 250 courses, workshops, and special programs from which to choose in our regular June 24-Aug. 2 session.
—a special two session pre-med program. (June 10-July 15, July 16-Aug. 19)
—a complete range of recreational activities.

Campus pond will have new look

By BRENT A. WILKER
MDC Staff

Improvements will be made to the campus pond to make it aesthetically pleasing but, except for skating in the winter, the pond will never be functional to the students.

The pond is going to have a new island, or at least a rebuilt one. According to Ken Billings, Head of Grounds, the existing island is going to be totally rebuilt with new trees planted on it.

To beautify the pond, the bridge will be removed when the fine arts center is opened and that end of the pond will be properly landscaped by the construction company which built the center.

The familiar ducks and swans will be arriving late this year, to allow proper time for mating. Billings said they should be in the pond within a month.

No improvements are planned for the water itself. William Doubleday, head of Water Pollution Control at UMass, said the quality of the water was "mediocre."

The pond is fed by a river that begins by the junior high school in Amherst and flows all over town picking up street drainage, "All of metropolitan Amherst dumps into it," Doubleday said.

In the past, the pond has been the victim of several oil spills. Six years ago a fraternity accidently dumped about 200 gallons of number two fuel oil into the river which flows into the pond, killing all the fish and forcing the birds to be removed. But Doubleday said much of the oil problem has been controlled now. Goldfish are back into the pond again, but they, and other trash fish, are the only ones which can survive.

Regardless of the water quality, the pond could never be used for swimming. It is 10 to 12 feet deep at the dam, but the average depth is two feet of water and three feet of mud and silt.

Letters to the Sports Editor

Gymn isn't for bar flies

To The Editor:

Gymnastics may not catch the interest of every vagabond and bar-fly in New England, but UMass gymnastics does catch the interest of an aware sports public across this country. And the UMass student who goes to a gymnastics meet realizes that he is seeing some of the finest athletic competitors in America. The mens' and womens' gymnastics teams have represented the University against national competition, not against hokey, fourth-rate Yankee Conference schools (like some sports we know).

Steve Saraceno seems to believe that the purpose of athletics within the university is to satisfy the appetites of the average corner bar "Joe Fan" rather than represent the interest of students. If football is a "bonafide spectator sport" here, why hasn't Alumni Stadium ever been filled? — it only seats 20,000. Attendance records have shown that football is less than representative of what the average UMass student wants from his Athletic Department.

Wake up Steve and "Joe", the university is passing you by!

Jim Bilec

Supports sportswriter

Mr. saraceno, judging by the replies in Thursday's Collegian, does not seem to have much support on this campus. After reading both his statement and the irate letters in response I find that I can give my support to Mr. Saraceno.

I support the right of Mr. Saraceno to have his own viewpoint. These days it is getting harder to find anyone willing to take a stand. This is especially true in an unpopular issue.

I support Mr. Saraceno's use of the school paper as a means of getting his message to the community at large. Using the press for editorial comment shows commitment and a willingness to accept criticism.

Finally, I support Mr. Saraceno's right to be ignorant about that to which he is so firmly committed. This is the American way, mom and apple pie. Mr. Saraceno speaks for the average fan just like Agnew spoke for the silent majority. Mr. Saraceno needs all the support he can get.

Sincerely,
Toby Kasavana

Is Steve Saraceno kidding?

To The Editor:

This letter is in response to Steve Saraceno's article published in the Collegian on April 24. Although I was not sure whether the article was intended in jest or not, I write this because I interpreted the article literally.

Mr. Saraceno apparently advocates the abolition of the men's varsity gymnastics team for the reasons that gymnastics is not a profit-making spectator sport with a large student following. He also states that "compared to the meat-and-potato sports ... gymnastics is dull." These statements may or may not be true, but in either case they make invalid reasons for the arrest of men's gymnastics. Now, I ask you Mr. Saraceno, why are sports offered on a University level? If it is to make money or to propagate student interest, why were such sports as track, swimming, gymnastics, or golf instituted in the first place? Surely not to make money. How many students can name a golfer or the captain of the swim team?

I feel that it is fairly self-evident that sports are necessary for the total development of a person. The University must realize its goals — one of which is to produce educated, well-rounded people. This is where sports plays its role. The University has a physical education requirement for graduation. All students who compete at this University are interested in the development of their body as well as their mind. If this were not so, explain how people could go to daily practice in such aforementioned sports, or such club sports as crew, water polo, or rugby with no chance of University-wide recognition, no chance of professional competition, no chance of anything other than the joy of competing? Every gymnast fits this role. Dedication, determination, and motivation are necessary attributes of every athlete — not just football, basketball, baseball, or hockey players. Is it right to de-emphasize the development of these traits in UMass students? I think not.

Another question to be raised is why does the gymnastics budget have to be cut. "Due to inflation and a lack of funds in the athletic department." The funds were there this year. Where will they go? Will the football team have new uniforms next year?

If you meant the article as sarcasm, I wish you had made your intention more clear — there would be no need for this letter. If not, maybe you should re-evaluate your concept of sports and the role it plays before you continue to publish such work.

Stephen Latter

Katie King way off base

By LINDA MACKLER

In contrast to a recently printed "Collegian" article, I do not believe that "the woman's primary downfall" in sports is a result of "their own acceptance of the female role." Nor does the entire "fate of women's sports lie in their determination and self-initiative." These are secondary factors to the unbelievable discrimination a woman has had to face in the sport's world.

This discrimination begins in child's paly and is perpetrated through elementary and secondary physical education levels to the professional woman athlete.

It is often argued that a young boy is athletically superior to the young girl. But scientific evidence shows that growth curves of both sexes are parallel until 12 or 14. There is no difference in the efficiency of use of small muscles, strength training and performance, or movement time.

The problem is that the young girl is given little opportunity or encouragement to develop her skills. While the kindergarten-aged and up boy is offered little league instruction in baseball, basketball, hockey, football, and soccer, a comparably aged girl is offered practically nothing.

Physical education programs are enormously unbalanced. School boards inevitably budget more money to men than women. Girls in elementary school learn to dance and be cheerleaders, while boys learn to play football and wrestle. Most high school programs for women have, if anything, very little equipment, the last choice of facilities, smaller gyms, and inadequate locker rooms.

Sportswriters have been totally inept in women's coverage. There are many examples of female competence in sports. To cite a few:

Mary Decker, a 15-year-old from Garden Grove, California has set the half-mile indoor track record at 2:02.4.

Francie Larrieu of Sunnyvale, California ran the world indoor women's record at 4:14.3 — two seconds faster than the previous record.

Professional jockey, Robyn Smith, has nearly forty victories.

Billie Jean King has not only opened up many doors for women tennis players, but has become the first female coach in the World Team Tennis league. She will coach the Philadelphia team. Yet a Sports Illustrated or Sport magazine can go for months without a story on a woman athlete (Thank goodness for the Sportswoman). A woman rarely makes the front page of the sports section. City newspapers which cover high school sports games scarcely cover the girls.

So while women athletes certainly must be vocal and aggressive, it is the duty of schools to improve conditions and the journalists obligation to make people aware of them. Women athletes have far more to contend with than simply their own "defeatist" attitude.

Kickers kicked in massive NFL rule changes

NEW YORK [UPI] — NFL owners, frankly admitting they're tired of criticism that kickers are taking over the game, made the field goal virtually obsolete Thursday in a package of new rules that included sudden-death overtime in the regular season.

The changes, the league's most sweeping rules revisions in 40 years, will (1) move the goal posts back to the end line, as in college football; (2) return field goals missed from beyond the 20-yard line to the line of scrimmage; (3) all but eliminate the fair catch on punt returns; and (4) do away with the bump-and-run pass defense.

Sudden-death overtime, used four times in the past playoff games, is the biggest headline grabber among the changes put pales in significance to the other new rules because the simple fact is there aren't that many tie games.

Only 12 of the 362 NFL regular-season games the past two seasons ended in ties.

NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle, announcing the new rules at the end of a three-day meeting of clubowners, said criticism of the old rules played a "strong" part in adopting the new ones.

"Many of these have been talked about at the last two annual meetings, and the owners were obviously aware of the criticism they received because no changes were made last year," Rozelle said.

"My personal opinion is that it's a reaction to the media," said Coach Norm Van Brocklin of the Atlanta Falcons, obviously far from pleased with the changes that, among other things, will call for more decision-making by coaches.

"They were made by the owners and not by the coaches, "Van Brocklin said.

Pressure on the league for some sort of a de-emphasis of the field goal mounted last season when a record 543 were kicked in 861 attempts — an average of five field goal tries a game.

But a league spokesman said the owners were reluctant to do anything about the field goal rules withtout the package of other changes, which includes one that prohibits anyone on the kicking team — on field goal attempts and punts — from crossing the line of scrimmage until the ball actually is kicked.

That should do away with fair catches and encourage punt returns, which dropped to an average of less than eight yards and produced only 10 touchdowns the last two seasons.

In addition, although the goal posts will be on the end line, they will remain 18 feet 6 inches in width — nearly five feet narrower than the college goal posts, which are 23-4.

Batswomen challenge softball dynasty in w-series benefit

By DAVE VARG

The odds that faced David when he went up against Goliath were meager compared to those that face the Womens' Softball team this Saturday. The tortoise and hare race was an evenly matched contest compared to this benefit game. But like the courageous soul who, for ten bucks, accepts the challenge of surviving thirty seconds in the ring with the champion, the UMass softball team will compete against the best softball team in the nation.

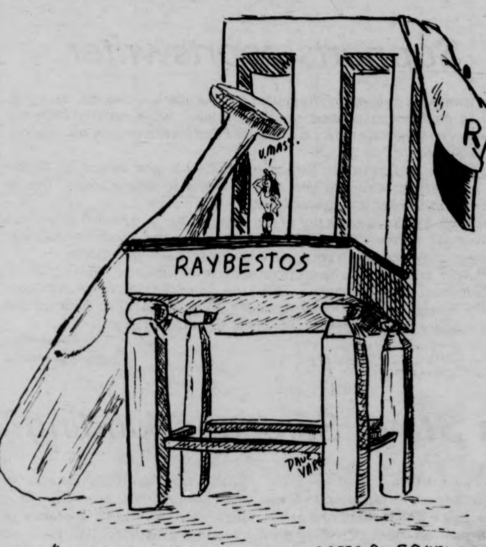
If there was a professional softball league on the level of the major leagues of baseball or the NFL of football the Raybestos Brakettes would be its champion. And for this proven team to play the University team is quite a rare experience. It's like MacPherson's team going head to head with the Miami Dolphins, Leaman's basketball team tapping off against the Milwaukee Bucks, or Cannif's hockey squad facing Team Canada.

The Brakettes have been U.S. Amateur Softball Champs 12 times since 1959. They have competed in Two of the three international championships held. They have toured Australia and Japan. And they have in their lineup no less than 5 national all-stars, one of which is the Babe Ruth of Softball, Pitcher Joanie Joyce.

Joyce has a pitching record that Sandy Koufax would admire Nolan Ryan would gasp at and Howard Cossel wouldn't believe. She, is almost perenially the nations' Most Valuable Player. She holds just about every pitching record in the book. And Joan Joyce has been featured by many of the nations leading magazines.

But the goal for the UMass challengers is not a victory on the scoreboard, although it would be nice. But the real goal is to earn money to finance a post season bid to compete in the College world series, in Omaha, Nebraska.

The game will be played at McKenzie Stadium in Holyoke tomorrow April 27. The Stadium is located next to Holyoke High School off Rt. 202.



"I CAN SEE NEBRASKA MUCH BETTER FROM UP HERE."

Erving named top pro

By a margin of nearly 300 votes former UMass great Julius Erving of the New York Nets defeated Walt Frazier of the cross-town Knicks to win the All-Pro Player of the Year Award in a nation-wide poll by the editors of Basketball Weekly.

Erving and Frazier were joined on the All-Pro team by Kareem Abdul Jabbar (Milwaukee), Dan Issel and Artis Gilmore (Kentucky), Bob McAdoo (Buffalo), Rick Barry (Golden State), Bob Lanier (Detroit) and John Havlicek and Dave Cowens of the Boston Celtics.

Give Bruins credit

No matter how the Bruins eventually fare in the Stanley Cup playoffs, one things's for sure, they deserve a hell of a lot of credit.

Now you may say "they ran away in the East Division, they're the best team in hockey, they're choking against Chicago" and you may be right. But don't forget that way back when the season began there were very few people, including myself, who picked Boston to finish on top of the NHL's East division. In fact, many people didn't expect them to be in the top three.

Everyone was upset with the Montreal maneuver in the draft which sent a hopeful Bruin draftee, John Davidson, to St. Louis and forced the Bostonians to deal popular Fred Stanfield to Minnesota for a 23-year old untried goalie named Gilbert.

"Too many question marks" people screamed. Others complained that the Bruins youngsters will never accomplish anything. O'Reilly can't skate, Savard's not strong enough, who's Al Sims, what about Espo's knee?

Well, O'Reilly can't skate but he's danger in the corners, Savard's not very strong but he's a super skater, Al Sims is one heckuva rookie defenseman and every one of Phil Esposito's goals speak for his knee.

That goalie named Gilbert turned out to be the best goalie in the division and is the guy most responsible for the Prince of Wales trophy (up yours, Jaques Plante).

Ken Hodge helped in the scoring with 50 goals. With Orr and Cashman the Bruins had the top four scorers in hockey.

Harry Sinden made moves throughout the season acquiring Darryl Edestrand and trading Chris Odliefson and Fred (WHA) O'Donnell for Bobby Schmautz.

The coming and going and returning and going again of Derek Sanderson couldn't have done much for team morale. And finally, Bep Guidelin did a fine coaching job bringing this fourth place pick into first place.

There were certainly hills during the season like back-to-back wins against Montreal and New York early in the season which meant a great deal at the time, a Ross Brooks 8-0 shutout of the Canadiens (and his record tying winning streak) and Al Sims' devastating check on Yvan Cournoyer was surely one of them. There were valleys too, not the least of which was blowing a 3-1 third period lead and losing in overtime to Chicago on Tuesday night.

However, whether they win or lose, they did what most people said they would not do, and we should all give them a lot of credit.

Biggest track meet in the United States

Tradition keys trackmen in Penn Relays

By SCOTT HAYES

A group of fourteen distance runners and hurdlers will become a part of tradition, today and tomorrow, as they represent UMass at the esteemed Penn Relays.

The tradition of the Philadelphia classic dates back to 1894, when the first Penn Relays were held. Since then, Jesse Owens, Marty Liquori and Dave Wottle have participated in the oldest relay in the United States. Owens competed before his Olympian days and Liquori ran the fastest mile ever run at Franklin Field in his 1971 "Dream Mile" against Jim Ryun. Liquori edged Ryun by two-tenths of a second and won the race with a time of 3:54.6. Wottle ran in Philadelphia last year, after winning the hearts of track fans at the 1972 Olympics.

The meet, also known as the Penn Carnival, is probably the biggest meet in the country and one of the greatest in the world. The carnival is the largest in the United States as to number of races, attendance and diversity. Over 35,000 fans are expected to be on hand for the competition, ranging from the high school level to old timers.

Tony Waldrop will be attempting to run the fourteenth sub-four-minute mile in the history of the meet. Waldrop dipped below the four-minute mark seven consecutive times during the indoor season and will be running his first outdoor mile of the season.

Minutemen who have met the rigid qualifying standards and with a good day, stand a chance of placing well include three-milers John McGrail, Tom Maguire and Randy Thomas. Thomas, who will be running the championship three-mile, is a good bet to place in the top five and break McGrail's school record.

Paul Segersten will be out to shatter his University record in the six-mile, set earlier in the season. Bill Gillin, the defending New England steeplechase champion, will be joined by Tom Wilson, who will be returning to his home state, in the steeple.

The distance medley team of John Maloney, Steve Crimmins, Bill Gillin and Devin Croft will be shooting for recognition as the fifth or sixth best foursome in the nation. Curt Stegerwald, Jim Hennessey, Pete Famulari and Alan Suprenault will be hoping to get past the trials and into tomorrow's finals of the 480 shuttle hurdle relay. Four top milers, Croft, Maloney, Thomas and Chris Farmer will run the four-mile relay.

The sprints should be dominated by Florida A&M and San Diego State. In the middle distances, Texas at El Paso (UTEP), the NCAA indoor champions, Seton Hall, Michigan, North Carolina Central and Tennessee shape up as powerhouses. Manhattan, Villanova, Penn, Indiana, Duke and Bowling Green, the home of the golf cap, are expected to rule the distance events.

Since there is no team championship, suppriority is decided by the number of gold medals a school wins. Last year, Penn State and Villanova were the leaders in medals.

PHILLY FILLERS — The five day affair began Tuesday with the marathon and continued through Wednesday with the decathlon. Olympian Jeff Bennett, Fred Samara and Ron Evons were among the top competitors to take part in the ten-stage event.

The field for the Ben Franklin Mile is expected to include Wilson Waigwa, UTEP's Kenyan runner; British 1,500-meter Olympian Ray Smedley; Bruce Fischer, Denis Fikes, Karl Thornton, Dave Wright and Dick Buerkle.

Red-White game tomorrow

By JOAN PLANTE

Tomorrow at 2:00 p.m. in Alumni Stadium, the Annual Spring Game will be the highlight of spring football practice and a preview of what's to come this fall. This game is known as the Red-White game, in which the players led by co-captains, Ed McAleney and Dennis Kiernan, draft their own teams. The draft took place Wednesday afternoon and is done in the pro style. Head Coach Dick MacPherson splits his coaching staff between the two teams and separate Red-White practices were held Thursday. Also taking place onThursday, were the timing tests, which are scouted by many professional scouts from the NFL and the WFL.

Spring practice was very hampered by wet weather and in addition, injuries have plagued many members. Two of last year's starters, tight end Gary Mika and defensive lineman Tom Bradshaw are coming back slowly from operations, while running back Bobby Wolfe may be needing a knee operation.

The position of quarterback is still very much up in the air. Fred Kelliher has been throwing well this spring, but is also experiencing knee problems which may require surgery. Mark Tripucka, on the other hand, has seen little action due to his slow recovery from a leg muscle operation. Both will see action Saturday. The other three freshman quarterbacks, Peter Colton, Frank DiFilippo and Brian McNally have shown ability during spring drills, but have been inconsistent from day to day. Coach MacPherson wants to expose them during their sophomore seasons, in games with non-pressure situations. However in case Fred and Mark are physically unable to play, the Coach will have to bring back Lee Hariman, quarterback for his Frosh squad, and put him in competition along with the three aspiring Freshmen.

The defense has shaped up as a veteran unit, having strength and depth, including a tremendous front four. Meanwhile, on the offense, there is potential greatness among the running backs, but they have not yet become consistent.

So, come down to the Stadium, tomorrow if you want to see the beginnings of the Minutemen of 1974. There's no charge for admission, and you'll be able to see a preview of the fall, and show your support.

Batswomen bounce So. Conn 9-8

By DAVE VARG

UMass failed to follow all the rules of convention yesterday in their game against Southern Conn. They didn't become frightened with the oppositions' potent reputation. They didn't get themselves mentally high for the game. And they didn't play the best game in the world. But they won 9-8.

From the very outset of yesterdays' game, it looked as if the group was confident. They began the game by making two errors while handing Southern Conn. two base runners. But they didn't get discouraged and they fought back. A fly ball and slick double play later, UMass was out of trouble.

Then as soon as the home team got the chance, they hit the ball. And as soon as they reached base, they ran. Barb Doucet hit a double and stole third. Jenny Edminster walked and Sue Brophy drove in Doucet with a single. With runners on first and third Karen Fruzzetti hit the ball out of the infield (compliments of an error by the shortstop) and drove in two more runs. Micki Locke had a lead and she managed to protect it.

But UMass didn't want the Spring Day game to be a dull one. They pulled some defensive blunders that allowed Southern Conn. to stay close. One Texas Leaguer rolled through and around Edminster, Caruso and Fruzetti like a scared gerbil. And when one finally did gather in the ball she threw it away and the runner circled the bases.

But UMass maintained their composure. They bounced back. Even though the game was close the day belonged to the home team. They were effective when they had to be.

Crew team takes on Coast Guard

Coming off last week's big victory over Boston University, the varsity crew faces the Coast Guard Academy tomorrow at Lake Wickaboag in nearby West Brookfield.

"I'm very pleased with last Saturday's results. The varsity rowed well under extreme pressure from a fine B.U. crew. It's important for us to win our dual races but our prime objective is to get the fastest combination possible for the Dad Vail," says coach Mike Vespoli.

With this in mind, Vespoli tested his rowers during the past week and is trying different combinations, hoping to find the right one.

The Coast Guard is winless this season but they have raced the toughest schedule of any Dad Vail team in the East. But don't underrate them. They were a close third in last year's Dad Vail.

The regatta will start at 11:00 with the second freshmen racing in two 4-man boats against one 4-man Coast Guard boat. The first frosh will race in an 8-man shell against the Coast Guard's first frosh at 11:15. The junior varsity race follows at 11:30 and the varsity race at 11:45 finishes the day's events.

To get to Lake Wickaboag, take Route 9 east through Belchertown and Ware. West Brookfield is the next town over. Just follow the signs.

Water polo swamps Amherst

By RON BOUCHER

Wednesday night at Boyden pool the UMass water polo club dunked Amherst College by a score of 20-4. The wonderous water wizards put in a well balanced game with eight out of ten players having assists or scoring goals. Duncan Lomis led the UMass attack with eight goals and three assists while playing only half the game.

The water polo club will have it's hands full with the Brown Invitational Tournament coming up tonite. This tournament will feature all of the finalists in the Eastern Division I Championships. In the "luck" of the draw UMass picked the AAU National Champion water polo team, New York Athletic Club. The game promises to be a tough fight for UMass and if they can win this game they will go on the semifinals tomorrow.

'Crossers crucify H-Cross

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Ha! Ha! Ha! Yesterday's lacrosse game between UMass and Holy Cross was a joke, a laugher, as Garber's Gorillas THRASHED the Crusaders of Holy Cross, 22-5.

Actually, for all intents and purposes, the game was over in the first quarter. The score at the end of the first period read: UMass—7, H.C.—0. By the end of the second quarter the Gorillas had completely blown the game out of the reach of the Crusaders, as they expanded their lead to 18-0.

Billy Collins netted the first score of the game. The UMass attackmen worked the ball around the H.C. cage until Harry McVey found Collins open about ten feet in front of the net. The goal which was the eventual winner was scored by freshman Jeff Spooner, who had six goals, all in the first half. Spooner, an attackman, picked up a rebound in front of the Holy Cross net and bounced it in. Spooner's goal was the sixth in a line of nineteen consecutive UMass scores. Harry McVey had four goals to go along with his five assists. Harry and his teammates had a field day as they peppered the Crusaders' netminder.

In the second half UMass took out its starting team, including goalie, John Rutledge. Holy Cross came out to play in the second quarter, instead of boarding the bus back to Worcester. The Crusaders made the score "respectable", scoring all of their five goals in the last two quarters.

The whole UMass team got to play in this "turkey shoot". The game was so far out of the Crusaders' reach that UMass coach, Dick Garber, had defensemen Billy Blaustein, Rich Lally, Kurt Olson, Russ Incorvia, and Tim Murphy playing at the forward positions. Just about everyone had a hand in the scoring. Billy Blaustein, Terry Keefe, and Jim Curran scored their first goals of the year. Blaustein, a defenseman, gathered in a pass from Keefe and fired in a solid shot from about thirty-five feet out. Keefe, a freshman midfielder from Eastmeadow, New York, bounced a shot by the H.C. goalie, unassisted.

UMass coach, Dick Garber said, "Holy Cross was using their zone defense and we just killed it. They looked like they weren't reacting to the ball. I don't like to see a team get beat so badly because I know how they feel. However, they missed a few shots in the beginning of the game which would have given them some momentum if they had scored."

The UMass offense was its best defense. They had the ball at least 80 per cent of the game. UMass limited H.C. to only thirteen shots while they themselves had at least fifty. UMass scorers in the "shootout" were: McVey (4), Spooner (6), Andy Scheffer (3), Peter Connolly (2), and Bill Collins, Bill Arnold, Terry Keefe, Billy Blaustein, Bruce Sibson, Jim Curran, and Tom Geronimos, one goal apiece.

The Gorillas travel to Williams College on Saturday, Gametime, 2 p.m. Williams' coach, Renzie Lamb, witnessed yesterday's slaughter. He was impressed and commented, "Very rarely do you get the opportunity to play a number nine (ranking) team, and when you do, you've got to make the most of it."

SCORE! Umass player watches Holy Cross goalie stretch in vain often to stop UMass goal. It was a common scene yesterday as the Gorillas stomped on the Crusaders, 22-5.

Rain dampens UMass-Maine bat series

By MIKE BROPHY

Maine has had nine rainouts to date and this makes ten, not to mention a possible eleven.

UMass was scheduled to play a two game series with the Polar Bears over the weekend starting today. The field, however, had two inches of snow over it and the trip was postponed one day in hopes of playing a doubleheader on Saturday.

Maine brings in with them a 7-2 overall record with nine make-ups to play when they get the chance. "It is very rough to play any spring sports up here because of the weather," said Coach Jack Butterfield.

"We haven't even had a chance to practice outside yet because of the weather. We have played three games on our own field though," he said.

And so as another chapter in the saga of Spring sports and weather in New England comes to a close...Dick Bergquist and the remainder of the Minutemen squad await the word as to when they will make-up the game(s). In all probability they will play a doubleheader tomorrow or single games on Saturday and Sunday.

Either way, Bergquist has made his plans known to throw Carig Allegrezza (2-1) in game one and Jeff Reardon (1-1) in game two. Jim Black will handle the other end of the battery assignment again as John Healy's hand is still hurting after having a foul ball hit him in the meat of the glove hand, his left. Healy is scheduled to make the trip, however, as he may see limited action as either a pinch hitter, catcher, or possible outfielder.

Both Allegrezza and Reardon have shown to be improving as the season progresses as they are regaining their control expertise of last season.

But if UMass is to take the series from Maine, they will need greater hitting power as Maine plans to throw its best in righty Bert Roberge who has a 3-0 mark on the year.

In the second contest, it will be either Rich Prior, (1-1 and a lefty) or Jim Lynch (a righty and 1-0 on the year).

Golfers defend YacCon Crown

By RICH SEVIERI

The undefeated UMass golfers prepped for today's defense of their Yankee Conference Championship at Stowe Acres C.C., by sweeping tri-matches on Tuesday and Wednesday and raising their overall record to 7-0.

On Tuesday at Longmeadow C.C. on the outskirts of Springfield, the Minutemen slipped by UConn 14¼ - 6¼, and routed AIC, 19 - 2. The Nassau style of scoring was used in this match, as each of the 7 team members receives a point for beating his opponent in the front 9, back 9, and overall. Half-points are given for ties.

The Minutemen found the consistent team scoring that they've been striving for, as all 7 team members broke 80.

Rick Olson and Howard Terban were medalists with a pair of 73's. Joe Artman continued his excellent shot making with a 75. John Lasek had a 76. Ken Stawacz and Dave Crochmal chipped in with a pair of 77's. And with a 78, Dave Kern was last on the team totem pole.

Larry McGarry and Ron Raganiemi were low scorers for UConn with a 76 and 77 respectively.

The one point to the victor match play system of scoring was used on Wednesday at Wachusett C.C. in Worcester, The Minutemen held on to post victories over Amherst, 4-3 ad Worcester Polytech, 4¾ - 2¼.

Rick Olson led the way again with a 76. Joe Artman fought back from some early trouble to finish with a 77. Both scores were respectable, as the Wachusetts Country Club was playing quite long after two days of intermittent rain.

The golfers left Thursday afternoon for Stowe Acres C.C. in Stowe, Mass. (near Framingham) to defend their Yankee Conference title.

Stowe Acres is a demanding course of 6700 yards that penalizes inaccurate tee shots severely. Due to the courses many doglegs, the golfers may be forced to go with a 3 wood or even a low iron on some holes. Coach Fan Gaudette looks for a winning score of between 470 - 475 in the medal play event. Six of the team members scores will be used with the high score thrown out.

Goach Gaudette had hoped to go with the same starting lineup that has kept his team undefeated. Injuries to Dave Kern and John Lasek may force him to change his plans however.

"Kern has a pulled rib muscle and Lasek has a strained back," said Gaudette. "They're not serious injuries but they could alter the players' swings, so I'm going to bring an alternate just in case.

The starting lineup for the first five spots is set with Artman in the number one slot, followed by Terban, Olson, Stawacz and Crochmal.

"If we play up to our capabilities, we have an excellent chance to win," said Gaudette. "I think we have some of the best players in New England. With some luck we should repeat as champions."

Bruins sock Hawks, 5-2

CHICAGO [UPI] — Boston's Phil Esposito beat his brother Tony for a power play goal on a breakaway Thursday night, providing the winning score in a 5-2 triumph over the Chicago Black Hawks, tying their best-of-seven Stanley Cup Playoff series at two victories apiece.

Esposito, who had 68 regular season goals and led the National Hockey League in scoring, got into the clear at the Hawks' blue line, took a pass from Ken Hodge and came in alone on his brother, Hawk goalie Tony Esposito. Tony came out of the net to cut the angle on Phil's shot, but the Boston center moved to his right and drove the puck into the far corner of the cage.

The goal came 62 seconds after the Hawks' Phil Russell was penalized for holding. It was the fourth goal in eight playoff games this year for Esposito.

Locals march in DC

Nixon's future "in the people's hands"

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Nixon's future is in the peoples' hands, a Western Massachusetts coordinator told the Collegian following an impeachment march at the nation's capital Saturday.

Frank Dorman, a field staff member of Clergy and Laity Concerned in Amherst, echoed the sentiments of Dr. Benjamin Spock and Chicago 8 defendant David Dellinger, who also participated in the hour-long procession up Pennsylvania Avenue.

More than 150 persons from the Connecticut Valley were among the 10,000 urging the President's removal.

The Washington rally began in Amherst for at least 90 impeachment supporters who left town late Friday night on two buses arranged for by the United Christian Foundation.

Earlier, between 150 and 200 students gathered on the Town common Friday night to localize the national impeachment activities in Washington, Chicago and Los Angeles.

The group had gathered 5,000 signatures calling for Rep. Silvio O. Conte (R-Pittsfield) to endorse impeachment. Conte represents Amherst.

In Los Angeles, UPI reported that a crowd of about 1,000 persons marched one mile from one city park to another Saturday afternoon, then held an "Impeach Nixon" rally.

The march, coordinated by the American Civil Liberties Union, was peaceful, according to police, and included many supporters of Cesar Chavez's United Farm Workers.

For protesters in Washington, it was a beautiful day to demonstrate. See photo essay by staff photographers John Stewart and George Withers, page 16.

Dorman, who was in charge of two full bus loads of demonstrators from the Northampton-Amherst area, said he was not displeased with the delegation representing Massachusetts, estimated at 400.

"the turnout was damned good considering this thing was planned only five months ago," he said.

"I think Dellinger's comment about the impeachment movement being at the same stage the anti-war movement was at in 1965 is very relevant."

Dorman said he should have done more organizational work in the Springfield area and predicted that a demonstration in the fall may attract five to 10 times as many people.

"President Nixon won't leave office until the American people make it known they want him out," Dr. Spock told the Collegian while marching with a group of students.

"He won't resign until he sees his goose is cooked. Mr. Nixon just hasn't got an appetite for real defeat and disgrace. So he very well may yeild under pressure."

Spock said that while three quarters of the American people conceived their President as a crook, it is unfortunate that there is still no majority for impeachment.

"Apparently they'd rather be governed by a crook indefinitely. There is too much politeness; too much fuzziness in their heads," he said.

Spock, who took time out during the march to buy an ice cream cone for UMass student Bill Parent, said Nixon won't be impeached "unless Congress gets the courage."

Parent had expressed disappointment at the low turnout during the earlier stages of the demonstration. He remarked later that the activities restored his faith in the system.

I was really inspired today and I believe the demonstration reflects that people are concerned about the problems we face," he said.

Bromery asks that Gluckstern be VC

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has proposed that Provost Robert L. Gluckstern be named executive vice chancellor as the latest step in the chancellor's administrative reorganization plan. The newly-created position would be the number two spot in the Amherst campus administration.

Gluckstern, 49, would retain the titale of provost, which he has held since 1970, but would have increased responsibilities for internal management, long-range academic planning and fiscal policy. He would also act for the chancellor in his absence.

Douglas Forsyth, special assistant to the chancellor, told the Collegian, "Chancellor Bromery must spend a good deal of his time on the University's external relations: with the University president and with the state and federal governments.

"He has called for an executive vice chancellor because he felt a need for more internal coordination and continuity."

The complete reorganization plan will be presented to campus governance groups for their recommendations later this week. It will not require trustee approval according to Bromery.

There will be no new administrative personnel according to Forsyth but there will be a number of shifts in positions called for in the plan.

For example, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage would have new responsibility for dormitory programming and budgeting.

The job of vice chancellor for administrative services, a post held by Thomas Campion until his resignation in February, will be abolished.

Amherst building projects banned

BOSTON [UPI] — Amherst is among ten communities in Massachusetts under orders to halt or limit new construction projects due to the inadequacy of sewage treatment facilities.

The bans, two of which have been in effect for two years, were issued by the water pollution control division of the state Department of Natural Resources.

According to William Slagle, of the division's legal enforcement section, the orders don't specifically ban new construction but prevent any extensions of existing sewer lines.

Without extension, which must be approved by the state, the only construction projects that can proceed are those with septic or offer independent sewer systems.

Slagle said the only possible exception would be in a case where

Delays hold up Infirmary addition opening

Infirmary face-lift in process.

The new addition to the Infirmary, originally scheduled for completion in the latter part of January, will not be able to open until tomorrow at the earliest, according to Leo Hall, supervisor of the new construction.

Hall, saying that the January to April delay was "resonable," pointed to numerous problems during the course of the construction that have held up the completion of the Health Center. Among those was an 8-week strike by the pipe coverers union. That strike, which is now settled, also caused delays in other phases of the construction, since carpenters were unable to cover the unfinished plumbing.

Also, said Hall, "the plumber who was originally contracted went bankrupt and left the job. We had to hire a new plumber with the work 50 per cent complete. Half of the pipes were already buried, and since the original contractor left no blueprints, obvious problems were created."

Another delay was the discovery that some steel beams in the original structure, needed to attach old building to new, were not there. Because the buildings are to be contigous, the beams had to be installed. "Just because the original builder wanted to save himself some money," said Hall, "we have another delay."

Hall also pointed out that some water which was found on the site was unknown when the construction began. The water now has to be pumped out, and the "normal manufacturing delays" in the delivery of the pumps has caused an additional hold-up.

Hall said that although the building may open "in a month or so" full operation is not expected for about a year. "Being a medical facility, we have a large amount of equipment that we have to install. We have five or six projects going on." These include the setting of an eye care clinic, expansion of dental care, carpeting and painting of the new facility, and the installation of a surveillance and security system.

Hall said that although the construction was not going "as quickly as we would like, every honest effort has been made. If you look at other state buildings, this has been handled well. It's disappointing to see people trying to make such a cumbersome system work."

When the building is completed, UMass "should have one of the best health care clinics in the northeast, if not the country. It will serve as an example for the rest of the country."

Benefit held for Ethiopia

By MARK KELLEHER
MDC Staff

In a night marked with a sense of anguish and powerlessness, an estimated 300 people attended a fund raising benefit for the famine victims in Ethiopia Friday night at the Campus Center Auditorium.

Sponsored by the Ethiopian Students Union of Amherst, in association with the African Students' Union, the Event's proceeds will be used to buy food for the famished victims of the drought ravaged sub-Sahara and Ethiopian sections of Africa.

Over 100,000 people have already died from the drought with no relief in sight as the Sahara continues to extand itself southward an estimated 50 miles per year.

Many of the speakers at the dinner expressed dismay at the lack of response from the world community. One speaker asked very pointedly "what the United States' response would be if it was European peoples rather than Africans.

In addition to the speakers there was an Ethiopian dinner served and prepared by the students themselves.

Students nationally to hold Fast for Africans in drought

By B.J. ROCHE
MDC Staff

On Wednesday, May 1st, students from colleges and high schools across the country will be participating in a "Fast to Save the People."

Co-sponsored by the Oxfam-America and Project Relief, the Fast is aimed at helping the six to ten million people who face death from starvation as a result of the ongoing African drought, which has been called "the worst ecological disaster of the century." The Southwest Center for Racial Understanding will be co-ordinating participation on the UMass campus.

Participation in the fast will involve skipping one or all of the day's meals and donating the money thus saved to help the people of the drought stricken areas. Students will also solicit financial sponsors to underwrite their fasts.

The funds raised by the Fast will be used immediately for food, family planning and medical assistance. Funds will also be put toward long range projects, such as credit cooperatives, and well drilling.

The results of the drought for the small countries in Northern Africa have been disastrous. Scientists estimate that, as a result of the drought, the Sahara is expanding at the rate of 30 miles per year. If the process is not halted soon, significant amounts of agricultural land will be permanently removed from production at a time of increasing world-wide scarcity.

The co-sponsors of the day-long fast are Oxfam-America and Project Relief. Oxfam America has its headquarters in Newton, Mass., and is the American branch of the international Oxfam organization, begun in Oxford, England during WW II.

The organization has had 30 years of experience in the field of international relief and long term development and has an exceptional record for efficient anagement of funds and careful planning and supervision of projects.

Project Relief, located in Providence, R.I., is a non-profit, tax exempt charitable fund raising organization which was established in 1971 in response to the needs of Bengali refugees in India. The organization pays neither salaries nor rent and accepts only donated staff services so that the greatest possible percentage of each dollar is used for direct relief. Project Relief is now focusing its energies on the African Drought disaster.

The participation in Southwest will be in conjunction with the Centers and residence halls. Donations for the project will be taken at the Center For Racial Understanding, The Southwest Resource Center, and the dining commons. It is hoped that each student will give a dollar, regardless of whether or not the student has fasted on May 1.

Smith and Hampshire Colleges are also participating in the fast on Wednesday, and the day will be closed with a concert on the Amherst Green featuring Holly Near, a folk singer and activist in Human Rights. The concert will be at 6:00 and all are invited.

Financial aid

C.C. & D.C. to base employment on need

By JUDY FRIEDLAND
MDC Staff

This is part five of a six-part series dealing with Financial Aid.

In the past, only the academic and staff departments which hired students on the Work-Study program and the Library required that their employees be evaluated as needy by the Financial Aid Office. Beginning In September, however, the Campus Center and Dining Commons plan to adopt this policy.

According to Timothy Cox, Personnel Director at the Campus Center, employment at the complex will be based on need. The Personnel Office chose, however, to develop their own evaluation system. Cox explained that the Campus Center's system asks only for a student's income and estimated and unusual expenses, the other information which the Financial Aid Office requests, such as income tax returns, being "irrelevant". Based on this information and a scale provided by the Financial Aid Office, the Personnel Office will determine an applicant's general financial status.

"As job openings occur," said Cox, "We'll review the applications on file and, all things being equal, we'll hire on a basis of need."

The Campus Center is ineligible to hire people on Work-Study, according to Cox, as they receive special trust funds and produce their own revenue.

Cox said that the Campus Center's former policy was to check an applicant's financial status with the Financial Aid Office before hiring them.

"This only worked, however, if the student had applied for aid," said Cox. "The Office was often too busy to help us, and the information was too slow in arriving."

As of last spring, 12 per cent of the student employees at the Campus Center were recognized as needy. The figure rose in the fall to 18 per cent.

Although approximately each year 900 students apply for jobs in the Campus Center, the complex only employs 475 students.

Most students are employed to work in food service, although many are hired to bus tables, wash floors, do clerical work and bartend.

Cox said that the Campus Center makes an effort to hire students; in fact, he said that only when it's "impossible or impractical" to hire a student, will they hire a non-student.

Dick Flynn, Manager of the Dining Commons, said that if the Dining Commons participates in the Work-Study program, board rates could be kept down.

"Students will still pay more for board next year, however", said Flynn. "The Board of Trustees drew up the budget expecting the Dining Commons to be part of Work-Study."

In the past, the Dining Commons was funded exclusively by board money, although it was eligible for Work-Study money. Other areas with higher priority, however, received the money. According to Flynn, if the University receives an expected 200 per cent increase in Work-Study funds, "it is certain" that part of the money will go to the Dining Commons.

700 out of 900 student applicants are employed by the four Dining Commons on campus, according to Flynn. He said that all student employees must have a meal ticket, because "that's who pays the wages."

Employment priority is given to those students who have worked in the Dining Commons the previous semester.

There are a number of needy students, referred by the Financial Aid Office who work at the Dining Commons.

"In some cases we allow 'deferred payment'," said Flynn. "In effect, these students, are working for their meal ticket."

John Warlick, Assistant Director in the Financial Aid Office, would like to see most on-campus hiring done on a basis of need. He also would like to coordinate off-campus employment, in this manner; however, he considers realization of the latter to be "a dream".

"We're not ambitious enough to achieve that," said Warlick, "and the staff is presently too small."

All student employees must first clear with the Financial Aid Office. Warlick hopes to institute a master file system, whereby a student seeking employment need only file one application with the Office to be considered for a job. This would facilitate application procedures for employer and employee.

The Financial Aid Office would be responsible for referring qualified needy students to fill all job openings.

Cox and Flynn both said that they would be willing to cooperate with the Financial Aid Office should such a program become a reality.

Warlick, began as Assistant Director in September. He is trying to get more departments to do their hiring through the Financial Aid Office, and reports that studies will be conducted in the near future concerning the question of equity between Work-Study and 03 wages and possible biases between student and non-student employees.

Warlick foresees an "improbable chance" of problems arising due to Affirmative Action.

"We haven't encountered any difficulties in this area yet," said Warlick, "but I think the staff should remain aware of the policy and avoid doing anything which might jeopardize it."

Abzug raps on women & politics

By DONNA A. DIODATI
MDC Staff

"Women's contributions throughout history have been what they could do for others. Now more women are saying, "What about us? What can we do for ourselves — for women?' "

So began U. S. Representative Bella S. Abzug (D-NY) in her speech Saturday night at Mt. Holyoke College.

"We're not looking to grab all the power; we want a share of the power. There are no women in the United States Senate ... and a "stag senate" means a stagnation."

Rep. Abzug's appearance was the conclusion of the two-day long Women in Politics Symposium. Her talk was entitled "Winning with Women," the slogan of the National Women's Political Caucus during this election year.

The New York legislator emphasized that many women are running in 1974 elections at all levels of government.

"There are 3-to 4,000 women running on the city and state levels. Many, I believe, will be elected..."

She pointed out that only 7 per cent of present state legislators are women, while there is no woman governor or lieutenant governor. She thinks this will change.

"There is a desire on the part of voters to see people who are new and honest ... and they'd appreciate seeing women in office."

The Columbia Law School graduate considers organizational support important in the move to get money for women's political campaigns. As an example, she pointed to the organizing of trade union women who are forming caucuses in an effort to gain more power. With this power, they could be helpful in winning union support for women political candidates.

Abzug said that citizens should pressure unions and other groups that give financial support to candidates to consider backing women contenders. But, even without such support, she said, "If every woman and man who believes in clean government would donate one dollar, we may achieve a democratic government ... One year of Watergate may be enough, but 200 years of government without women is too much."

Turning to the issue of abortion,

[Wissow, courtesy Amherst Student]

New York rep. Bella Abzug, wearing her characteristic floppy hat, answers questions at the "Women in Politics" weekend at Mt. Holyoke College Saturday night.

Rep. Abzug said that all polls conducted indicate that the majority of people in this country — all classes, races, religions — support the U. S. Supreme Court decision of 1973 which legalized abortion. Calling the use of the abortion question in political races a "totally demagogic utilization of the real issue," she said that she respects other people's dogmas, but that no one's values should prohibit a woman's freedom of choice. She referred to the abortion hearings currently being held in the U. S. Senate as "quite inequitable," since men are ruling on a woman's issue.

Last week, Rep. Abzug added, the U. S. House of Representatives banned the use of National Science Foundation-appropriated funds for research on living fetuses (outside the women's body). At the time, she spoke out against the ban. At Mt. Holyoke, she said that "medical research can go much further for women and children" in finding cures for diseases.

Putting the women's movement into societal perspective, the New York Democrat said that "women will not be given equality while such things as racism, poverty, and militarism exist. We must develop in a struggle with others who have been left out of the political and economic issues of our society...

"...We need a society that will move toward social change. Women can make a difference. We can restore faith in government. We have the responsibility to take leadership.

"I'm often asked, 'Will women change power or will power change women?' Some, yes, but not many. The important question is 'Will it make any difference to our society?' The answer ... yes..."

On the issue of presidential impeachment, Abzug commented, "I believe that Nixon will be impeached and brought to trial ... When we go through the process of impeachment, we're saying that people want power...

"We can create a more democratic society. When that happens, it will be good for women and it will be good for men ... and I believe what will be good for women will be good for the country."

Answering questions after her talk, Rep. Abzug said that "women and men have the responsibility and the right to defend their country ... but I favor amnesty for those who did not see reason to fight in Vietnam."

Mitchell, Stans found innocent

NEW YORK [AP] — Former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and ex-Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans were acquitted yesterday of all charges in connection with a secret $200,000 cash contribution to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

Mitchell, 60 and Stans, 66, has been jointly charged with one count of criminal conspiracy and two of obstructing justice in connection with the contribution by financier Robert Vesco.

In addition, each man was charged with six counts of perjury, accused of lying to the grand jury that indicted them.

"I've been reborn," said a jubilant Stans, blinking back tears. "I was innocent all along, but it's good to have it confirmed."

At a news conference later, Mitchell said: "I don't think Mr. Stans ever lost faith and I didn't...I have great faith in American and that's why I love this country."

Stans agreed, then added: "We had great faith in a man, the President, to do everything we could to get him elected. Everything we did in that cause was proper and just."

The U.S. District Court jury of nine men and three women deliberated 26 hours over a four-day period in a trial that began Feb. 19.

It was the first time in the nation's history that two Cabinet colleagues had been tried together on criminal charges connected with official or political duties and it was the first time in half a century that any Cabinet member faced criminal judgment.

The shadow of Watergate hovered over the trial, although the Vesco matter was not directly linked to the break-in at Democratic national headquarters.

When they pronounced Mitchell innocent count-by-count, defense attorney John Sprizzo clapped an arm around the former attorney general's neck and pulled his head onto his shoulder. Mitchell smiled broadly.

Stans was next. When the jury concluded its findings, he sank back in his chair. Stans put his head in his hands momentarily. When he lifted it, his eyes were wet with tears.

Mitchell and Stans were accused of conspiring to obstruct a massive Securities and Exchange Commission fraud investigation of Vesco's multi-million dollar corporate empire in return for the $200,000 1972 campaign contribution.

If convicted, each could have received a maximum sentence of 45 years in prison and fines up to $80,000.

A crowd of about 100 persons greeted Mitchell and Stans with mixed cheers and jeers as they emerged from the courthouse.

"Hurray for American justice," cried one women.

"There's no more America," countered another crowd member, screaming: Scandal! Fascist!"

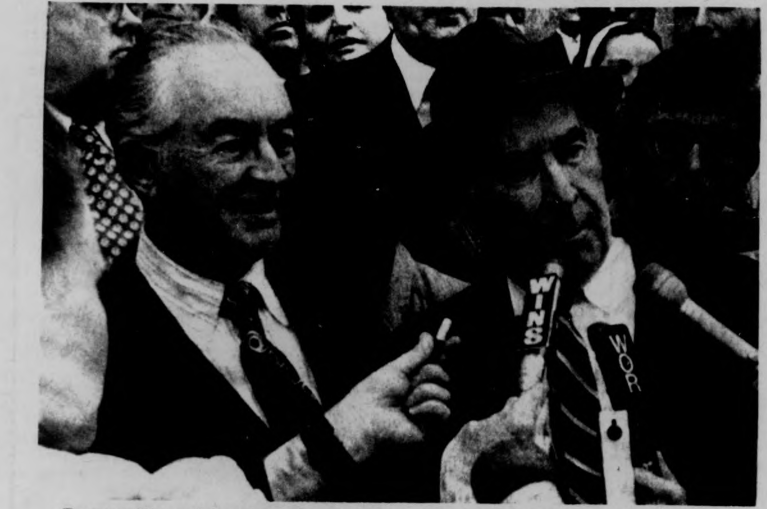
Mitchell still faces conspiracy, obstruction and perjury charges in Washington in connection with the Watergate coverup.

His indictment there was held up until the day following the sequestration of the Stans-Mitchell trial jury here, so members of the panel would not be influenced by the Watergate action.

Asst. U.S. Atty. John Wing who had conducted a vigrous prosecution was asked how he felt about the outcome.

"Rotten," said the 37-year-old prosecutor. "If we could have gotten Vesco back it would have been different. It was absolutely not a waste. When there's evidence that people committed crimes, those crimes should be investigated and prosecuted."

Vesco fled the country at the height of the SEC invesigation into his affairs and has successfully resisted all legal efforts by the U.S. government to force his return. He had been indicted with Mitchell and Stans.



Former Nixon Administration officials, John N. Mitchell (C, wearing hat) and Maurice H. Stans, hold press conference on steps of U.S. Federal Courthouse as they emerge here yesterday after both had been found innocent of all charges of conspiring to defraud the government by using their political power to influence justice. Some 150 spectators greeted them with cheers and boos.

Mitchell verdict pleases Nixon

CAMP DAVID, Md. [UPI] — President Nixon was bouyed yesterday by the acquittal of former cabinet members John N. Mitchell and Maurice H. Stans and his aides suggested that the verdict discredited one of Nixon's chief accusers, former White House counsel John Dean.

Gerald L. Warren, deputy press secretary, said that word of the verdict was passed to Nixon during a meeting at Camp David, Md., with his two top aides. The meeting apparently dealt with a subpoena from House impeachment investigators which Nixon must answer by 10 a.m. tomorrow.

"The President is very pleased for the two men and their families," Warren said. Other aides expressed delight at the verdict and said they thought the development might help Nixon in his own political struggle.

One high administration official issued a statement saying that the verdict discredited Dean, who was the key government witness in the Mitchell-Stans case. "The jury's verdict by implication makes him a liar, which makes one wonder how many other lies he's told," said the official, who refused to be identified by name.

"It's interesting to note that after Mitchell and Stans were found guilty and hung in the public eye for over a year that the jury has found them not guilty of anything," he added. "How many other good men are being publicly pilloried who are also not guilty of doing anything wrong?"

Judiciary panel may assume Nixon guilty if tapes not handed over

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Sources high up in the House impeachment inquiry said yesterday President Nixon apparently faces no danger of being cited for contempt of Congress if he refused to comply with the panel's subpoena for tapes, because many members favor a different legal counterpunch.

The sources said some of the best legal brains on the House Judiciary Committee are promoting the tactic of drawing "adverse inference" — a legal principle which simply means the committee may consider Nixon's refusal to supply requested evidence as proof he is guilty of the charges covered by that evidence.

In that case, the committee would add an article of impeachment charging Nixon with refusal to produce evidence to any recommendation it sends to the House.

"It sure as hell is something that is very persuasive to me," said committee member George Danielson, D-Calif., in a comment that summed up the attitude of those who find "adverse inference" an attractive alternative to a contempt citation.

In a television interview on NBC's Meet the Press, former Attorney General Elliot L. Richardson also said Sunday that Nixon would be inviting adverse inferences if he fails to comply fully with the subpoena.

Nixon must answer the Judiciary Committee's subpoena for tapes of 42 presidential conversations by 10 a.m. tomorrow. The White House says only 36 of these tapes exist and Nixon took transcripts of them to Camp David for study as he mapped out his response to the subpoena over the weekend.

White House officials have indicated Nixon will offer censored transcripts, instead of the tapes themselves, and they maintain the transcripts alone will clear Nixon of any involvement in the Watergate coverup.

The committee has said the subpoena can only be satisfied by delivery of the tapes themselves, and som members have stated the President should be cited for contempt of Congress if he declines to do so.

But the inquiry sources said some of the sharpest legal experts on the panel are arguing that would be a legal gesture of questionable value.

Maryland scandals devour public money and officials

ANNAPOLIS, Md. [UPI] — Maryland's "Watergate" began when a tipster told the Internal Revenue Service they would find something interesting in Baltimore County three years ago.

That telephone call has already claimed the careers of Vice President Spiro T. Agnew and one of Maryland's most powerful Democrats, Baltimore County Executive Dale Anderson, and set off a widening probe into the state's power structure.

Agnew and Anderson, who succeeded the former vice president in the county's highest office in 1966 after Agnew was elected governor of Maryland, have been the two principal figures in the scandal. But the investigation of political corruption has snared a number of lesser known persons, threatened others and created a new atmosphere of political reform in Maryland.

The central, connecting thread of the Maryland political corruption scandal is money.

Whether in the form of cash donations to campaigns or undisguised payoffs, money has changed hands between public officials and those seeking state and local contracts and favorable decisions by officials.

The politicians who control both the awarding of state contracts and the zoning so critical to the making of fortunes in land development have depended on wealthy contributors for funds to run their campaigns and, in some cases, to maintain a style of living far beyond their personal resources.

Agnew resigned as vice president last Oct. 10 after pleading no contest to a negotiated charge of income tax evasion.

Anderson was convicted last month on 32 kickback-related charges, despite his attorney's contention that he tried to stop the extortion allegedly started by Agnew and other county officials. Anderson resigned from office last week.

Kissinger, Gromyko confer on mideast

GENEVA [UPI] — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger met Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko yesterday night to discuss Soviet-American relations and try to forestall any Russian sabotage of American attempts to get a military disengagement between Israel and Syria.

An hour and a half after Kissinger arrived from Washington amid some of the strictest security precautions ever imposed here, he drove a block from his hotel to the Russian mission to meet Gromyko, who arrived earlier in the day.

They are also scheduled to meet today before Kissinger flies to Algiers en route to the Middle East where he will shuttle between Israel and Syria in an attempt to bring a troop desengagement in the Golan heights where fighting has raged for 48 days.

American officials said Kissinger probably would concentrate on Soviet-American issues which will come up when President Nixon visits Russia in June. The major questions of the Middle East and a treaty limiting strategic nuclear arms may not come up until today.

At best, a high official with the Kissinger party said, the United States hopes for Soviet cooperation in Kissinger's efforts to get a troop disengagement in the Golan heights. At the least, the offical said, Kissinger hoped for Soviet understanding, not obstruction or sabotage.

The official said that if troop disengagement between Israel and Syria fails, then there is a strong probability that fullscale hostilities could result in the Middle East. Egypt and other Arab nations would risk being drawn in as well.

Sadat calls Kissinger 'miracle man'

NEW YORK [UPI] — President Anwer Sadat of Egypt said yesterday he believes U.S. Secretary of States Henry A. Kissiger can produce another "miracle" and arrange a cease-fire between Syria and Israel. Sadat described Kissinger as "a man of miracles. I think he will be doing it arrange a cease-fire again in Syria."

The fighting on the Golan Heights could be dangerous "if we don't use all our efforts from your side, from our side, from the Syrian side to try to reach this disengagement agreement. And I'm convinced that Henry will be reaching this agreement."

200 officials jailed in Ethiopian sweep

ADDIS ABABA [UPI] — Ethiopia's ex-prime minister, the former chief commissioner of police, the recent mayor of Addis Ababa and the present governor of the National Bank are among more than 200 high military and civilian officials jailed Friday in a nationwide sweep, the army said yesterday.

A spokesman said the arrested officials will be detained until a special anti-corruption commission investigates charges they misappropriated vast sums of public money.

The army followed up the arrests with a show of strength Saturday in the form of military parades. It served notice that it will back the current civilian government under Emperor Haile Selassie as long as that government keeps its reform program moving.

Allegations by junior officers of high-level corruption in Ethiopia led to an army mutiny in February that toppled the former government and touched off waves of unrest among students and workers in this ancient country.

The Army made the arrests Friday after expressing impatience with the lack of speed the new government of Prime Minister Endalkatchew Makonnen was showing in prosecution of the ex-leaders.

At the same time, however, paratrooper Col. Alem Zewd Tessime, chairman of the Coordinating Committee of the Ethiopian Armed Forces and Police, issued a pledge of military support for the new leadership.

"The entire armed and police forces are under the supervision of the government and we will resist anyone who tries to create chaos or sow disunity among the people," Alem said in a broadcast Saturday.

No charges were specified against the arrested former leaders, 15 of whom are being held in the headquarters of the Army's Fourth Division in Addis Ababa.

Heavy fighting continues for 48th day on Mt. Hermon

By United Press International

Israeli and Syrian air and ground units pounded each other's positions on Mount Hermon yesterday in some of the bitterest fighting for control of the snow-capped mountain that has become a prize in the war of attrition on the Golan front.

The heavy fighting, marking the 48th consecutive day of battle, came as Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger flew to Geneva on the first leg of his latest peace mission to the Middle East. His major objective was to help work out a troop disengagement agreement between Israel and Syria which would stop the shooting.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, in an intereview, called Kissinger "a man of miracles" who could produce a cease-fire on Israel's northern front. Kissinger played a major role in the Egyptian-Israeli troop separation accord on the Suez front.

Kissinger will confer in Geneva with Soviet Foreign Misnister Andrei A. Gromyko, who flew in earlier in the day from Moscos, before flying on to Algeria and Egypt on Tuesday. Later in the week, he will begin his diplomatic shuttling between Israel and Syria.

In Jerusalem, Israeli leaders said relations between Israel and the United States may be deteriorating following condemnation by the U.N. Security Council of Israel for the retaliatory raid on Lebanese border villages. The raids followed an Arab guerrilla suicide squad attack on a border village in which 18 Israelis were killed and 16 more wounded.

In air battles over Mt. Hermon, Syria reported its air defense systems downed an Israeli jet early yesterday, the 29th Israeli warplane claimed by the Syrians since April 8. The Syrian air defense system was reported recently to have been bolstered by the newest Soviet-supplied SAM9 heat-seeking missiles.

Villagers in south Lebanon said they saw a plane fall in flames in Israeli territory but Israel denied any losses.

Syria said all its aircraft returned safely from bombing and strafing attacks in which they inflicted "heavy casualities in lives and equipment" on the Israeli positions.

Damascus said its armored and artillery forces also hammered Israeli positions in several sectors of the battlefront following all night clashes.

The Israelis reported heavy tank, rocket and artillery fire on Mt. Hermon, which Israel captured in the last kay of the October war.

The 9,200 - foot mountain, straddling the borders of Syria, Lebanon and Israel, commands a strategic view of hundreds of miles of the surrounding territory has become the focal point of fighting with both sides seeking to control the mountain, which they presumably hope to use as a bargaining point in any troops disengagement talks.

LISBON — Unidentified army officer stands guard over three State security agents that have opposed the army's movement. The army is in complete control of the country following the military coup that took over the government.

Social leader returns to wild Lisbon welcome

LISBON [AP] — A tumultous crowd chanting "Death to Political Police" welcomed back exiled Socialist leader Mario Soares yesterday in one of the first public demonstrations permitted in Portugal in years.

Soares, who arrived from Paris, was the first politician to return from exile since the government was overthrown last Thursday.

The country's new leader, Gen. Antonio de Spinola, greeted the 49-year-old Soares at Lisbon station. The two met privately for about 20 minutes. Soares emerged from the meeting, saying he had no personal political ambitions but added: "I have for the Socialist party."

Spinola has promised free national assembly elections within a year.

Soares spoke to the crowd, estimated at between 3,000 and 5,000 persons, saying:

"The army has given people freedom of expression. But it is not the army but the workers and the people who must finish the job. It is not the time for division. People who want democracy must unite."

At a news conference later, Soares praised Spinola as "a magnificent man." He said the 64-year-old general had sent him a personally dedicated copy of his book calling for the end of military action in the Portuguese provinces.

Soares, in exile since 1970, said the Socialist party could agree to the ruling military junta's program announced two days ago but called for independence of the provinces as soon as possible.

Spinola was reported to have told political leaders Saturday that self-determination in the provinces should not be confused with independence.

Spinola and his six-man military junta lifted the last travel bans Sunday by opening airports to commercial air travel for the first time in three days.

Thousands of stranded tourists streamed out of the capital.

The holiday atmosphere remained. Soldiers rolled by in trucks waving bouquets of flowers thrown to them by the crowd.

The army continued a hunt for an estimated 2,000 political police reported at large. Many are believed in Portugal's three African provinces of Mozambique, Angola and Portuguese Guinea.

Injunction stops wild rock concert

RICHMOND, Va. [UPI] — The state Supreme Court yesterday blocked a last-minute attempt to resume the Cherry Blossom rock festival which had erupted into violence and resulted in 150 arrests.

The Supreme Court upheld an earlier injunction against continuation of the event. Chief Justice Harold Snead Jr. said he and two other justices denied the appeal "because the justices were without jurisdiction to entertain the motion." Attorneys for Creative Concerts, Inc., had asked Snead to lift the ban which was issued shortly after midnight by Richmond Circuit Court Judge J. Randolph Tucker.

The injunction was issued in the aftermath of brawls between concertgoers and police during the first day of performances attended by some 15,000 youthful fans on Saturday. About 10,000 tickets had been sold for a scheduled second day of performances yesterday.

Several witnesses said the main spark to the riot was the arrest of a man sitting at the top of the stadium's bleachers. Witnesses said policemen were harrassed as they escorted the man down the stadium aisles, forcing one officer to draw his service revolver as he led the suspect away.

"We have about 15 different stories as to how it began," said assistant city manager Brick Ryder. "One says it was with a 14-year-old girl, another says a policeman got hit in the head ... we just don't know."

About 200 policemen ultimately were involved in quelling the disorders. Up to 150 persons were arrested, city vehicles were burned and several buildings beneath the stadium were damaged, according to city officials.

Fearful of a repeat of Saturday's violence yesterday, City Manager William J. Leidinger obtained a court injunction prohibiting the second day of the outdoor gathering.

"There'll be no more concerts of this type outdoor in Richmond," Leidinger said after receiving the injunction.

Ryder said arrests were made for possession of drugs and other drug-related offenses, drinking in public, inciting to riot, assault on a police officer, assault on a police horse, and others.

GSA plans data bank

DETROIT [UPI] — The General Services Administration is setting up a massive computer network which has the potential to store information on individuals and institutions across the country, the Detroit News reported in a copyrighted story yesterday.

The plan, called FEDNET, calls for other federal agencies to hook into the network which would create a potential for the GSA to gather personal information from the files of many government departments, the News reported.

Construction on the network, is scheduled to start in 1975, according to the article written by Seth Kantor of the News' Washington Bureau.

Controls to end

WASHINGTON [UPI] — After almost three years of on-again, off-again economic controls, the United States is calling off its first peacetime attempt to regulate wages and prices by government fiat.

The Economic Stabilization Act expires tomorrow. While there are rumblings from such diverse quarters as the Senate Democratic Caucus and Vice President Gerald R. Ford for reviving some system of standby controls, it appears that the nation is about to return to a relatively free market economy for the first time since mid-1971.

Mitterrand attacks

PARIS [UPI] — Francois Mitterrand yesterday redoubled his attacks on Finance Minister Valery Giscard d'Estaing, the candidate polls show most capable of stopping the Communist-backed Socialist leader from winning the French presidency.

Mitterrand told a rally of 15,000 cheering supporters in the industrial city of Lille, that "the dictatorship of the finance ministry has weighed on this country for years and years."

He said Giscard d'Estaing was a longtime member of France's "tradition-bound, anti-reform rightwing."

The current polls give Mitterrand 42 per cent of the vote, Giscard d'Estaing 31 and the official Gaullist hopeful Jacques Chaban-Delmas 18 in the initial balloting.

In his speech, Mitterrand said that under Giscard d'Estaing, the finance ministry has gobbled up most all political and economic power in the country.

He hit again at his theme that workers, merchants and farmers are far from getting their share of France's prosperity.

Slides hit Peru

LIMA, Peru [AP] — An engineering team struggled through rain and mud yesterday to clear giant landslides high in the Andes that killed 43 people, wiped out at least three villages and threatened others with extinction.

Authorities said 50 persons have been injured and another 200 were missing in the disaster in a quiet little valley some 10,000 feet above sea level.

Congress beats Nixon

PRINCETON, N.J. [AP] — More voters approve of the way Congress is doing its job than approve of the way President Nixon is doing his, the latest Gallup Poll indicates. The survey, conducted April 12-15, also showed that more voters disapprove of the way Nixon is doing his job than disapprove of Congress. Thirty per cent of the 1,621 persons interviewed said they approved of the way Congress was handling its job; 47 per cent said they disapproved and 23 per cent were undecided. The President's approval rating, 25 per cent, matched his previous low point to date. Sixty-two per cent of those surveyed disapproved of Nixon's performance, while 13 per cent offered no opinion.

Hearst help asked

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — After 12 weeks of intensive investigation authorities Sunday asked citizens of the San Francisco Bay Area to help crack the Patricia Hearst kidnaping case.

Noting that members of the Sybionese Liberation Army who are believed to be holding the 20-year-old Miss Hearst somewhere in this area have ventured into the streets from their hideout many times, authorities now hope people who have seen them or will see them will come forward.

Wallace gains black support in Alabama gubernatorial race

MONTGOMERY, Ala. [AP] — Eleven years after his "segregation forever" speech, Gov. George C. Wallace is seeking re-election with the promised support of some black leaders in Alabama.

He is heavily favored to win renomination in the May 7 Democratic primary, and political analysts in and out of the state will be watching to see how many black votes Wallace can muster.

His expected victory against four opponents may be the signal for another presidential race in 1976, and the backing of a substantial number of blacks could affect his national image.

Black leaders who have endorsed Wallace for an unprecedented third term say they have done so because he has sogtened his segregation image, and because they figure he'll win anyway and will be indebted to them for thier support.

Jesse J. Lewis, publisher of the black weekly Birmingham Times which is backing the governor, put it bluntly: "If you have a stew and people bring meat and potatoes and carrots, and someone doesn't bring anything, they shouldn't get any of the stew."

The numerically stronger black wing of the Democratic party in the state, the Alabama Democratic Conference, has endorsed the most active of Wallace's opponents, state Sen. Gene McLain of Huntsville.

McLain promised to appoint black cabinet members if elected. Wallace has made no such commitment.

The governor, who made an unexpected appearance at a meeting of Southern black leaders in Tuckegee earlier this year, has welcomed the black endorsement.

"Were it left for me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers, or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter."

Official bids legislature not to ignore rent control

BOSTON [UPI] — The chief of Attorney General Robert H. Quinn's consumer protection division says the Massachusetts Legislature will be acting in a "flagrantly irresponsible manner".

Assistant Attorney General Herbert Goodwin, in an interview, said he believes the legislature will vote to extend local option rent control this session even though the Local Affairs Committee has recommended that the issue be studied further before it is acted upon.

"I don't share the pessimism of those who think the study recommendation automatically kills rent control," he said. "I expect that a move to substitute an extension bill for the study proposal will be made and will prevail, and the bill will be anacted.

He added however, "If the legislature fails, to at least extend the local option rent control bill in its present form, it will be acting in a flagrantly irresponsible manner."

Rep. John A. Bussinger, D-Brookline, one of three committee members to vote against killing the rent bills in a study, said he will move to substitute extension legislation when the study order comes up on the house for debate.

The law authorizing cities and towns to set up rent control programs was enacted by the legislature on the last day of the 1970 legislative session. If the legislation is not renewed, rent connrol authorization will expire in April 1975.

Bussinger said he does not think it would be wise for the legislature to postpone action on rent control extension this year, and place itself in the position of having to debate the connroversial issue only months before enabling legislation expires.

Democratic committees to select delegates

BOSTON [AP] — All Democratic ward and town committees in Massachusetts will convene next Saturday for caucuses as the first step in electing a grassroots delegation to a national party convention in December.

The Democratic State Committee announced the delegate selection plan Saturday, calling it "the most open plan in the country."

The national meeting will be held in Kansas City to draft a new Democratic Party charter.

The 42 delegates chosen from the grassroots level will be part of a total state delegation of 62, plus 14 alternates.

Ten of the delegates will be members of Congress from Massachusetts; the other 10 delegates and the 14 alternates will be chosen by the state committee.

Rep. Charles F. Flaherty Jr., chairman of the state committee, said three or four delegates will come from each of the state's 12 congressional districts.

Flaherty said any registered Democrat is eligible to be a delegate to the national conference but he or she must attend a district caucus to do so.

Prisoners escape

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — Seven inmates escaped from the New Hampshire State Prison in Concord yesterday afternoon, city police said.

Further details were not available with Concord Police, State Police and prison officials refusing to divulge additional information.

Concord Deputy Chief Jason Hines would say only that the men may be dangerous and wore either blue or green prison clothes.

Nixon runs in N.H.

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — Gov. Meldrim Thomson, a conservative, is being challenged for re-election by a fellow Republican, Senate President David Nixon, a liberal.

Nixon, 42, a lawyer from New Boston, has scheduled a formal declaration of his candidacy for the GOP nomination Wednesday.

Nixon said yesterday he is in the race because "we're going to have to deal with government honestly."

The administration of Thomson, Nixon said, has been one of "grandstanding, of hit and run."

Nixon said he would make his formal announcement for the Republican September primary race at a public news conference at the State House plaza.

The issues, Nixon said, will include consumerism, the environment, administration of justice, education, tax relief for the old, collective bargaining rights for teachers and other public employes, no-fault car insurance, taxes and state spending.

He and Thomson have clashed continually on the issues Nixon outlined.

Nixon was elected to the House in 1969 and the Senate in 1971. He became senate president last year.

Three candidates are seeking the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, Nixon's colleague, Senate Vice President Harry Spanos of Newport, former Sen. Richard Leonard of Nashua and Rep. Hugh Gallen of Littleton.

Death starts protest

BOSTON [AP] — Residents of Boston's Mission Hill public housing project plan a protest march on city hall today in the wake of the death of a nine-year-old boy in a project elevator shaft.

Alfonso Johnson was found dead Friday atop an elevator cab, 16 hours after firemen rescued his sister, Patricia, 4, from the same shaft. Medical Examiner George Curtis said the boy died of a broken neck.

Organizers of the protest say the Mission Hill tenants will be joined by other Boston public housing residents in the march. They claim faulty elevators are only one example of poor conditions in Boston Housing Authority projects.

Barry Brooks, Mayor Kevin White's press aide, says White will meet with the protestants if his scheduled has not kept him away from City Hall.

Truck strike planned

MARLBORO [AP] — Eight officials of independent truckers organizations from Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Rhode Island met here yesterday to discuss a proposed national truckers strike May 13.

The group decided to send a delegate to the convention in Kansas City next weekend of the Independent Truckers Owners and Operators of America.

Studded tires out

BOSTON [AP] — The American Automobile Association says the use of studded snow tires on Massachusetts highways is illegal after tomorrow. The AAA says motorists convicted of using the tires after that could face a $50 fine.

Group warns of budget

BOSTON [AP] — The Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation says the anticipated growth rate of state spending runs ahead of the planned growth of state revenue in the fiscal 1975 budget.

The foundation says state revenues "almost kept pace with appropriations" between 1966 and the present.

But "that period ends with the 1975 budget," the foundation warns. "Without a question, new revenues will have to be found, if not this year, then early in 1975.

"The alternative is an unprecedented cutback in state personnel or benefit levels."

The fiscal 1975 budget filed by Gov. Francis W. Sargent calls for spending of $2.788 billion, with an $18 million supplemental request tacked on.

Holyoke Latins should form Educational Community

By MIGUEL ANGEL RIVERA

There is no doubt that recent experiences suffered by student teachers in Holyoke constitutes the best evidence to maintain that we have an awful problematic situation in school. Even more, when the supervisors from the Bilingual-Bicultural Program of the School of Education classify the situation as alarming, we can not have any doubts as to how dangerous the situation has become.

The absence of well-prepared teachers, the lack of material and discipline, and, in many cases, the lack of good will from some authorities are only some of the factors that contribute to worsen the situation. In terms of bilingualism, Holyoke schools, as I think many others from different places, should be declared disaster areas.

I believe that it is time for us to question seriously the role played by the school system in this society. I know this idea scares many people; but, it is time to face the truth. Maybs we could even ask ourselves if it would be possible to depart from schools, as they are right now, to change society or if schools are an output of society itself, its best product.

The whole world is experimenting with very important changes; each day it is going farther away from the individualistic philosophy of life to reach to a social or community type of life. I would say that the communitarian answer in our situation till come out as an urgency more than as a simple respond the degenerated individualism we have been pushed to carry over.

We are inhabitants of a world where solidarity is an obscene skelton; but, where by that same reason, faither in the collective or social man can not dissapear. There is today more than ever enormous possibilities for social unity given the importance of the social massive communication media and techniques. Technological developments may help us deepen the concept of social totality. It is within the frame of the interdependence concept that the coscious of participation is born.

Let's take the specific case of Holyoke. It is absolutely necessary that Holyokians undersTand what it means to be a community. They should bet together to colaborate towards resolving their own needs as conscienciously conceived, so that they row individually and socially speaking. They have to realize not every human group is a community.

The essential element of a community is the decision of the consciencious groups to work together. This can be done beginning with the schools. It is the people who must become one thing with the schools.

The Lating community, for example, suffers more than any other group in Holyoke school system. It is a must for the Latin community to take over the schools and decide reflexively to colaborate in solving the present problems through commitment for decisive action.

All the Latin families should get together and colaborate workshops on their needs in school because it is the parents who, at last, become responsible for the child's education in this society. The establishment has proved to be immature to deal with it.

In the workshops, they should discuss today's society and its role in school, the creation of a new society that would demand essential changes in education, the necessity of working in unity, hand to hand, with the committed teachers and students. They should also analyze the politics of participation, the process of integration, the use and abuse of power, school democratization, home diagnosis of school problems as seen through children behavior and hundreds of other important topics.

The only way to make schools relevant to society is by establishing an Educational Community. To get to this goal, the parents must take over the schools and demand democratization of the system. Holyoke is the ideal spot for that to take place; and it is the Latin community that presents the best perspectives for such action, Go head.

Soc. Dept. frustrates student

To The Editor:

As a sociology major, I have been examining the state of education at this University. Increasingly, I become more frustrated at the lack of encouragement towards academics at UMass. "UMass — the party school" rings in my ears constantly. I have begun making sense of this in terms of the de-emphasis on learning and pursuing intellectual endeavors.

I have often heard faculty say that students at UMass "don't care". I have been questioning why students here "don't care". I also am a victim of this. Only, this time, I am infuriated enough to care. Today, in picking up a Course Description Guide for the Fall Semester, I anxiously flipped to the Sociology Department listings and much to my indignance, found only 12 course descriptions listed [submitted only by 11 members of the Sociology faculty]. I am utterly disgusted and insulted by this listing. As an interested Sociology major, I find that my needs are frustrated by the department. If the professors do not even have enough decency and respect towards their students to publish a description of their courses, then small wonder students at UMass "don't care".

My personal complaint lies directly with the Sociology Department [although I am afraid that this reflects a much more pervasive problem]. At another time, while requesting advice on entering into an Honors course in the Sociology Department, a faculty member asked me if I had a crush on the professor. He thought he was being "cute", I did not. He was not at all excited that I was asking to do more work, to get more involved in Sociology; of course, he assumed that a "UMie" and a woman at that, could not possibly be interested in academics.

I am tired to being a victim of sexism and "UMass-ism" in regard to my studies. It is not that I am not learning things at UMass, I am just learning things that I rather wish weren't true.

Bowditch school needs money

To The Editor:

This letter is written in the hope of awakening a somnolent community to the needs of the University Day School housed in Bowditch Lodge. The pressing need right now is simply and obviously money. Money to continue and expand present programs for children and to instigate new ones. The Day School, in our opinion, is not adequately funded in proportion to the services it provides for the University community, services which generally go unrecognized.

Its most obvious service is to the children who attend the Day School. It provides them with a safe, stimulating atmosphere in which to learn. Intellectual learning is only part of the Day School experience. More importantly, we feel, the Day School provides children with social experience and teaches them how to deal amicably and cooperatively with their peers, something we all could learn a bit better.

From another point of view, the University Day School serves the student population in two ways.

First, it provides opportunities for students interested in human development to work in close relationships with young children and learn as much from the children as the children learn from them. We feel that the quality of the Day School — in terms of materials, maintenance and personnel — directly affects the quality of the students who participate in the Day School programs. It therefore seems appropriate that the Day School be better appreciated and better funded than it is at present, if not for the children then for the students.

Seond, the Day School provides low cost day care to a significant number of student parents, both graduate students and undergraduates. We personally would find it impossible to pursue our studies without its services. At present we are enrolled as full-time undergraduates and depend upon the Day School to properly care for our child while we attend classes. Nowhere could we find equivalent services for an equivalent price. And we do not feel that either one of us should be forced to sacrifice an education because one of us has to be at home all the time.

For these reasons we ask the School of Education, the Undergraduate and Graduate Senates, and especially the Commuter Assembly [whose constituency is most directly involved and who frivolously spends our money for music on 'Spring Day'] to pay more serious attention to the needs of the University Day School and to see that its needs are met. It can only enrich the University community.

Garpasture laments loss

Denneth Garpasture, a loser in the recent Amherst town selectindividual race, released a statement yesterday absolving himself of any blame for his humongous loss in the election.

Garpasture, who was the subject of an election postmortem by the Vallee Advocado, the local fruit-growers weekly, blamed Chesty Morgan, the comet Kahoutek, Curly Howard, the TV show "All My Children", The New York Times, an expired Preparation H prescription, and local student morons for his defeat.

"Every time they think, they weaken the nation," said Garpasture when asked his opinion of the student vote. "I have never seen such moronic ingoramuses (ignorami?) in my life. They have no political sense at all. If they had, I wouldn't have gotten any votes."

"Instead of coming out and campaigning for me," he continued, "they stayed in their rooms and watched TV. Women watched "All My Children" (it was pretty good in March, he conceded), while all the men stayed home and watched the Three Stooges. It might not have been bad if Shemp was on, but they had Curly every day. And I'd specifically asked Channel 38 to play only Shemps or Joes during March. How do you expect people to be interested in politics when they can see Curly three times a day?"

But Garpasture conceded some students couldn't be faulted for their preoccupation with other things.

"Wouldn't you know that "Deadly Weapons" would have to hit Amherst just at election time, he said."

"Why, I lost half my campaign organization when my best friend bought a Chesty Morgan doll and suffered a collapsed lung trying to fill it with air. Also, on the Friday night before the election when I went to every fraternity in Amherst to drum up support I found that 77.6 per cent of the students were at the plaza watching the movie."

Garpasture also attacked the New York Times, calling it "a media monopoly" and "the biggest rag since William Howared Taft's jockey shorts."

Garpasture's main gripe, though, was that the Times neglected to print his press releases.

"You know, I sent one in on nuclear power, and it never got printed. Instead they ran some filler on Pompidou dying."

The defeated candidate closed his statement by berating astronomers for predicting that Kahoutek would be bright and vowing to never use Preparation H again.

"I had planned to declare that the comet was an omen of change for the people of Amherst. I had 14 nine-year-olds ready to go home and tell their parents, but the damn thing never appared.

"And then, after the election when I figured out who was responsible for my defeat, I bought some Preparation H and smeared it all over the Collegian, but it didn't work.

"It's still a pain in the ass."

Bussing: right of kids

One of the burning issues of the day in Boston and Springfield is compliance with the Racial Imbalance Act, or more mundanely, "bussing". The first paragraph of the Act reads as follows: "Whereas the deferred operation of this act would tend to defeat its purpose, which is to eliminate forthwith racial imbalance in the public schools, therefore it is hereby declared to be an emergency law, necessary for the immediate preservation of the public convenience."

The key word, of course, is "emergency", and this was in 1965! I am sure we all realize just what substantial efforts have been made to alleviate this nine year old emergency; to wit, none, The situation has been dragged along and blown out of proportion by screaming mothers and fathers, accomplishing nothing short of aiding an intolerable situation. The vocal delegation has continuously stormed the State House, with one thing in mind, and it has nothing to do with their child's safety. These people plainly do not want to break up the lily white neighborhood school system, and want to keep the black kids "where they belong", in their rundown, outdated, inferior, understaffed, poorly administered schools. Quality education, (or even improved education), as far as the vocal parents are concerned, has nothing to do with racial imbalance. That is where they are dead wrong. The fact is, it has everything to do with it, giving everyone an equal opportunity to attain a quality education effects everyone, not just blacks, not just whites. The city has the responsibility to provide the same facilities for all the children, and it is clearly not doing that. To say that an all black school in the ghetto area has the same facilities and provides the same opportunities as an all white school in a more affluent section of town, is ludicrous, Equally, to assume that because a school is dominantly white it therefore must provide a quality education, is folly. The point is that, through the Racial Imbalance Act, all educational facilities are going to benefit, by equalizing the quality of education city-wide, while correcting the unequal distribution of students. If attaining this goal means bussing, then so be it, and for God sake let's get on with it. The longer it is delayed the more it effects the future of a lot of kids, and not, I repeat not, their parents'.

A look at some of the voting statistics of the state legislature's many roll calls on Racial Imbalance provide interesting reading, and may be a bit disturbing to some. The High Ratio votes translate into votes over a period of time for the Imbalance Bill. The Low Ratio are votes against the bill.

	HIGH PERCENT	LOW PERCENT
PARTY
Democrat	54.4	45.6
Republican	88.2	11.8
RELIGIOUS AFF.
Catholic	49.9	50.6
Protestant	89.5	10.5
Jewish	100.0	00.0
REGION
Urban	43.1	56.9
Suburban	83.3	16.7
Rural	83.3	16.7

In further statistics, Representatives from cities having balanced schools tend to vote in favor of the Bill, while the opposite is true for those from imbalanced areas. These figures perhaps destroy some of the myths about where urban Democrat's feelings lie, and for that matter, urban Catholics. Boston, with its strong Irish-Catholic-Democratic constituency is obviously not the liberal, humanitarian thing we would hope it to be. In fact. this group seems to be basically conservative, and ethnically oriented, especially in relation to blacks. This is not to call everyone in Boston racist, but there is definitely a preoccupation with racial definitions in Boston, and to say that it doesn't effect the daily operation of government is to kid oneself. In short, there are a hell of a lot more Louise Day Hicks' in Boston, than there are Royal Bollings'.

Kevin White is somewhat in the middle of all this, though I'm not sure exactly where. he says he's against bussing, but for Racial balance in the schools. He says it's not up to him anyway, because it's in the Governor's hands. Sargent says what he always says, not really much of anything. White is playing both sides of the fence on this one, and making more enemies in the process. He had a stand on it once upon a time, and he should stick to it, and provide some leadership on the issue, to uphold the law the best he can. That's his job, not shrugging his shoulders and letting Sarge take charge. I happen to like Kevin White, but he's lost me on this issue. But then, then you run a city the likes of Boston, the attacks are mare frequent than the pats on the back. White shouldn't stoop to the level of the average Boston politician; it doesn't become him, and does nothing for the city.

The implimentation of the Racial Imbalance Act, with bussing, would be a start toward a just educational system, and a better city. It would grant opportunity to those who have none. It would not limit the opportunity of those who are fortunate enough to already have it. It would make teachers more responsive to the needs of students; and not have their work dictated by the area in which they teach. If there is anything that can cure the disease of the nation's cities, it is education. Clearly the only just course of action for Boston and Springfield, is to comply with the law, and give the children the chance they deserve. It is their right, and that is something the parents seem to forget.

The Ad Hoc Committee on the Campus Center Bond Issue under the leadership of Aurther Stroll is seeking Legislative action "which purports that the state take over the bond indebtedness of the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center".

Currently UMass students are paying thirty dollars a semester to pay the bill on the Campus Center and they shall continue to do so for the next forty years when the bill will be finally paid. The strange thing about it is that as soon as the building is paid for, the state, according to section 19 of the UMass Building Authority Code, will take over ownership and any profits the building makes.

In 1958 when the building was originally proposed it was intended that students not pay any part of the bill. In fact this was the philosophy right up through the dedication of the Center. Revenue to pay for the self-liquidating building was to come from conference fees, room rentals and student taxes. However, the Campus Center has been plagued by unseen financial woes, loss of profit due to University Store rip-offs and underuse of the function and conference rooms. In short, the Center (first called the Center for Continuing Education) has been a financial flop and we have been left to foot the bill.

Students are also being faced with the possibility of their bill increasing. When the center opened students were paying about fifteen dollars per semester but now, four years later, the amount paid by students has doubled to about thirty dollars and there is no guarantee this figure will stay constant.

Presently the bill has obtained the support of the S.G.A., the Graduate Senate, and the Commuter Assembly. The seven member group is seeking support from the students through petition. If they can obtain 15,000 to 20,000 signatures for the petition local Representative James Collins will propose a bill to the State Legislature pending his re-election.

The problem is that the people who planned the building for the future during the great UMass expansion years are no longer around to take responsibility for it. The building was not built by student request, the student body did not propose it or plan it however they have been left with both the ediface and the tab.

The Collegian supports the selling of the Campus Center back to the state on the premise that the students have gotten a shaft on an unwanted headache. The sooner students are relieved of this unneccessary burden the better.

Rallyers evasive

To The Editor:

Last Thursday, at a table on the concourse level of the Campus Center, I signed up and paid for the trip to Washington [for the impeachment march]. That is, I thought I did. After I handed the guy $14, I was told that it was to cost $15, not $14, for the second bus which had been chartered. He told me I had the option to either pay the entire fare later, or to let him keep the $14 with the understanding that I would pay the remaining dollar later. He made it sound as though, either way, I was insured of a seat on the bus.

This was underscored by the fact that, at my suggestion that he tear up the paper I had signed, he said that he'd just "hold onto it" as he was also doing for "someone else". With the expectation that I would, as he had led me to believe, be able to pay on Friday, and recalling that an article in the Collegian had quoted an organizer of the effort stating that as many buses as were needed would be charted, I was confident that evrything would work out.

Unfortunately, there was no table in the Campus Center on Friday; so I called Frank Dorman [apparently the chief coordinator in the area] and asked if I could still pay. He said that both buses were filled to capacity and that I'd have to be put on a short waiting list. If someone cancelled out, he said he would call me back-otherwise, I'd have to go down to the Amherst common-rally [Friday night] and talk to him about it. Well, he didn't call back, and I've got better things to do than to walk from Orchard Hill to the common to receive [what else have I been led to expect?] further evasive treatment.

The moral: if you treat people professionally [or even competently], you'll receive a surprisingly favorable response.

To The Editor:

I accuse the group of men calling themselves the United Nations and all those who render to them any moral or financial support of being willing and knowing participants in the crime of genocide! Recently a group of terrorists harbored within Lebanon attacked the small Israeli town of Kiryat Shemona. They seized a home there, and began throwing tiny infants to their deaths from the windows. The little skulls smashed on the ground and their blood and brains stained the grass red [Do not accuse me of unpleasantness in my description; I only describe the "unpleasantness" of others.]. After this atrocity, the Israel Defense Force moved to suppress the terrorist bases in Lebanon from which the bloodthirsty savages had set out on their mission. On the night of April 24, the United Nations Security Council voted unanimously to condemn Israel's attempt to defend its babies, and expressly refused to declare the terrorists equally guilty. The United Nations, in all its majesty, has declared that it is always open season on Jews. When you are asked to contribute to the United Nations, remember that such a contribution, even it it is only moral in nature, stains your hands indelibly with the blood and gore of the babies of Kiryat Shemona.

Health Bills need help

To The Editor:

Two bills of vital interest to Massachusetts consumers are currently stalled in the legislature's Committees on Ways and Means. Both measures are designed to cut consumer costs for essential products and services and are of particular importance to the elderly and to those on fixed or marginal incomes.

-House Bill No. delete

-House Bill No. 1855 would require posting of basic price information for prescription drugs in all Massachusetts pharmacies.

-Senate Bill No. 156 ["Lifeline"] would provide a minimum amount of essential electricity at a set cost.

Readers who have followed the progress of these bills may wish to express their opinions with a letter or phone call to:

Representative Anthony Scibelli, Chairman
House Committee on Ways and Means
State House
Boston, MA. 02133
re: House Bill No. 1855
and
Senator James A. Kelly, Chairman
Senate Committee on Ways and Means
State House
Boston, MA. 02133
re: Senate Bill No. 156

Approval of House Bill No. 1855 and of Senate Bill No. 156 would be important steps forward for consumer protection in the Commonwealth. We urge citizens to act now, before determination of next year's budget, to help secure passage of this legislation in 1974.

No voice in Anthro

To The Editor:

Would you be kind enough to inform all members of the Anthropology Department that they are cordially invited to a wake. On April 22, at 4:15 p.m. eastern standard time student representation in the personnel committee died a merciless death. The victim was drawn, quartered, horsewhipped, bludgeoned with a sharp instrument, clubbed with a mace, decapitated, strung on a rack, and hung from a meathook; at which point the remains were joyously paraded through the campus center by five archangels, 12 torpedoes and a good-humour man. God only knows what they did with the "body?" after that. Perhaps they are planning to stuff it and mount it in Machmer 207.

Prior to April 22, graduate students and undergraduates had full representation on all faculty committees in the anthropology department, including personnel decisions etc. On Monday the faculty voted, by a vote of 13-5 to wipe out student representation and input into departmental affairs.

Support Brooke

To The Editor:

As many of you are aware, opponents of legal abortion are attempting, through Constitutional Amendments, to destroy the U. S. Supreme Court January 1973 ruling, which guarantees the right to choose or not to choose abortion according to personal convictions and without interference by the government. After viability of the fetus, "the State, in promoting its interest in the potentiality of human life, may, if it chooses, regulate, and even proscribe, abortion except where it is necessary, in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health of the mother." If this ruling is reversed by constitutional amendment, abortion will not cease to exist; it will only become less safe, less available, more expensive, and discriminatory toward poor women or women without connections with the medical-psychiatric professionals. It is very important for people who believe in keeping abortion legal and safe to write to our Senators and your representative. Senator Kennedy's position is ambivalent and seems to be based on his personal convictions, which are against abortion. However, Senator Brooke has come out publicly in Washington in support of a woman's right to choose abortion. His position is quoted:

> Because I have many reservations concerning these amendments, I cannot in good conscience support the efforts to enact them ... I believe that these amendments might endanger a central Judeo-Christian tenet-freedom of conscience. Such a result might also be violative of the spirit of the first amendment's freedom of religion clause ... Available evidence suggests that passage of an amendment would merely restore the practice of millions of illegal abortions - many under back-alley conditions — that have prevailed until recently. This would mean a return of poor women, and an increase in abandoned, abused and unwanted children.

Senator Brooke has been receiving mail from Massachusetts that is balanced on this issue with more thoughtful, factual and responsible comments coming from those who oppose the constitutional amendments, according to an aide in his office. He needs continued support in the form of letters. Write to him if you so support his position to keep abortion legal and safe and up to individual convictions; not enforced statutes that legislate such a private decision. I personally feel good that he has come out publicly with such a clear statement on such a heated issue; I feel good that he is concerned about the rights and health of women and not about forcing his personal beliefs on others.

Horse sense

To The Editor:

For the past four years I have been involved in the Livestock Classic and other activities involving the farm animals on this campus. Each year I become more infuriated by people's ignorance of the Rules of the Road, especially the rule concerning horses and draft animals which states: "When he is being led, ridden, or driven, every operator must stop if the animal appears to be frightened and on signal from the person in charge. Remain still until the animal has passed. If travelling in the same direction, pass with caution." Apparently many drivers haven't read their Mass. Drivers' License Manuals too carefully or just don't bother to pay much attention to the law. There have been several instances in which I and the animal I was leading could have been seriously hurt just because someone couldn't waste one minute of their precious time to stop and wait until we were safely across the road. It's said that ignorance of the law is no excuse, but what good will that do me if I'm in a hospital and the animal in my charge is dead?

The Livestock Classic is coming soon and a lot of students are getting their animals ready for it. If you should happen to be driving and someone is trying to lead an animal across the road, please show a little consideration. Serious injuries can be avoided.

Andre Watts "nothing short of incredible"

By DOROTHY L. MULLER
MDC Staff

Incredible! Andre Watts piano technique is nothing short of incredible. In Friday night's concert with the Springfield Symphany Orchestra at the Cage The keyboard virtuoso bounded up the stage steps for four curtain calls following his performance of Beethoven's Emperor piano concerto.

The 26-year old artist hunched over the keyboard counting time to one of the most fiercely demanding of piano solos. The Emperor piano cadenzas require an extraordinary sense of rhythm juxtaposing left hand triplets against the more facile right hand sixteenths. The technique is more often attempted than played, but Andre Watts has progressed long past mere technical competency of a prodigy when he was first introduced over national television 10 years ago by Leonard Bernstein as a soloist with the New York Philharmonic Young Peoples Concert.

The Emperor Concerto opens with a fortisismo chord for full orchestra when the piano bursts in with a brilliant two octave chromatic scale. In the first movement the piano and orchestra vie for supremacy in an allegro dialogue punctuated by rhapsodic piano outbursts.

In the Adagio, the hymn-like theme is carried by the orchestra while the piano weaves garlands of variations in which the piano surprisingly elaborates before it simplifies. The Adagio blends right into the final rondo a break, which is characterized a final comic dialogue between the piano and tympani.

(Staff Photo-Ken Bernard)

THE VIRTUOSO — Andre Watts, with his two hands, one mind, and the Springfield Symphony Orchestra.

Andre Watts' piano was beautifully expressive rather than ornamentally exhibitionistic. However, the Springfield Symphony under the direction of Robert Gutter was sadly weak in upholding its part of the musical dialogue between orchestra and piano. The brilliant opening chord sounded by the orchestra juxtaposed with brilliant rivlets of sound from the piano was ineffectual. The orchestra as a whole never quite reached their maximum potential of musical sensitivity. Nevertheless, the weakness of the Springfield Symphany can be attributed to its youth. Many of its members are students, and conductor, Robert Gutter, is actively cultivating closer association with Umass.

Gutter's choice of "The ideal prelude" to Debussy's La Mer was an original work, Three Processionals for Orchestra, by a Umass music professor, Charles Fussell. Both works were clearly generated in the impressionistic mode, where the musicality of the work is defined as much by controlled silence as by its music.

For alien students hunting summer jobs

Immigration Commissioner Leonard F. Chapman, Jr., anouced today that foreign students seeking summer employment will have to obtain permission trom the Immigration and Naturalization Service rather than from school officials.

Commissioner Chapman said that his decision to withhold authority from school officials to act on foreign student requests for summer work permission was intended to protect summer job opportunities for American youth, including Vietnam veterans and members of minority groups.

He said the decision was based on labor market advice furnished by the U.S. Manpower Administration.

"For several years the Manpower Administration has advised us that unemployment among American youth is of such magnitude that summer employment of aliens is depriving young Americans of needed employment opportunities," he said.

In reviewing immigration policies since taking office last November Mr. Chapman said he found that foreign students had been allowed to engage in employment under the summer program without regard to any adverse change in financial circumstances. He expressed the view that this policy is not warranted.

But he emplasized that foreign students in need of employment for economic reasons due to unforeseen circumstances which arose after entry into the United States may continue to apply to the Service for work permission at any time.

Such students, he said, are not limited to summer work. Upon graduation, foreign students may also apply to the Service for approval to engage in practical training in a field related to their course of study.

Mr. Chapman said that the Department of State, which was consulted by the Immigration and Naturalization Service prior to the decision to limit foreign student employment, expressed the view that there is an important foreign policy benefit to the United States from the presence of young foreigners studying in this country who later take home with them not only academic knowledge gained here, but also greater knowledge of this country.

"In balancing the labor market impact against the foreign relations aspects, I have concluded that protections of job opportunities for young Americans, including minority youth and Vietnam veterans, is the paramount consideration at this time."

Amherst's buildings banned

a new facility was replacing an old one and would not result in any increased load on the sewage treatment plant.

The communities with total bans now in effect include Amherst, Ipswich, Framingham, Natick, Ashland, Leominster and Franklin.

Partial or area bans are in effect in Amesbury, Milford and Salem.

The state official said the bans in Amherst and Ipswich have been in effect for about two years. In Amherst, he said, a solution is at least six months away.

The Amherst case, Slagle said, was "A typical example of a community which grew so fast that an antiquated sewer system quickly became obsolete."

The Amherst system became overloaded more than two years ago and pollution began to appear in Lake Warner in nearby South Hadley.

The town is now preparing to put up for bids a new pumping station which will ensure that all the sewage gets to the treatment plant.

But even that won't solve the problem completely, Slagle said, because the treatment plant itself is incapable of handling all the sewage.

The guideline used by the agency in determining the level of treatment necessary for raw sewage are the rivers or streams into which the sewage is dumped. The streams' water quality must be at least maintained.

"That level varies from community to community," he said.

They had Impeachment on their minds

By MARK VOGLER
MDC Staff

WASHINGTON, D. C. — They came for different reasons — but they had one thing in common.

Mrs. Ida Hoffman, 71, of Westchester County, N. Y., made the trip in an appeal for peace — something she said she has longed for since age 18.

Edward Saffron, 56, already a resident here, moved from Rhode Island six years ago to make his grievance heard over his job firing — something he intends to do until he receives an answer.

About 10,000 other concerned Americans, young and old, with varying problems on their minds, were also here Saturday to express their indignation against President Nixon.

And as antiwar activist and Chicago 7 defendant David Dellinger put it at the Impeachment rally: "Impeachment is biding fair to become that issue that unites the movement again."

Although Dellinger acknowledged the concerns of Americans to be "fragmented," he optimized that "a movement which began to get civil rights for people is developing into a movement for the rights of all."

"I've been against Nixon since Alger Hist," Mrs. Hoffman told the Collegian.

"The younger generation will not remember the 50's, but I do ... and I remember the wrongs he did then ... and I don't like what he's doing today."

Mrs. Hoffman said she has received pressure from her own peers, but added "I feel right in what I'm doing."

"Ever since I was 18, I've been after peace, liberty and justice for all," she said.

"I hope that my grandchildren will have a better world than my children. I'm for humanity above all — no war. War has never solved anything."

Although of Jewish faith, Mrs. Hoffman said she is against the policies of Israel and sides with the Arabs in the Middle East crisis.

Saffron, who was formerly employed at Quonset Point Naval Air Station, R. I., told the Collegian he has picketed the White House on the average of four to six days a week since May 26, 1969.

He had arrived here a day earlier — to begin a relentless protest against a job termination he considers unjustified — and a crusade against the Nixon administration's policies.

"during that time I've received no answer from the Government — so it makes me more determined to stay here until hell freezes over," Saffron said.

"I've been both arrested and harassed during that time. On May 24, 1971, just before the May Day demonstrations, I was jailed for crossing a picket line."

Saffron said the prospects of impeachment look good, basing his judgment on the "fact that the silent majority is finally beginning to wake up."

ROUND 'EM UP AND HEAD 'EM OUT — UMass Transit Service held a bus rodeo on Saturday but all the "ponies" were back in corral by Sunday.

Shale oil won't supply nation's energy needs

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Shale oil may never be a significant factor in supplying the nation's needs, according to a report by the Atomic Energy Commission.

The draft report, obtained Sunday by The Washington Post, said that even by using all the water available in the states of Colorado, Utah and Wyoming to process the shale, only 3 million to 5 million barrels of oil could be produced daily.

But, it said, a reasonable figure would be closer to 1 million barrels by 1963 since water would have to be shared for other needs. That would supply only 4 to 5 per cent of the expected energy need by 1980.

The report said the million barrel per day goal might be attained by the early 1980s if the government would undertake two experimental projects.

The first would cost between $150 and $200 million by turning the shale into rubble with underground blasting. It would provide up to 50,000 barrels of oil each day, the report said.

The second project, costing about $300 million, would produce 50,000 barrels per day with a process similar to strip mining. More water is needed in this process, it said.

The report, according to the Post, said present leasing arrangments for shale oil was not likely to meet the goals of "Project Independence" — President Nixon's plan for energy independence by the end of the decade.

The report said the leasing agreements would bring in only 100,000 to 300,000 barrels of oil per day by 1985.

Other problems besides the water shortage would plague oil shale development, the report said. These included disposal of solid wastes, which would pose "a serious environmental challenge."

Amtrack booming on 3rd birthday

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Amtrak marks its third birthday Wednesday with something to celebrate — a boom in passenger train travel.

During the first three months of this year, 41 per cent more riders boarded Amtrak trains than a year earlier and there are signs that the boom is continuing despite an easing of the energy crisis.

However, costs also are rising on almost a dollar-for-dollar basis with increased revenues and Amtrak is sinking deeper into debt for new passenger cars and locomotives needed to expend its fleet.

And down at the train station this summer, there will not be enough passenger cars to handle the expected crush. Amtrak delayed ordering new passenger cars until it was too late to get them in time for this summer, or even the next summer.

Amtrak still has not solved many of the problems that have beset it since it came into existence on May 1, 1971, including late trains and mechanical breakdowns.

Complaints abound from passengers who feel they were treated shabbily by train crews or who were given misinformation by Amtrak employes. And as in decades past, when a train stops in the middle of nowhere for no apparent reason, it is still almost impossible to find out why.

Despite its problems and some bureaucratic bungling, Amtrak is at last beginning to see light at the end of the tunnel. The corporation has proved that the passenger train is not as dead as the stagecoach and that people can be convinced to ride trains.

In the late 1960's, the passenger train network in this country was little more than a patchwork quilty of aging trains. Almost every railroad management in the country was discouraging riders; There was no nationwide reservations system, and if a rider missed a train connection, he was simply out of luck.

Now, there is one central reservations system with toll-free numbers to call day or night for reservations. The capacity of Amtrak's reservations phone lines has been doubled since the energy crisis sent an avalanche of riders back to the rails.

If a passenger misses his connection, Amtrak will put him up in a hotel or provide alternate transportation.

Amtrak has made an effort to upgrade its fleet of passenger cars. The interiors have been refurbished with bright new colors and carpeting on the floors and walls.

Some new equipment has been or is being added to the Amtrak fleet. Several new French-built turbotrains have been put on the Chicago to St. Louis run, and other turbos will be put into service within the next year.

Administrators do the dorm thing will encompass the whole spectrum of dormitory life from the concrete consistency of veal patties served in the cafeterias to the inadequacy of present security service and janitorial services. The four men will spend their night in a yet to be selected dormitory in the Southwest area, while the women will spend the night in Field House in the Orchard Hill Area.

This particular experiment was originally undertaken as a response to the requests of students Marcia Lovell and Peter Finch, that a group of officials from all branches of the student services administration spend a night in the dormitories in order to gain a direct insight into the problem of improving the quality of life in the dormitories. French and Lovell's joint proposal originated as a project for a course in Counseling Psychology, entitled Peer Consultant Program, taught by Doctor Southworth.

However, this experiment is not the first of its kind. Earlier this semester, Ken Dean, in response to an invitation offered by administrative intern, Gordon Gillett, a senior majoring in urban management, spent a night at Grayson House. Dean said that, as a result of his stay at Grayson, he was particularly impressed by the seriousness of the problems generated by the following conditions: inadequate security services which make it possible for thieves to "ripoff someone's speakers while they're shaving", lack of kitchenette facilities and the absence of a snack bar which make weekend dining very inconvenient, and the avsence of janitorial services on the weekends.

However, Dean feels that the upcoming project will elicit a more comprehensive scope of student feed-back since several representatives from several different administrative department, each with different interests and perspectives will be involved.

Evaluating the live-in concept as an administrative tool, Dean said that the "primary goal of anyone involved with student administration is to serve the students"; therefore as an administrator "one doesn't pass up any chances that one gets to talk to the student."

C.C. barbers make seniors' reality shapely

By GAIL BERGER
MDC Special

If you're one of those sad seniors leaving the world of idealism and entering the reality of the business world, you might consider a visit to the Student Union Barber Shop as one of your first steps.

Nelson Major, owner of the barber shop, says, "spring is the busiest time of year for us because students are having interviews and getting ready for jobs."

Stereo music plays softly in the background as waiting students and professors read the latest issues of Newsweek and the Daily Collegian. The scene is reminiscent of a dentist's reception room. For some people it's even worse than having a tooth pulled. Hair, these days, is the umbilical cord between school and work – between security and fear.

There is one good point though. The price of a cut is only $2.25. It had been raised in January from $2.00.

"Patronage has climbed 15 per cent in the past year," claims Major. "Most of my clientele are regular customers. There isn't much business from the hotel."

(Staff Photo-Bob Stevens)

Spring is the season when the campus center barbers begin shearing the locks of graduating seniors, who in hopes of getting a job, decide to take on the clean look.

Before the Campus Center complex was built, the barber shop was located in the space currently occupied by Room to Move. The shop now lies on the Campus Center concourse across from the coffee shop, a path frequented by thousands of potential customers every day. The barber shop was formally established in Amherst in 1921. Major, the present owner, was first hired in 1933. He's been a "faithful sculptor" ever since.

Two other barbers, Ernest Pollen and James Farkham, greet each customer as he-she enters the shop. Pollen, who specializes in cutting women's hair, has been shaping their locks since 1948. A good number of these women are Umass students coming in for trims, full cuts and styling. "It costs $2.25 whether you ask for a half-inch trim or a full cut," says Pollen.

"The most popular style for men seems to be a cut tapered to the shirt collar in back with one inch sideburns," says Major. "The military look is definitely 'out' for my customers."

So, seniors, no matter what condition your head is in now, know that the Student Union barbers can make your 'reality' a little bit shapelier.

SEX ROLES REVERSED AT MICHIGAN is the headline in the Michigan State News story that tells how one dorm's men and women are learning to understand each other.

Seems that the students switch rooms for a day, belongings and all, with members of the opposite sex.

KARL MARX IS HAVING TROUBLE GETTING INTO HARVARD...that's the lede paragraph the Amherst Student put on a recent story about the econ faculty that voted to table a proposal which would add Neo-Marxian, "radical" analysis to the graduate curriculum.

SECRETARY WEARS PANTS...that's the headline of the week from the Blue Ridge (Va) Cmnty College Ridge Runner. It appeared over a story about the first male to be enrolled there as a secretarial science student.

FACULTY WORK WEEK at the University of Minnesota averages out to 35.4 hours of direct instructional activities, the Minnesota Daily reports.

Also revealed is that all research work, administrative duties and discipline-related public services carried on by the faculty are done almost on an "overtime basis."

REST ROOM DISCRIMINATION has ended at the University of San Francisco, when the last bastions of faculty privacy were opened to students. The Jesuit institution reacted to the reques6t of a one-man Restroom Equalization Committee, headed by Louis Castoria. His slogan was "to let our people go."

OPPORTUNITIES FOR

PHYSICS MAJORS

(OR THE EQUIVALENT)

FOR WHOM?

If you are about to graduate with a B.S. in Physics (or the equivalent) or are already a graduate we invite you to consider our M.S. program in Mechanical or Industrial Engineering with a major in manufacturing.

Manufacturing engineers are those concerned with the planning and selection of methods of manufacture, the design of equipment for manufacture, the improvement of established manufacturing techniques and the development of new ones.

WHY CONSIDER THE PROGRAM?

1. The Society of Manufacturing Engineers (SME), one of the leading professional societies in the country, has determined that manufacturing engineers will be in increasingly short supply in the future. This is because one of the country's major tasks is improving industrial productivity and industry will be looking for people who will be able to help in this important work.

2. Last year fifty-nine percent of the companies who interviewed on Campus were looking for engineering graduates.

3. As a result of the rapid expansion of the manufacturing research program at the University of Massachusetts, several excellent research assistantships are now available. These assistantships have stipends ranging from $3,200 to $5,000 per year plus waiver of tuition.

Those mailbox blues

By RON CHAIT
MDC Special

"Oh, geez...not again!"

Suddenly a loud bang is heard reverberating through the dormitory mail room, the tell-tale crash of shoe leather versus mailbox metal.

"What's the matter, Phil?"

"No mail!" he laments, grasping his foot in contorted pain. "Haven't got a letter in three weeks!"

"Oh, that's a bummer. Maybe you should write back."

"Yuh, maybe you're right," mumbles Phil, on his way to the Infirmary now for an Ace bandage. "Maybe you're right."

Phil is not alone. Thousands of students on the UMass campus suffer daily from the throes of an empty mailbox. It is an ailment which up till now has no official medical title. But it's there.

Particularly vulnerable is that creature known as the freshman. Says Julie Frank, "I got a postcard from Switzerland today, but all I ever get from home is the church newsletter." To the freshman, any form of correspondence (even from the Swiss Alps) is a sign of recognition, an indication that someone knows you're here.

The importance placed on receiving mail can reach epidemic proportions. A scene of thirty or more persons waiting outside the mail room for their telephone bills is not uncommon. Rich Hebert (a senior who holds the record for most crank mail received in one week) says, "I'm pragmatic. I like my mail on time."

mdc feature

How is it that some people get mail on a semi-regular basis?

"I have 63 pen pals."

"I write to myself."

"I threaten my friends."

"I take a lot of surveys."

The general consensus is that to get mail, you must sent mail. Letters breed letters. The problem is too do so in a consistently interesting style.

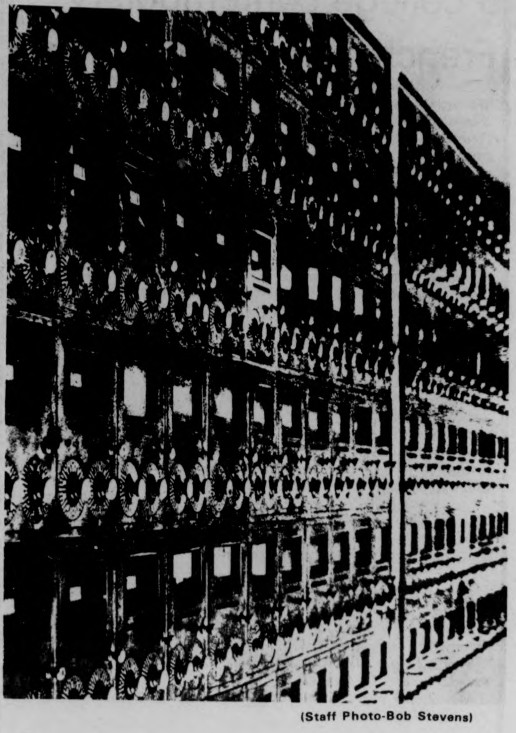
Some people find it easier to write outside. Others get inspiration from standing on their heads. Boring lectures are a great place, though no one has yet been seen carrying stationery and headphones to class.

Jim Ford of Sylvan recommends the following: "You sit down with a glass of sherry in one hand and a pipe in your mouth. The music of Beethoven's ninth is playing in the background, and you've just had two or three 'magic' brownies. Then you're set. Carefully selecting a back page from a psych, notebook, you begin your letter by the light of several oil lamps. The results are amazing."

It has been suggested that perhaps someone on campus should start a correspondence club. In this way, everyone would get mail. There would certainly be less incidences of strained tendons resulting from kicked mailboxes.

Maybe, just maybe...

The loneliness of the long distance correspondent can be remedied. All it takes is a little discipline. A letter a day won't keep the doctor away, but it's bound to cure those mailbox blues.



(Staff Photo-Bob Stevens)

Nixon's future "in the people's hands"...

Dellinger told the Collegian that President Nixon would probably not complete his term in office, but warned the President was only a sympton of the American system's wrongdoings.

"The impeachment itself will be a coverup of crimes performed before Nixon was in the White House. The danger is that we'll get rid of Nixon like we did with Lyndon Johnson and allow the rotten system to continue," he said.

"If things continue to go the way they are, he's finished. Nixon is going to go one way or another. People used to say they wouldn't buy a used car from this man. Well I wouldn't take a used Ford from him now either."

He said peoples' problems are not addressed by a corrupt administration because they remain fragmented.

"But don't forget; all of the fragments make the whole. Impeachment is the force of unity," he said.

The movement which began getting civil rights is now developing into the movement for the rights of all. We are going to impeach Nixon and keep on moving. Right on!"

John L. Fisher of Northampton called today "a perfect one for impeachment." Eighty degree temperatures and sunny skies favored the demonstrators.

Fisher, a member of New American Movement, a leftist pro-socialist organization of approximately 2,000 nationally, dared the President to visit Massachusetts.

"Let Nixon come to Harvard Square and he will need 15,000 soldiers to protect him, Fisher said.

"There are evident signs in this country that people are angry, boiling mad at this super swindler a violator of the U.S. Constitution — Richard Nilhouse Watergate."

Chants of "Jail to the chief" and "Throw the bum out" could be heard as the demonstrators marched from the Washington monument area to the mall before the capitol...

Speakers at the main rally included Dellinger, Rep. Parren Mitchell (D-Md.), Dolores Huerta, vice president of the United Farm Workers, and Beulah Sanders of the National Welfare Rights Organization.

Miss Huerta rapped "the vast ignorance of the American voter," and insisted "we make damn sure we never put the likes of Tricky Dick in the White House again."

Calling his greatest crime "racism", she said the American people "just didn't bother to look at the record of Richard Nixon."

Rep. Mitchell said Watergate was an indication of America's greatest danger, "the beginning of fascism."

The rally's chief sponsor was the National Committee to Impeach Nixon. Other groups included Youth International Party (yippies), Youth Against War and Fascism, the United Farm Workers, the Attica Brigade and a faction calling themselves the Patty Hearst Bridage.

The otherwise peaceful gathering was marred late in the afternoon when a contingent of several hundred persons broke from the rally area, ran five blocks to the Justice Department and hurled rocks and bottles through the windows there.

At least two arrests resulted from the scuffle between demonstrators and police that followed.

Folk singer Phil Ochs and Blue Grass entertained the crowd with an afternoon concert.

His repetoire of songs included "Here's to the Land of Richard Nixon." And the crowd joined in with the chorus "Here's to the Land you've torn out the heart of; Richard Nixon, find yourself another country to be part of."

NUCLEAR POWER PLANTS

...towns reap benefits, face hard questions

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

VERNON, Vt. [AP] — When Erma Puffer sits down to have her morning coffee, she looks out her kitchen window past the green Vermont countryside for a column of white vapor.

"When I see the vapor, I know the plant is operating today," the 52-year-old grandmother says quietly. "The vapor is noticeable, but it's really not that bad. It's harmless, and I'd rather see that than blacks smoke rising from some factory."

The plume of white vapor rolling through the hills is the most obvious sign of an industry in Vernon. And that industry, which is the new life-blood of the town of 1,200, is Vermont's only nuclear power palnt.

Controversial atomic power plants like the one in Vernon and one two states away in Wiscasset, Maine, have brought unprecedented prosperity to the small towns in which they are located. The plants assume much of the property tax load.

And that prosperity has forged a kind of love affair between the townspeople and their nuclear neighbors.

The benefits have been more meaningful so far than the theoretical disasters predicted by nuclear power critics. The support of townspeople for their atomic benefactors seems firm as they enjoy new schools and minimal taxes.

The 540,000 kilowatt Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Plant brought with it a continuous vapor cloud in cool weather from reactor water cooling towers. But it also brought Vernon's first paved sidewalk, a town hall-library complex and a sprawling 28-acre recreational development, complete with swimming pool and tennis courts.

The people of Wiscasset and Vernon are well-totored about nuclear power because of extensive media coverage and well-organized public relations campaigns by the power companies. They show unusual savvy about complex subjects like thermal pollution, nuclear wastes and atomic fuel.

Small groups of environmentalists and other nuclear power plant opponents, similarly well versed, are to be heard in both communities. The opponents admit that the majority of the townspeople support their local power plants because of the economic advantages.

Diana P. Sidebotham of Putney, Vt., president of the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution, says her group opposed the $217 million Vermont Yankee plant since the late 1960s when construction began. The coalition fought the plant through many U.S. Atomic Energy Commission AEC licensing hearings and has been a constant critic of Vermont Yankee's numerous technical problems since the plant went into commercial operation in November 1972.

"Vermont Yankee has not been operating well and has been labeled as a lemon in some newspapers," Mrs. Sidebotham says. "Since it became operational, Vermont Yankee has kept itself on the front page with continual problems, outages and small accidents.

"We couldn't stop the plant, but we are going to stay on Vermont yankee to the end, acting as a watchdog to keep it going as well as possible and pointing out the mistakes as they come up."

And the troubles with the plant have been frequent. Vermont Yankee has closed down 17 times in its 20 months of operation, according to company records.

While a handful of the shut-downs have been for routine tests, most have been because of accidents, faulty parts and equipment failures. A company spokesman admits that the track record has not been one to boast about, but he says: "It's not as bad as some."

But despite the problems, it appears that few Vernon townspeople have defected to the opposition.

Faith in technology getting the bugs out of plants hold for such long-range bugs as getting rid of nuclear wastes from nuclear fuel and contaminated material.

The question of communities accepting nuclear plants becomes even larger when considering that the nuclear industry wants to have 150 reactors in operation supplying more than 20 per cent of America's electricity by 198.

The AEC says there are 42 operating plants today, 56 under construction and 113 more in various stages of planning. And the AEC predicts that by the year 2,000 there could be 1,000 nuclear plants producing 60 per cent of the nation's electricity.

Because nuclear plant construction near large, populated areas has been discouraged in many quarters, many of these plants probably will spring up near small towns like Montague, where Northeast Utilities wants to build twin nuclear plants.

And these towns probably will be in for much of the local infighting that came to Vernon and Wiscasset.

Supporters of nuclear power in several small communities with existing plants complain that most opposition came from small parts of the local citizenry bolstered by groups of noisy "outsiders" from large cities, college towns like Amherst, or recent arrivals in the smaller communities who maintain some of their city ways.

"Most of the opposition came from people who live out of town," said Eunice Dow, a Wiscasset housewife and salesclerk who favors the plant there. "The flap came from outsiders who didn't benefit.

Nuclear power critics say that people in small communities don't always have the expertise at the beginning to deal with the implications of nuclear power. The critics say their role, in some cases, was to "seed" local questions about atomic power, but in most cases the outside opponents served to back up or boost already existing local opposition.

Communities across the country should be getting their own versions of the debate in coming years as the nation looks to nuclear power as a way out of future energy dilemmas.

...predicting plant safety

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. [AP] — Let's say you are concerned about your pants falling down. You don't know that it's going to happen but you can't say it won't.

You have your tailor put elastic in the waistband. You wear a belt. And then you put on a pair of suspenders.

Clarence Lautzenheizer, who directs an advisory program for quality assurance in nuclear power plants, uses the pants analogy to portray safety techniques built into nuclear power plants.

Lautzenheiser's Southwest Research Institute, says it does more quality assurance inspections for such plants than another organization in the world.

About 100 nuclear engineers from the United States and abroad spent last week studying safety in a conference here.

Lautzenheiser, 52, who once piloted crop dusing planes before he pursued metallurgy at MIT, says the concept of safety in the nuclear power plant industry is approaching the definitive cencepts instituted to protect men in space.

Like procedures of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Lautzenheiser says nuclear power plants have "redundacies" in design.

"You don't put in one safety system," he says. "You put in two and three and four. If one failed, you got two or so to go."

Or, in other words, if the suspenders pop, the belt and the elastic still holds up the pants.

Safety is a key issue with critics of the expansion of the nuclear power plant industry. It is also a key issue with the Atomic Energy Commission, which requires the design redundancies.

"The more quality assurance your demand, the higher the price," says Lautzenheiser, a vice president of a non-profit organization which may get as much as $250,000 for assisting nuclear power plants that cost a half a billion dollars.

"If you build a car with nuclear quality or NASA quality, you would faint" at the price, says Lautzenheiser.

"Of course, to the guy in the rocket, it's cheap. It's his life," he says.

Faculty salaries average $17,810 in U.S., AAUP says

WASHINGTON [AP] — The average college professor's salary rose to $17,810 in the current academic year, but faculty members actually lost ground economically, the American Association of University Professors reported last Friday.

The association's annual report on the economic status of the profession blamed "This gloomy upshot" on inflation, rather than a reluctance on the part of colleges and universities to grant increases.

"The average college and university professor had $271 less buying power this year as compared to last because of spiraling inflation," the report said. "This is in spite of the fact that during the 1973-74 academic year the average professor received salary and fringe benefit increases amounting to $979."

The report, released at the association's annual meeting here, noted that "while the average worker just about held his own, the average professor saw his purchasing power eroded by about 1.5 per cent."

More than 1,500 of the approximately 2,200 fully accredited colleges and universities participated in the annual association survey of faculty compensation. The participating institutions paid their faculty members a $5.31 billion, including $426.5 million in fringe benefits.

As in the past, the report said, church-related institutions paid less well than the others, and independent private universities paid best — one-fifth more than public institutions in terms of total compensation.

Professors at predominantly black institutions received an average level of compensation 10 per cent lower than their colleagues at other institutions, according to the report.

The report added that nationwide averages concealed significant differences in both salary scales and living costs. It said institutions in the Pacific Coast area were the highest paying, while those in the west south-central regions paid the least.

The survey also showed a wide spread between average compensation paid to faculty members of the various ranks, from instructor at the bottom level to full professor at the top.

The report said 5 per cent of the universities surveyed paid their full professors an average compensation of $29,770 or more, while 20 per cent of the universities reported average salaries of full professor at less than $21,620.

For instructors at all types of institutions, 5 per cent received an average of $13,670 or more while 10 per cent received $9,490 or less.

The report said that, except in the case of two-year institutions, "There seems to be a general, but weak, tendency for the spreads to narrow — for the poorest paying 10 per cent to narrow the gap between their compensation scales of those of the best-paying 10 per cent."

N.E. farmers to slaughter cows in milk price protest

From Wire Services

SKOWHEGAN, Maine — About 100 pregnant Maine dairy cows are scheduled to be led to the slaughter today in Lyndonville, Vt. as part of a herd of hundreds of cows from the New England states to be killed in a protest of declining milk prices.

The protest has been organized by the National Farmers Organization (NFO), which contends prices are falling while costs are rising.

David Chamberlain, official of the NFO, said Friday the cows would be brought to the Lane Packing, Inc. in Lyndonville Monday and sold for beef.

He said the Main and Vermont effort was part of a nationwide NFO protest against falling milk prices. Earlier this week, about 400 cattle were sent to the slaughter houses in New York State near Utica in a similar protest.

Floyd Eller, assistant dairy director for the New England area, told an NFO meeting in Maine this week every member farmer is being asked to take one cow from their herds and send it to the packing plant.

Chaberlain said an identical request has gone out to NFO members in Vermont.

According to Chamberlain, the slaughtering protests have been staggered throughout the country to prevent glutting the beef market.

He said milk prices could drop as much as $1.50 a hundredweight this summer. He said the protest was needed to educate the public and some farmers to the plight of the dairy farmer.

The expected drop in milk prices, he said, is coming at the same time as record prices are being paid by farmers for feed grain, fertilizer, barbed wire and equipment.

"The farmer is hard pressed to stay in business when you have to borrow money for operating expenses," said chamberlain.

NFO dairy representative Donald St. Pierre of Rochester, N.H. said,

"The farmers are fighting for survival in order to get a price for milk that will reflect the cost of producing it."

Skowhegan dairyman David Kelley, said Saturday' "If this is effective nationwide we don't look at it as a financial loss by a financial gain."

Kelley said half on the cows could normally be expected to give birth to milk-producing heifers. He said the loss of one such cow would mean a sacrifice of some 12,000 pounds of milk annually for the farrner.

But Kelley said the slaughtered cows will be sold for beef and that each farmer would get back the dollar value of the meat.

"That runs to about 67 cents per pound," Kelley said.

He said the animals would be hauled today by tractor-trailer truck to Vermont, after they are picked up at Maine farms and collected at central points in maine.

The NFO began the slaughtering April 18 in Wisconsin and has continued it nationwide on a staggered basis so as not to depress the price of beef.

"New England is one of the last areas to go," Kelley said.

Rent control stalled

BOSTON [AP] — The legislation is going to be in a "pressure cooker" over rent control if it puts off a decision until early next year when the present law expires, according to Sen. Jack H. Backman (D-Brookline).

Backman commented last week on the decision of the legislature's Local Affairs Committee to further study proposals to renew the law next April.

Let us first extend rent control and then study it at the same time," he suggested.

Backman was joined by other Boston-area legislators in a pledge to do what they can to revive the measure this year. But they were not optimistic.

THey agreed with Backman, who said, "If rent control expires...rents will double and triple, evictions will clog our courts, the elderly will face disaster."

Under rent control, any city or town with a population of 50,000 or more may regulate rent levels. Boston, Cambridge, Brookline, Somerville and Lynn have implemented the law.

People right now are having trouble eating and paying for a roof over their heads," Rep. Melvin H. King, (D-Boston) said.

Linda Garcia of Weymouth from the Tenants First Coalition warned that if rent control is not continued, tenants would become militant.

She criticized the committee's decision to study the question further.

"What can they study? Can they stretch a social security check, how much can you eat on welfare.? Can they study what happens to a child with lead paint poisoning? Can they study the rats, the roaches?" she asked.

Teaching top choice by Gallup

PRINCETON, N.J. [AP] — The teaching profession is the top choice among college students, according to the latest Gallup poll.

Twenty-three per cent of the students interviewed chose careers as educators with 14 per cent choosing the medical profession, 2 per cent opting for business and 1 per cent preparing for law careers.

Science and research was next with 8 per cent, followed by arts and crafts with 7 per cent. The latter category reflects a new interest in threater, music and painting noticed in other recent surveys. This field was chosen by 9 per cent of college women and 5 per cent of college men surveyed.

The poll said social work has also increased its appeal among the students, providing further evidence of interest in what it called the 'helping professions." Six per cent of those questioned said they were headed for a career in this area.

Only six per cent of those interviewed were unable to give at least some indication of their general occupational plans.

UNIVERSITY YEAR FOR ACTION (UYA) is beginning its sixth program year at UMass and is working to expand experiential educational opportunities for the students of the Five-College area. UYA has designed the UMass 200 Practicum and special experiential education opportunities for students seeking to integrate within their academic programs a full year internship placement at public and community service agencies.

UYA Volunteers earn credits and receive a stipend while working full-time in a UYA sponsored agency in a pre-professional placement serving the needs of the citizens of Western Massachusetts.

The UYA Program invites all capable undergraduate and graduate students to apply for Phase VI Volunteer positions to begin on 17 June 1974 and continue for one year. Students from the professional schools are especially encouraged to apply because these students can apply their knowledge of an area in their placement in the community. A few positions may be open for a shorter term of service.

UYA Offers

a full year of academic credit a living allowance medical insurance
optional life insurance

EXPERIENTIAL EDUCATION IN PRE-PROFESSIONAL

PLACEMENTS

Students have many options to earn the 30 credits needed for undergraduates to participate in UYA. Some students arrange special credits through independent study, evening seminars, tutorials, practicums, internships, reading courses, field related coursework and "learning contracts". Students may also elect to take 1-15 credits of UMASS 200 Practicum which is the new arrangement passed by the Faculty Senate permitting students to receive credits for field experience.

The College of Arts and Sciences also offers a special 6 credit pass-fail interdisciplinary block in the Social and Behavioral Sciences for UYA Volunteers during the Fall and Spring Semesters. This block is divided into eleven (11) sub-sections to more closely align the course work with the actual field placement.

Students still have the opportunity to apply for UYA. Placements are still available in the following positions:

Area Activity Coordinator
Health-Nutrition Worker
Neighborhood Caseworker
Legal Assistants:
  Mental Health Law
  Housing Law
  Welfare Law

BDIC presents free jazz tonight

A free Jazz concert will be presented tonight at 8 p.m. in Herter 227 as part of Mosaic, a spring festival of the Arts which will provide a forum for the talents of students in the Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration (BDIC) program.

The concert will feature BDIC students David Dupont, trombone, Tony Tatum, tenor saxophone, Paul Driscoll, saxophone, Vincent Mitchell, guitar, John Betsch, drums, and Pat Thomson, vocals. They will be assisted by pianist Kit Walker and bassist Kenny Paynter.

Many of the pieces on the program were composed and or arranged by the students.

BDIC is a degree granting program at the University which offers an alternative approach to the traditional learning process by replacing existing majors with curricula created and designed by individual students under the sponsorship of a faculty member.

Mosaic, which will run today through Friday, will also include presentations of art, photography, music, film and dance. All these events are open to the public without charge.

Next time you see someone polluting, point it out.

It's litter in the streets. It's air that smells. It's a river where fish can't breathe.
You know what pollution is.
But not everyone does.
So the next time you see pollution, don't close your eyes to it.
Write a letter. Make a call. Point it out to someone who can do something about it.

People start pollution. People can stop it.

Your first tampon should be a Kotex tampon.

Because only Kotex tampons have soft, rounded ends... gentle insertion guides instead of two bulky tubes... and more protection than the leading brand. But the only way to be convinced is to let a Kotex tampon be your first one.

If it wasn't, here's a second chance.

For a trial size package of Kotex® tampons (5 tampons), a pretty purse container, and a very explanatory book entitled "Tell It Like It Is", mail this order form with 25¢ in coin to cover mailing and handling to:

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Ideas strike chord of response. Original thinking pays dividends. Visits, short journeys and relatives figure in important ways. Leo, Aquarius persons are drawn to you. Take initiative in making contacts. Present yourself--and product--in positive, confident manner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Money, collections, what you possess and basic values are emphasized. You are drawn in two directions and one could involve land investment. Key now is to observe, to check, to take inventory, to be positive that you are not building on castle of sand.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Lunar cycle is high; trust judgment, intuition. Spotlight personality, appearance. Go places--see and be seen. Popularity quotient increases. Social activity accelerates. You are provided with valuable information--for a song.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Restrictions are evident. Deal with them in calm, mature manner. Keep promise to one who is confined to home or hospital. Follow concepts of Golden Rule. Aquarius, Leo, Scorpio persons may be in picture. Your timing will be on target.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Accent is on friends, hopes, gains through professional or business endeavors. You deal with opposite sex. You make significant changes. Your ability to analyze and draw accurate deductions is highlighted. Gemini, Virgo persons figure prominently.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Diplomatic report with one in authority is essential. Be receptive, especially where Taurus, Libra individuals enter picure. Advancement is made--but you have to co-operate, including acceptance of overtime assignment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are able to examine motives, to confront yourself, to see in light of reality. There is element of mystery--but you can use it to advantage. Don't reveal all. Keep something in reserve. Someone is trying to get something for nothing--from you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Pressure is applied. Some around you "smell" money. Study Libra message. Keep confidences. Gain full understanding of partner, mate. Budget can be discussed intelligently, without rancor. Delve beneath surface indications.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Slow pace. Be a keen observer. Spotlight is on public relations, partnership, co-operative effort--and marriage. Relationship is tested. Phase of activity ends. You are on brink of new beginning. Aries, Libra persons figure prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Vitality makes somewhat of a comeback. Pursue fresh viewpoint. Refuse to be tied down in aura of discouragement. Improve relations with associates, co-workers. Innovations now will be received in enthusiastic manner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Good lunar aspect coincides now with romance, creativity, change. Children, members of opposite six are in picture. Dramatize beliefs--illustrate point of view. Self-expression is of paramount importance to successful conclusions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent is on home, basic issues, property values. Examine various possibilities. You feel restless, restricted. But you also meet people who can aid in expanding horizons. Be open, willing to learn and experiment. Dynamic associate will show the way.

Football's new look

Dick MacPherson, head football coach at UMass, and Chuck Fairbanks, of the New England Patriots, could be seen by many of the spectators at Saturday's Red-White football game as they climbed the stairs to the Press Box to watch the sow.

"Why was Fairbanks there?" you might ask. "Well, it was, in effect, the unveiling of the new UMass look in football and a rehash of Oklahoma's Golden Era that functioned around a thing call the Wishbone Offense.

There was more noise coming from the playing field and sidelines than in the stands which would substantiate the rumor that other than the high school and college coaches attending the clinic, most of the crowd was out enjoying the sun rather than the football game itself.

It was a perfect excuse to can that chem book for a six of Bud and go drinking to catch a glimpse of T.D. (Walter) Parker doing his thing again. That old dance of yesteryear hasn't changed a bit.

And he wasn't the only one who looked good as Eddy McAleney pranced and danced to the tune of 'Hello, I love You' in wrapping up Red's quarterbacks on more than one occasion throughout the afternoon.

For those who have followed UMass football throughout recent history, many a familiar face could be seen in the crowd.

Billy DeFlavio, now property of the New York Stars of the World Football League, was on hand with well-tanned forearms the size of a normal man's calves. He is the first UMass grad to have the dubious honor of playing for the first female general manager in football, namely Dusty Rhodes.

Paul Metallo was there, but he was working on the sidelines so that doesn't count. Oh, in case you missed the mid-Winter report, he is headed for the Land of Lombardi in hopes of making it through that final cut. "It's the roughest one to take, let me tell you," he said at his apartment that night.

Sure it was nice to see all the old aquaintances in these guys and Tommy Mullen, Dennis Cunningham and more, but they are out of the history books now and one must turn to the new chapters of UMass football that were being previewed Saturday afternoon.

"You wouldn't believe the changes from last year, Broph," said Captain McAleney Friday night. "It's a totally different ballteam...attitude and all. We are going to be winners!! B.C. and all!!!"

It's tough sitting on the other side of the fence from where I was for two years running. I st there nervously and focused my attention on the men I knew from the past but still kept my eyes peeled for any new light that beckoned to be seen.

A lot of it shone through as Mac had said it would the night before. A BIG offensive line for a change was especially pleasing to this eye. Granted they were split up on two squads but they were there and that is the important thing.

And there will be a different sticker on the helmet next Fall with a Minuteman standing proud and tall over a map of the Bay State.

Steve Schubert has signed with the New England Patriots after weighing a pro football career as opposed to other possibilities. The wide receiver led the ACL in TD receptions last year.

Mackler: get it straight

To the Sports Editor:

I would like to direct this letter to Linda Mackler, whose response to my commentary, (which appeared in last Tuesday's Collegian), made me question whether Ms. Mackler fully understood its theme, since in her letter she discussed the plight of the woman athlete in society, while my commentary dealt with the athletic policies here at UMass and why they were not meeting the needs of the female athlete in previous years.

I'm sure that if you, Ms. Mackler, were to carefully reread the first paragraph of the commentary in question, you would find that I was referring to the trials and tribulations of the female athlete "entering UMass". In that same paragraph I clearly pointed out that the opportunities for women athletes to participate in "well rounded intercollegiate athletic competition" were quite slim here at UMass.

If you were to kindly read on, you'd discover that the reason for this, in my opinion, was "the women sat back never initiating any organized demands or complaints against UMass's athletic program budgeting", therefore, playing the passive female role — their "primary downfall". I added that by playing this role, they allowed the university to continue its athletic policy which catered to the men's needs. Or, in other words, had the women provided the necessary leadership, thus initiating demands, the university would have been forced to respond, as they have in the past five years (see para. 5).

No where in my commentary did I attempt to sift out the underlying reasons causing the women's athletic apathy. I was simply trying to deal with the issue of the women athlete's role here at UMass and how it relates to the university's athletic policy and programs offered for women. That, Ms. Mackler, was the theme of my commentary, that you seemed confused about, since your letter dealt with an entirely different theme.

As far as your letter is concerned, congratulations. I agree fully that the female athlete in society must hurdle many more obstacles than simply her defeatist attitude. Your journalism did a fine job of informing people of the plight of the woman athlete in society and at low educational levels, while mine attempted to make UMies aware of the university's openness and willingness to respond to the leadership and demands of its female athletes. Unfortunately our themes did not jive.

In conclusion, Ms. Mackler, next time, why not practice better journalism by getting your themes straight before responding to commentaries?

Sincerely,
Katie King

Sign gymn petition

To The Sports Editor:

For the past few days, members and friends of the men's gymnastics team have been roaming through the Campus Center and Student Union circulating petitions calling for the State Education Department to create a position for the State Education Department to create a position for a varsity gymnastics coach. I urge each of you reading this to sign their petition.

I feel that the UMass Athletic Department acted irresponsibly in making the decision to fire Tom Dunn. Although Coach Dunn is only three years out of college, he has done a remarkable job with the men's program.

While much of the publicity has been given to All-American Gene Whelan, UMass has many other fine athletes on the men's gymnastics team. While the team finished fourth in the Eastern's this past season, they weren't too far behind Penn State, who won the tournament.

The Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League is probably the toughest in the nation. UMass has shown that they can compete with the best of these teams.

In addition, gymnastics has recently grown into a big spectator sport, one that outside spectators are willing to pay money to see. For three or four home meets per season, this could help pay expenses. Maybe not $20,000 but maybe $500.00-$800.00.

$20,000 isn't much when it comes down to keeping a team. And the University can certainly afford to have Coach Dunn on the state payroll

I know that inflation is catching up to athletics, but it shouldn't be a reason to start cutting down sports. UMass would be better off getting rid of the deadwood in every department.

Bill Walton Bowl preview

It's all over. The battle lines have been drawn. It'll be the Portland Trailblazers vs. the San Diego Conquistadors in the Walton Bowl.

Two years ago the Blazers led off the NBA draft and chose Larue Martin. The Blazers aren't going to blow it this time.

However, if Bill Walton goes to the ABA with San Diego, he may be richer. Rumor has it that the red-haired All-American boy will be the first player-part owner of a team. The Q's (that's what people call San Diego) have been in financial straits recently. Their owner, a black dentist named Leonard Bloom, had to divest himself of another team he controlled — the Los Angeles Sharks in the World Hockey Association. (The Sharks have since moved to Detroit.) Bloom also has another guy on his basketball team named Wilt Chamberlain, who will be eligible to play next year, commanding a $600,000 annual salary for sitting on the bench while coaching.

Walton has already said that money means nothing to him. Bob Wolf, an NBA writer for the Sporting News, gave his reasons why Walton will sign with Portland. According to Wolf, Sam Gilbert (Walton's lawyer) would prefer the tall stringbean to go to the NBA. It was Gilbert who brought two other UCLA grads into the senior circuit, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Sidney Wicks. Wicks, who played in Walton's sophomore season is currently with the Blazers. Jabbar, then known as Lew Alcindor, also was offered a handsome package to join the New York Nets five years ago. Alcindor had grown up in the New York area and here was his chance to play in his own backyard. But, he went to unfamiliar land in Milwaukee. Walton would also like to play in Southern California — his backyard. But, according to Wolf, Bill is the outdoors type and might like a change of scenery in the Pacific Northwest.

Five years ago the ABA had no national television contract. They still don't. A rumor circulated that ABC, which had the NBA rights up until this year, would hook on with the ABA if Walton chose to go there. However, ABC's Sunday Wide World of Sports is outdrawing both the NBA and NHL telecasts (the meat and potatoes sports) on the rival network.

The whole brouhaha is being caused by a 6'11" showoff. Unfortunately Walton has an ego as high as Mount Rushmore. After he scores a basket, he flails his arms all over the place as if to say, "Look at me, I'm cool." UCLA lost four games this year and after each one Walton hid in the dressing room, refusing to talk to writers. Walton was available after UCLA victories. Walton is too proud of himself. The clincher came on the recently televised Gillette Cavalcade of Champions Awards Whow hosted by Bob Hope. Walton was the declared winner in the category of amateur-collegiate sports. The big boy refused to show up so his coach, John Wooden, accepted. How many times in the past have you seen a member of the losing team come out and compliment the winner? Two years ago, minutes after the final horn had sounded, Coach Emile Francis whose New York Rangers had just lost the Stanley Cup to the Boston Bruins, showed his class by being the first man in the post-game interview room to praise and give credit to the Boston Bruins. What did Bill Walton ever say about Monte Towe, Tom Burleson, and David Thompson? Not a damn thing. Bill Walton cries and goes into hibernation when he loses.

Bill Walton is the tallest baby in the United States.

"Visitors" win red-white grid game, 16-6

By WALT POWERS

OH, it was a horror show.

Here was the 1974 version of the UMass football team fumbling 11 times.

Here were Piel Pennington's replacements, all five of them, being hit behind the scrimmage line seven times.

Here was a team shooting for the Yankee Conference football crown, missing point-after attempts, fumbling center snaps, and sputtering within spitting distance of the goal line. When the game was over, the 300 or so that had stuck around Alumni Stadium saw a scoreboard that read: Visitors 17, home, 6.

A Dick MacPherson nightmare?

Hardly, considering that all those offensive mistakes were forced by the UMass defense. This was the annual red-white intrasquad game, and the fans who wandered into Alumni stadium on a beautiful sun-kissed Saturday afternoon got a free sneak preview of a UMass grid squad that should be improved defensively and much more potent in the running game on offense this year.

The game was the climax of spring football practice, and in general Coach Dick MacPherson was pleased with the results.

"The main objective this spring was to bring the squads together", said "Mac", "and we've accomplished it. It's been a great spring, and a lot of fun."

Specifically, MacPherson was able to evaluate the capabilities of his personnel and experiment with different patterns of offense and defense. He like what he saw.

"Our running backs should be much better," he said "right now we have five or six running backs of high quality, and or offensive line looks better." A question mark could be the much maligned Bob Wolfe. Wolfe played while hurt last year and is scheduled to have a cartilege operation, but MacPherson expects "no problems" with his recovery.

A seasoned core of seniors will make an improved defense — if they can remain healthy. Bill Cooke has been moved up to defensive tackle and along with Dennis Fenton should strengthen the front line. Paul St. Onge has been moved back to his linebacking slot and the secondary is stronger.

Last year UMass lived by the pass — and was killed by the run. Look for a multimensional offense this year, with more quarterback option plays. The zone defense was utilized this spring-look for it in the fall.

And oh yes, the game. Since the basic purpose of these things is to give everyone a chance to prove themselves, it would be unwise to put much stock in the results. The four scoring drives were engineered by three different quarterbacks; four different players scored points.

The only scoring in a somnolent first half, came on a 45-yard Dan Starkey field goal that bounced off and over the crossbar with just 2:25 left in the first quarter, giving white a 3-0 lead. The drive started on the white 20 and the big play was a fourteen-yard run by Phil Roland.

Just 58 seconds into the second half, Fred Kelliher hit Mark Finnerty with a 35-yard touchdown pass, giving the red their only lead of the game. The extra point try was missed.

Seven minutes later Kelleher brought the red to the white one, but the drive died there.

On the first play of the fourth quarter quarterback Pete Colton, impressive all afternoon, pegged a short pass to Walt Parker who beat everybody in a 25-yard race to the goal line.

Quarterback Frank DeFillippo's one yard sneak on fourth-down made it 15-6 white with only 1:04 left, capping a 9-play, 53-yard drive. Running backs Bob Wronski and T.J. Edmonds were the workhorses of the drive. Dan Starkey kicked the extra point.

Running plays dominated the action throughout the contest, but MacPherson said later that he felt his running attack was more explosive than they showed in the game. Though the pitch-out saw more frequent use than in the past, the most successful plays were run straight up the middle.

When it was all over though, it was hard to escape the feeling that the story of this spring would not be told by statistics from an intrasquad football game. The story was told in the attitude.

"You have to pay the price to win" said MacPherson in the locker room afterwards "last year we found out what that price was. A team has to be "together to win and I think this spring we were".

ANOTHER ACPHERSON NIGHTMARE? Quarterback Brian McNally is nailed for a loss in Saturday's game, but the man who's doing the nailing is all-Conference defensive end Ed McAleney.

JV hitters belt New Britain, 10-1, stay undefeated

By BOB HIGGINS

The junior varisty baseball team remained undefeated Saturday as they defeated New Britian (Ct.) High School 10-1, in a game which was much closer than the score indicates.

Now 5-0 on the season, the Minutemen have outscored their opponents by the awesome total of 53-13.

Mark Battista, a fireballing freshman just down from the varsity, received the win for the team, though he pitched just three innings. Coach Jeff McKay tried to give his pitching staff some work as Jim Witherell pitched the first three innings, Battista the middle three, and Gus Bedard the final three.

New Britain got their only run in the first off Witherell on a leadoff single, a stolen base, and another base hit. But that was it for their offense, as nobody got past second after that. The UMass pitchers gave up just one hit the rest of the way, and struck out 17 in the process.

Still, it took some time for the UMass offense to begin to roll. They scored one run in the first, but were then held scoreless until the fifth. The first run came on a Jim Kearney single, a walk to Steve Wright, and a run-producing single by the offense hero of the day, designated hitter Tom Shillale. Shillale collected four hits and three RBI's on the day.

The Minutemen scored another run in the fifth on Bevel Cumming's infield hit, a sacrifice bunt by Jim Cullen which sent Cummings all the way to third, and another RBI single by Shillale.

They finally broke the game open in the sixth. Paul Abramowicz led off with a walk, and Tim Foltz singled him to third on a perfect hit-and-run play. Abramowicz then scored on Mike McLaughlin's bunt single. John Kearney then doubled home another run, and Bevel Cummings hit a sacrifice fly for another. After Cullen walked and Wright singled, Shillale singled home Cullen for his third RBI and the score was 6-1.

The Minutemen added in the seventh and two more in the eighth, making the final score 10-1. Coach McKay commented after game, "I was very pleased with the way we played. We're hitting well, and doing a lot of the little things like the suicide squeeze (in the seventh) and the hit-and-run. And our pitching has been tremendous."

Fast breaks fell Bucks, 98-83

By MIKE O'BRIEN
AP Sports Writer

MILWAUKEE [AP] — The fast-breaking Boston Celtics, behind 26 points by veteran John Havlicek withstood a second half Milwaukee rally for a 98-83 victory Sunday and a 1-0 lead in the National Basketball Association championship playoffs.

The second game in the best-of-seven series will be played here Tuesday night.

A three-point play by Cowens with 2:55 left made the score 89-75 and wrapped up the victory as the Celtics weathered a 35-point barrage by Milwaukee's 7-foot-2 Kareem Abdul Jabbar, the NBA's Most Valuable Player.

Bob Dandridge, who had averaged 21.2 points as the Bucks took just nine games to win their first two playoff series, was held to eight points until the final minute. Dandridge was guarded most of the time by the 35-year-old Havlicek.

Cowens, five inches shorter than Jabbar, sank most of his shots from the top of the key of the side, including three in a row midway through the first quarter when Boston broke an 11-11 tie and took a permanent lead.

Cowens' outside shooting forced Jabbar away from the defensive basket opening routes to the hoop for the hard driving Celtics.

Boston broke to a 35-19 lead after one quarter, widened it to 17 points early in the second quarter and held a 67-52 lead with 5:09 left in the third period.

But the Celtics managed only two more points the rest of the period, while a jump shot by Dandridge and a pair of field goals by reserve Mickey David sparked a comeback that brought Milwaukee to 69-63 in the first minute of the final period.

However, a three-point play by Havlicek broke the dry spell. Paul Silas stole a Bucks' pass seconds later and sank a lay-up following a slick pass from Cowens as the Celtics broke the Bucks momentum.

Bruins pulverize Black Hawks, 6-2

CHIEF ON THE WARPATH — John, "Chief" Bucyk of the Bostons Bruins scores on Tony Esposito in last night's 6-2 Stanley Cup Playoff victory.

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Bruins pulverized the Chicago Black Hawks 6-2 Sunday night on two goals each by John Bucyk and Phil Esposito to take a 3-2 lead in their Stanley Cup semifinal series.

The Bruins can wrap up the best of seven series Tuesday in Chicago.

Esposito's two goals gave him a career total of 101 playoff points. He is the 11th player to pass the 100-point mark in National Hockey League history.

Bucyk, who also had an assist, drew first blood, beating Black Hawks goalie Tony Esposito off the right post at 15:13 of the first period. His goal capped one of the most dazzling stickhandling displays of the series as almost every Bruin on the ice got his stick on the puck before Greg Sheppard fired a pass to Bucyk on the left side of the net.

Bucyk's breakaway goal at 0:47 of the second period opened a five-goal Bruin blitz which put Chicago out for the count. Esposito and Dallas Smith added scores in the next two minutes and 48 seconds to make it 4-0.

Chicago got a goal back at 6:02 of the period when Cliff Koroll scored on a power play. Chicago's second goal came at 2:25 of the third on another power play goal by Pit Martin.

Esposito's second goal came at 6:50 of the second period when he beat his brother on the glove side.

Sheppard, who had two assists in the game, finished the scoring for the period at 17:25 with a 40-foot shot that also beat Esposito on his glove side.

The second period scoring surge spurred Chicago coach Billy Reay to left Esposito at the end of the second ppriod in favor of backup goalie Mike Veisor.

Red Sox nip Royals, 5-4

KANSAS CITY [UPI] — Cecil Cooper cracked reliever Doug Bird's first pitch in the 13th inning for a homer Sunday, enabling the Boston Red Sox to snap a five-game losing streak with a 5-4 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Dick Drago, 2-1, pitched 5 and one third innings to gain the victory while Bird, 0-1, also hurled 5 and one third innings in relief for the Royals.

Hal McRae had stroked a two-run homer off reliever Drago in the ninth to tie the score at 4-4. Jim Wohlford started the inning with a single before McRae pulled a Drago pitch over the wall about 20 feet inside the leftfield foul pole.

Dwight Evans of the Red Sox broke a 2-2 deadlock in the seventh with his second homer of the season.

The Red Sox padded the margin to 4-2 in the eighth when Bernie Carbo doubled and took third on a single by Evans. The two successfully worked a double steal, with Carbo sliding under the tag at home on the return throw by Cookie Rojas.

Fran Healy, cracking his second two-run homer in two days, spiked a Roger Moret pitch over the left centerfield fence in the second after John Mayberry had opened the inning with a single to give the Royals a 2-1 lead.

Rick Miller pulled a solo homer into the rightfield bullpen in the third for the Red Sox' first run, and Boston tied the game at 2-2 in the sixth when Mario Guerrero opened with a single, stole second, and scored on Doug Griffin's bloop single to right. Griffin's safety extended his hitting streak to 15 games.

Long weekend for golf, tennis, baseball

Batsmen drop doubleheader

By MIKE BROPHY

ORONO, Me. — The melting of the northern snows brought the Minutemen nothing but bad luck as they were felled by Maine twice on Sunday afternoon, 10-1 and 7-6.

The UMass pitching simply fell through as they surrendered a total of 27 hits in 18 innings of baseball. Add that to the five fielding miscues in the opener and three in the second encounter and it spells disaster.

The losses place UMass on the bottom rung in the Conference standings with a winless 0-4 mark. Maine is in running with a 5-1 mark while New Hampshire leads the pack with an untarnished 4-0 conference slate.

Game One

UMass was held scoreless through eight and one-third innings before Mike Koperniak singled to left and later scored on John Seed's single to left.

Craig Allegrezza lasted for four and one-third frames before being lifted by Bergquist having allowed seven runs on ten hits. He walked one and struck out two while on the hill. John McManus and Steve Merrill both saw action but neither looked good as more Maine runners kept crossing the plate.

Centerfielder Gary Smith (three for five on the day) for Maine and third baseman Dave Stetson (three for four with three rbi's and a sacrifice) were the major culprits for the Minutemen pitchers as they were rapping the ball all over the place, sending the UMass hurlers back to the bench in rapid succession.

Bert Roberge, the ace of the Maine staff and now 4-0 on the year, was instrumental in the lack of UMass hitting power as he kept the ball away from the UMass hitters consistently in striking out eight.

Game Two

UMass jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the top of the third inning but could not hold on to win despite a game tieing double by John Healy in the top of the ninth.

Healy led all UMass hitters as he had a three for five day with three rbi's. His double in the ninth inning highlighted a UMass comeback that brought them up from a 6-5 deficit.

Steve Merrill was the losing pitcher for UMass as he came in with one gone in the bottom of the ninth and served up a fat pitch to Bill Flagherty who banged it out over the right field fence for the game winning tally.

Jeff Reardon and Jerry Erb had seen action earlier in the game but had not fared well as three fielding errors behind them came at the wrong time.

"I'm proud of the way we came back in the second game," said Bergquist, "but it isn't enough. This team is better than we are showing."

Mike Koperniak continued to play sell and contributed his share for the second game with a solo blast that cleared the right field wall in no time flat.

But Ron Beaurivage led all UMass players in scoring as he crossed the plate three times while going two for three at the plate with an rbi.

Stetson again was the torch that set things afire in collecting a single, a double, and a homer in five at bats. His homer was a two-run job off reliever Erb.

There was no way that a nice dinner after the disaster could shorten the LONG bus ride home. Possibly getting back at Springfield College on Wednesday would ease the pain.

Racketeers lose Yankee Conference title...

By GLENN POSTER

KINGSTON, R.I. — With high hopes of coming home with the Yankee Conference title for the fourth straight year, the UMass tennis team finished in a tie for second to the school that took the title away, Vermont.

The Minutemen had taken the crown in five of the previous six years, but a strong Vermont team was not about to let UMass or anyone else get in it's way this time around. The Catamounts grabbed 18 points with UMass and UConn tying for the runner-up spot with 14 points apiece. Before the team left for the match, Coach Steve Kosakowski hit the hammer on the nail when he stated, "UMass, Vermont, and UConn will be the three top teams. The others won't even be a factor." He couldn't have been more precise. New Hampshire finished a distant fourth with 9 points and the host team, URI and Maine tied at the bottom with only one point apiece.

Bob Schpeiser, the number one Minuteman seed won his opening singles match earily handling Rhody's Bruce Coles 6-1, 6-2. Then Schpeiser went up against George Ulrich from UConn and fell in straight sets, 3-6, 6-7. Ulrich, who shared the tourney's doubles championship in 1972, went on to become this year's singles champ.

UMass claimed the number two singles winner. Don Douglas, undefeated all year, swept his two singles matches to aid the UMass cause garnering three points for his efforts. Douglas drew a bye in the first bracket, won his first match in straight sets and then went up against Vermont's Jay Moorehead. Douglas won the first set 6-4 and lost the second 1-6. The third went to a tie-breaker with Douglas emerging the winner 7-6. For the graduating senior, this was his second straight year of winning it all in his singles bracket.

Mark Brass, another senior, kept things going for the Minutemen by winning third singles. Brass, like Douglas, drew a first round bye. Mark then went to work, disposing of UConn's Don Mattran 6-3, 7-5. Brass then became the number three winner by coming behind after losing the first set in a tie breaker to put away UNH's Gary Scavongelli.

The UMass representative in the number four singles was Barnaby Kalan. Kalan had an easy time in his first match, beating Pete Young of UConn 6-3, 6-2. Kalan then lost in the finals of the number four competition (he too had drawn a bye) to Dick Hilmer from Vermont.

Fred Braley bowed out in the first round, playing in the number five slot. However, it did take UNH's Steve Krause three sets to win, 3-6, 6-4, 6-3. The eventual winner here was Larry Kahn of UConn.

Chris Post, playing number six, suffered the same fate as Braley. Post lost to the eventual winner in the first round, UConn's Georff Burnham, in straight sets. What was more frustrating though, was the fact that both sets were 7-6 tie-breakers.

Number one doubles had an interesting twist for the Minutemen. The team of Bob Schpeiser and Don Douglas drew a first-round bye. They were scheduled to face the winner of the match between the UConn and UNH number one representatives. UCConn won. So, in a preliminary before the semi-final on the courts (which was to be played Saturday) Douglas and Schpeiser met the Huskie duo in a card game at the Holiday Inn, where all the visitors were staying, on Friday night. I don't know who won the game but Schpeiser and Douglas won the match that counted 7-5, 6-1. The final was to be between UMass and the Hilmer-Moorehead team from UVM. Douglas had something extra going for him in 6this match as he and partner Ted Donahue had won the tourney doubles championship last year. But, this year it was Vermont, 6-4, 6-4.

In second doubles, the UMass tandem of Mark Brass and Barnaby Kalan won their first match, but lost to Vermont in the final, which clinched the crown for the catamounts as it was the first doubles match to end and UVM needed only one point in final round doubles.

...Golfers do the same

By RICH SEVIERI

Mark Plummer calmly sank a 12 foot downhill putt on Stowe Acre Country Club' hourglass shaped 18th green, and his University of Main teammates shook hands in quiet congratulations. Maine was now officially the new Yankee Conference golf champion, having dethroned defending champion UMass.

Plummer's putt was the last of 469 shots taken by Maine, 12 ahead of 2nd place finisher UMass at 481 UConn was third at 485. University of Rhode Island fourth shot 488. University of New Hampshire finished fifth with 491. The University of Vermont struggled in with 550.

In the 18 hole stroke-play format, the individual crown went to Kevin McGarry of UConn, who went 34-40 for a 74. A YanCon golf official said of McGarry's 34 front nine, "thats as fine a nine holes as anyone could shoot out there today." McGarry had 3 birdies and oen bogey on the 3500 yard, par 36, front nine of Stowe Acre's north course.

Mark Plummer of Maine was runner-up for the individual crown with a 76. Plummer was 4 over par after 3 holes, played the remaining holes even, to finish 4 over on the par 72 North course.

Joe Artman and Dave Kern of UMass tied for third with UMaine's Jim Karaleckas with 77's. Artman and Kern both 3 putted the 18th for bogeys.

Maine came into the YanCon Championship with a 4-2 overall record. UMass was 7-0. The difference in the two teams today was the surprising play of Maine's lower ranked players. Maine coach Skip Shappel expected strong performances from Plummer and Karaleckas, but a 78 by Maine's No. 5 man Jim Driscoll, a 79 by No. 6 Chris Emmons, and an 80 by Jon Kimball, was too strong an overall perform for UMass to make up.

Ken Stawacz and John Lasek had a pair of 81's. Dave Crochmal came back from a 43 front side to post an 82. Howie Terban, who was saddled with a 3 stroke penalty on the 10th hole, shot 83.

Around the Cup: The UMass golfers will travel to Dartmouth on Tuesday placing their 7-0 match record on the line. The 37th New England Intercollegiate Championships are Thursday and Friday at Manchester (N.H.) Country Club. There will be 18 holes of medal play each day with individual and team championships up for grabs.

"I don't think that we could possibly have shot as low a score as Maine did on this course today," said UMass coach Fan Gaudette. "They look like the team to beat in the New England's next week. They're depth today was very impressive."

Artman and Kern were the only Minutemen to break 80 on the demanding 6900 yard long Stowe Acres north course. A strong wind blowing throughout the day and no previous knowledge of the course meant trouble for other team members.

5 records fall at Penns

By SCOTT HAYES

Tony Waldrop all but stole the show at the 80th annual Penn Relays, but more importantly, UMass runners shattered five records and five members of the team qualified for the NCAA Track and Field Championships, to be held in Austin, Texas.

Waldrop toyed with the field of runners for three laps, and then showed the type of runner he really is, running the last quarter in a blazing 54 seconds for a 3:53.2 mile. In coming closest to Jim Ryun's seven-year mile record, Waldrop pulled along Denis Fikes, England's Ray Smedley and Carl Thornton, all of whom broke the four-minute barrier.

Paul Segersten, Randy Thomas, John McGrail, Bill Gillin and Tom Wilson, all members of the cross country team that won the New England championship, had sensational days also. All five harriers easily bettered school records and, should the Athletic Department vote to allocate money, a trip to Austin will be in store.

Thursday night was an indication of things to come during the fourteen-man squad's stay in Philadelphia. Paul Segersten and sensational freshman John McGrail (he sure doesn't run like a freshman) smashed the standard in the six-mile run, set by Segersten earlier in the season. "Segs" was timed in 29:02 und McGrail completed the grueling race in 29:04.2. Both runners bettered the old mark by more than a minute. Stoughton's super runner, McGrail, rearranged the freshman record book in finishing fifteenth, one place back of Segersten. Tom Maguire, the only other UMass runner in the six-mile, had a disappointing race, finishing the distance in 31:31.

To continue setting the record books straight, the shuttle-hurdle relay team of Curt Stegerwald, Jim Hennessey, Pete Famulari and Alan Suprenant lowered the old school record of 61.7 when he placed sixth with a time of 60.5. In finishing second behind Penn State, the hurdlers beat Princeton and Navy, and just missed reaching the finals.

The distance-medley team of Jack Maloney, Steve Crimmins, Bill Gillin and Devin Croft finished fourth in its heat of 12 teams. There were two other heats, but the real story was a fabulous 3:00 three-quarter mile by Gillin.

The four-mile relay foursome dropped the old record by 22 seconds. Thomas, Croft, Chris Farmer and Maloney combined for a time of 17:00.4. Thomas ran the fastest leg, a 4:12 mile.

On Saturday, "the most competitive runner on the team" according to Coach Mike Muska, chopped 37 seconds off the three-mile record. Randy Thomas — not only does he possess a great running ability, but also a competitive desire. A desire that helped him run close to six miles with one shoe at the NCAA Cross Country Championships in Spokane last fall. The desire was there again Saturday and Thomas refused to let the race get away from him. The result was another super effort, breaking the New England record set by Olympian gold medalist Frank Shorter. Shorter, the marathon winner in Munich, set the old record of 13:43 while competing for Yale in the Nationals. Although Thomas ran a 13:35 he doesn't own the New England record (one of the few records not belonging to Thomas). Harvard's Rick Rojas finished three places in front of Thomas in second with a time of 13:30.4. Thomas placed fifth, after taking the lead on the fifth lap. A group of about seven runners completed the first mile in 4:32 and the second in 9:06. Thomas said he felt good during the race and was in the pack until the last quarter. NCAA six-mile champ Charlie Maguire burned the last quarter in 58 seconds while Thomas was timed in 66. Maguire, older brother of Tom Maguire, won the event in 13:27.

And finally, Bill Gillin and Tom Wilson topped off a rather successful weekend with two excellent performances in the 3000-meter steeplechase. Gillin set an all time New England record by placing third in the steeple with a time of 8:51.6. The time is the fourth best in the nation so far this season. Teammate Wilson was right behind in fourth at 8:52.6 Gillin's second outstanding effort of the Relay's exlipsed Ben Wilson's old mark. Wilson, a runner from MIT, held the previous standard of 8:51.8.

RECORD RAMBLINGS — The crowd at Franklin Field was at least 50,000 including competitors. Paid attendance was estimated at 37,000. The huge crowd cheered on every event and helped the runners, along with the perfect weather. As one of the coaches said, "You just get pulled along by the competition and then you find out how good you really are."

Gorillas "devastate" Williams

By JUNIOR ELLIOTT

"It was a devastating attack", was the way that UMass lacrosse coach, Dick Garber, described his team's 21-1 shelling of Williams College on Saturday.

Garber's Gorillas started off slow in the first half in comparison to their efforts in the second half. They played well but they had a little trouble getting their offense going. The halftime score was 6-0 and coach Garber said, "We chipped in a few goals in the first half, but Williams had some excellent shots also. We got great goaltending which made the difference because with any luck the score could have been 6-3."

This was, by far, the Gorillas' best effort so far this season. The attack, midfield, and the defense played excellently but the superb goaltending by John Rutledge was probably the key to the whole game. Rutledge, with some help from his defense, held Williams scoreless for three periods, until he was replaced by Bobby Durland. Rutledge robbed Williams on some great scoring opportunities, and made a few passes to set up UMass goals.

It took the Gorillas almost four minutes to score their first goal. There was plenty of hitting and bodychecking by both teams in the first period, which apparently slowed down the game. UMass got on the scoreboard, however, at 11:24 of the initial period. Harry McVey dodged and danced behind the opponents net, beat his man, and then stuffed the ball into the net. McVey netted the eventual game-winning goal nine minutes later as he took a Peter Connolly pass from across the crease and popped it in.

The Gorillas returned in the second half to widen their lead. They promptly went out and scored ten goals in the third quarter. In that ppriod they played their best. Their passing, running, and stickhandling was excellent. These three aspects combined aided UMass in executing its fastbreak. The second half featured some great fastbreaks, none prettier than the one which resulted in the Gorillas' tenth goal of the game. The play started as goalie Rutledge threaded a pass to Hirsch Seidman, breaking up the middle of the field. Seidman fed the ball to attackman, Peter Connolly, who drew the goalie out of position, leaving Jeff Spooner with an open net into which he scored.

The second half also featured some great hustle. Midfielder, and tri-captain, Hirsch Seidman, with the Williams' goalie out of his net, chased the defenseman behind the net, checked the ball away from him and scored into an open net.

UMass continued firing at the Williams netminder, with the big funs being Seidman, Spooner, and McVey with 5, 4, and 3 goals, respectively. Williams could not stop the Gorillas' offensive attack, let alone score themselves. However with about three minutes left to play in the game, Williams finally broke the ice. The UMass goalie, Bobby Durland, was not to be faulted on this one, though. His team was down by two men and a Williams player was left open for the shot.

The next game for the Gorillas is at 3 p.m. on Monday against Amherst College. The game will be played at Amherst.

Nixon to keep tapes

WASHINGTON [AP] — Fighting to blunt impeachment moves, President Nixon said last night he would give a House committee and then make public edited transcripts of White House conversations that "will tell it all" in the Watergate scandal.

Sharply attacking the Senate testimony of his former counsel and chief Watergate accuser, John W. Dean III, Nixon traced for a national TV and radio audience his activities in the Watergate controversy.

He said he was waiving the precedent of executive privilege to make public the transcripts of dozens of private presidential conversations.

But he said such disclosure was necessary to prove to the public he personally had no knowledge of the Watergate break-in and did not participate in a subsequent cover-up.

The President said he would allow the senior Democrat and Republican on the House Judiciary Committee to listen to the tapes and verify that none of the deletions relate to relevant Watergate matters.

His action, Nixon said, would quash the "vague general impression of massive wrongdoing" in the nation's highest office. Nixon said he has nothing to hide, and the tapes will show it.

The President acknowledged that portions of the conversations are ambiguous because they are recordings of individuals "just thinking out loud."

"Never before have records so private been made public," he said, adding that he

Selectmen push NUKE motion

By BILL DENSMORE

The Amherst board of selectmen last night directed chairman Michael Sullivan to prepare a motion for the May 6 town meeting calling for a statewide nuclear moratorium on construction of nuclear power plants and a ban on transportation of radioactive materials inside Amherst.

Although no vote was taken, Sullivan agreed to prepare the motion at the request of selectwoman Nancy Eddy.

The action comes as Northeast Utilities' formalizes plans to seek Atomic Energy Commission approval for construction of $1.35 billion twin 850 kilowatt nuclear reactors in Montague, thirteen miles north of Amherst.

Governor Sargent is expected to announce major state policy on nuclear power at a press conference in the Campus Center tomorrow. Story, page 16.

Sullivan's motion is expected to clarify and consolidate Articles 41 and 50 on next Monday's town meeting warrant.

Article 41 requested by Sullivan, asks the town to seek a nuclear construction moratorium from the Legislature, "until a thorough investigation of the safety of such plants has been conducted and until all other means of producing energy have been fully explored."

Article 50, filed by town radical Eric Walgren's Human Rights Party (HRP), asks for a transportation ban, the creation of a town meeting-appointed Nuclear Radiation Advisory Committee, and a motion to oppose construction of nuclear plants in the Pioneer Valley.

A single motion to amend both articles is expected after Walgren and Sullivan agree on wording later this week.

Selectmen voted last month to appoint a seven-member advisory commission on nuclear radiation, but the meeting motion would grant direct authority to act on behalf of the town in regional and state nuclear planning.

Drought not only cause of famine in Africa

Campus groups continue to organize a one-day fast Wednesday to protest famines brought on by drought in Northern Africa. In the following analysis, Ethiopian graduate student Birku Menkir suggests the famine may be due more to politics than drought.

By BIRKU MENKIR
Black News Service

It has now been almost a year since a rampant famine in Africa began to take its heavy tolls. The imminence of a drought in West Africa and some regions of East Africa has been known for the last five years; at least, to the experts and government officials of several countries in Africa.

As if such a problem of this magnitude could be qished away, there non-people oriented government officials waited in utter silence for the famine to spread unimpeded, destroying tens of thousands of people and a corresponding number of cattle.

Even after the famine had developed into a full swing, disasterously spreading at an incredible rate, the problem was minimized and considered not serious enough to merit international attention.

News Analysis

In Ethiopia, Haile Selassie's government covered up the famine, aware of its political implications in and outside of Africa.

This government was so corrupt and unstable that it suppressed any information about the famine even to the extent of killing seventeen students who first informed the people of Wollo (a province of Ethiopia hardest hit by famine) that there were hundreds dying by starvation.

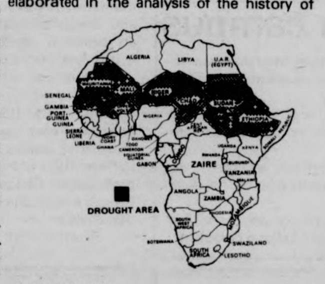
News of this human devastation in Africa trickled into the Western press only a few weeks ago. Likewise, people in this part of the hemisphere, either comforted themselves with the idea that they were far removed from the tragedy or went about their daily business in utter ignorance.

At any rate, since the famine exists independent of people's awareness, a brief analysis of famine in general seems long overdue.

To tell horror stories of dying people and lament about it is not enough. Like any other phenomena, the origins of famine must be scientifically studied and understood. Only equiped with this knowledge can human beings solve famine problems and prevent them in the future.

To ascribe famine conditions in Africa as a passing phenomenon is very incomplete and leads to a mechanistic approach of solving famine problems. Even though material things like food, medicine, and clothing alleviate this problem it does not have a lasting affect unless fundamental social, political and economic changes take place.

Side by side with a considerable agricultural surplus, sufficient to sustain a general subsistence, has co-existed famine situation. This was even much more true for some countries in Africa, where bumper crops on one side of the region and famine on the other have always had a "unity of opposites" character. Why a situation of famine amid a situation of plenty can be elaborated in the analysis of the history of every country.



Three broad conceptualizations roughly corresponding to specific modes of production have historically underpinned the attitudes of ruling classes in explaining any disaster, much less famine:

1) In analyzing the famine disaster in West Africa certain bourgeois persons carefully avoided the political, social and economic environs and presented the problem as the regions losing struggle against the environment. The encroaching Sahara Desert at the rate of thirty miles per year was said to prevail over the region's fragile ecological balance. Lack of rain, drought and ecological imbalance are the starting points of the bourgeois explanation of famine.

2) In societies like Ethiopia where the feudal priestly ideology pervades the terrain, the tiniest problem, which this ideology cannot explain, is associated with the anger of God and-or the evilhood of man.

This notion associates the origin of famine with the anger of God and leads its erstwhile adherents to prescribe "praying" as a necessary cure all. Those whose praying is heard in God's chamber can solicit his mercy and placate his anger. Die or live they will be saved. To a people gripped in a situation of mass starvation, totally lost as to the way out, such simple prescription, will, indeed, be a purposeful solace. Their death from hunger by the thousands can thus continue for many among the dead might enjoy heavenly bliss.

3) The other view which sharply contrasts and criticizes the other two concepts is the explanation, which seeks to understand anything, much less famine, from the material totality of the internal and external situations that precipitated the problem.

This conception criticizes the bourgeois viewpoint for its arbitrary exclusion of the socio-economic and political reality and its undue emphasis on the natural factor. The moment one begins to abstract the natural factor from the socio-economic reality, he succumbs to idealism. Adverse natural conditions operate differently in feudal, capitalist and socialist socio-economic structural frameworks.

The same conditions of drought tend to be much more severe in a feudal society than in a capitalist or socialist society. That is because although the drought originates from climatic factors, it transforms into a social problem governed by the logic and dynamics of class relations in the given society it occurs.

To put this viewpoint in a historical perspective, we need to elaborate on the genesis of famine from the earliest times.

There was a long period in history where no country can maintain immunity from famine flareups. This long historical epoch extends from the earliest times until the collapse of feudalism and the emergence of capitalism on a world scale. The onset of the Industrial Revolution heralded the emergence of machinery replacing capitalist manufacture based on the division of manual labor.

The Industrial Revolution, thus, inaugurated a qualitive change in the Summer tuition may go up

By LAWRENCE KORNFELD
MDC Staff

Unless the university can come up with a new source of funds, the tuition for the 1975 summer session will be doubled according to Bertha Auten of the Provost's staff.

Provost Robert Gluckstern has submitted a proposal to the Chancellor seeking approval of "self-funding" summer session.

To be "self-funding" the tuition will have to increased from $15-$30 per credit hour.

In the past the summer session has been paid for with operating funds left over from the regular school year. These funds have been dried up by a combination of inflation, the energy crisis, and the state's cut back of out budget.

Ms. Austen says they have not decided yet whether tuition will have to be increased.

Whitmore has yet to come up with any alternatives to the tuition increase.

"It's good for what it is, but...

The Bluewall's getting a new image"

By MARK KELLEHER
MDC Staff

There are physical renovations being planned for the Bluewall. The Campus Center has hired a design firm to offer some ideas on improving the physical decor.

They have proposed an emphasis on soft lighting and graphics for the 'new' Bluewall. There will be a new entry along with an enlarged dance floor. Attempts will be made to improve acoustics as well as breaking the room up into smaller sections with their own identity.

Other improvements that could be made right now are improved attire for the bouncers and barmen. Many people interviewed agreed that this attire could be in better taste.

But despite its shortcomings, the people who run the Bluewall are trying within severe budget limitations to improve the Wall's image.

Ed Vadas, the booking agent, admitted to the inappropriateness of the Wall for sound and dancing. "It could be better, I know, but considering our budget its good for what it is. There's only so much good mediocrity," he said, in regards to the entertainment schedule.

"We're seeking to have our budget raised so we can provide better entertainment. Since the cover charge was abolished we can only afford to pay two hundred dollars for a band on a weekend night."

He defended his record on bringing a fair amount of black music to campus, saying that of the forty-nine working days of this semester, twenty of them have been filled by what he considers black groups. Among the groups were the Machem Jazz Band, Some of My Best Friends and Real Tears.

As for future innovation, Vadas said he's open to suggestions. He plans initiating a weekly Jazz Night and also expanding the Celebrity Series in the Hatch. Whether its disco-dancing nights, soul nights, or whatever – Vadas says he is willing to give them a try.

With the crowding, there's no relief in sight. Hampden Dining Commons was given some consideration as a club to relieve the pressure on the Wall, but no one wanted a beverage operation down there.

The Bluewall means different things to people on campus. For those who frequent it in the afternoon or early evening, it's a place to relax, unwind, talk over the day's events with a few friends.

But come the night, the Bluewall conjures up a dichotomy of feelings. At its best, the Bluewall is for many patrons a 'place to go.' At its worst, the Wall has been described as a 'pit', a 'trap', even a 'den of iniquity'.

Many of the Wall's problems can be traced directly to its crowded conditions. With the exception of the Hatch and sometimes Hampden dining commons, many of the 10,000 students living on campus have nowhere else to go.

On a typical weekend night you can hardly move. The aisleways, often in darkness, are packed with people, and a source of irritation. Many women often find the trip to the bar can be a very excrutiating experience.

The loud music, distorted by a poor sound system plus the crowded conditions contribute to the rowdy atmosphere that people complain of. Communication is at a premium and even then at an effort.

For many, the night turns into a drinking affair and perhaps the weekend after as well.

The physical decor of the Wall doesn't add much of a good feeling either. After a hard weekend's use, the rug inside the Wall suffers from a hangover. A feeling of warmth is hard to come by.

Possible Pub occupancy violations to be checked

By MIKE KNEELAND

Amherst Building Inspector Chester Penza told the Collegian yesterday he will talk to the Pub's management about possible occupancy violations.

Located on East Pleasant St. in Amherst, the Pub is allowed to hold 201 people.

Penza's response came after being told of students' complaints of over-crowded conditions at the bar.

Penza said he visited the Pub "several months ago" and found no occupancy law violations.

Pub Manager Jerry Jolly, however, said Penza along with police "regularly" visit his bar checking the occupancy level.

"I believe I'm within reasonable limits," said the Pub Manager.

"Many times the Pub seems crowded because of the table arrangement," he said. He noted that when he has live entertainment and customers dance, the tables are bunched together and the bar might look more crowded than it actually is.

Jolly said there are three doormen who keep track of the number of people inside the Pub. When the bar becomes too crowded, he told the Collegian, one person is let inside for every person that leaves.

He said there was once a problem with occupancy when the drinking age was lowered to 18-year olds, but that every local bar had that same problem.

Some UMass students particularly complained of the Pub's big crowd after Saturday night's performance of the Great Pretenders there. Aisles were crowded as much as four people deep while others were standing in booths and sitting on tables to see the band perform.

There are three full exits at the Pub. Two are located at the rear and one is located in the front of the building.

Thefts reported on campus

Residents of Webster and Coolidge Dormitories have reported to police the loss of wallets and other articles on the weekend of April 19-21.

According to Sergeant Philip Cavanaugh, head of the UMass Detective Division, the stealing was done by three high school age males.

"We know that more students were ripped off that weekend," he said, "but they haven't come forward to file a report with us. It would help us a great deal with the case if they did."

Any students who were robbed that weekend, or any time, are urged to go down to the UMass police station and lodge a complaint.

Bicycle Officer appointed

William Griswold, an Institutional Protection Man, for the Department of Public Safety has been named Bicycle Officer effective last Friday, according to Saul Chafin, Assistant Director.

In the newly-created position, Griswold will be responsible for the recovery of lost and stolen bicycles on campus. He will also attempt to set up a closer rapport with local bicycle shops in an effort to trace down stolen bicycles.

Any students who wish information or who want to report a stolen bicycle should call 5-2121 during the day and 5-0893 after 3 o'clock.

Congressional Resolution
Proclaiming April 30, 1974
A National Day of Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer

Whereas, it is the duty of nations, as well as of men to owe their dependence upon the overruling power of God, to confess their sins and transgressions, in humble sorrow, yet with assured hope that genuine repentance will lead to mercy and pardon, and to recognize the sublime truth, announced in the Holy Scriptures and proven by all history, that those nations are blessed whose God is Lord; and

Whereas, we know that we have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of Heaven; we have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity; we have grown in numbers, wealth and power as no other nation has ever grown; but we have forgotten God; and

Whereas, we have forgotten the gracious hand which preserved us in peace, and multiplied and enriched us; and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own; and

Whereas, intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us; and

Whereas, we have made such an idol out of our pursuit of "national security" that we have forgotten that only God can be the ultimate guardian of our true livelihood and safety; and

Whereas, we have failed to respond, personally and collectively, with sacrifice and uncompromised commitment to the unmet needs of our fellow man, both at home and abroad; as a people, we have become so absorbed with the selfish pursuits of pleasure and profit that we have blinded ourselves to God's standard of justice and righteousness for this society; and

Whereas, it therefore behooves us to humble ourselves before Almighty God, to confess our national sins, and to pray for clemency and forgiveness: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled, that the Congress hereby proclaims that April 30, 1974 be a National Day of Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer; and calls upon the people of our nation to humble ourselves as we see fit, before our Creator to acknowledge our final dependence upon Him and to repent of our national sins.

Remember to Pray April 30, 1974

Athletics and financial aid

This is the final part of a six-part series on financial aid at UMass.

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff

Approximately $190,000 in scholarship money will be awarded to 150 UMass athletes next year.

Unlike other financial aid awards, these scholarships will not be based strictly on need but on athletic performance.

"It's all part of the University's policy of striving for excellence," Frank McInerney, Head of the Athletic Department told the Collegian.

"If UMass wants a Nobel Prize-winning chemist to do his research here, the University has the money to pay him: if UMass wants excellence in athletics, they award the top athletes," McInerney said.

Athletic scholarship money is kept in the G.H. Barber trust fund. (see related story). The money comes from a contribution, made through the chancellor's office, from non-student, non-appropriated funds; it is not part of Financial Aid Office funds.

In past years, the Board of Trustees appropriated $50,000 of campus vending machine money annually to the fund but this program has been phased out.

According to McInerney, the bulk of the scholarship money comes from gate receipts from at-home UMass athletic contests. The fund also receives a percentage of gate money for road games, payment for radio and TV broadcasts, proceeds from the concessions program and payment from the New England Patriots if they spend the summer on campus.

A breakdown of last year's $180,000 scholarship awards for men athletes follows:

Baseball awards	$9,400
Basketball awards	$27,000
Football awards	$110,000
Gymnastics awards	$5,600
Hockey awards	$17,500
Lacrosse awards	$2,600
Track awards	$2,700
Wrestling awards	$5,600

The breakdown of new monies for next year follows (scholarships to be awarded to students for the first time):

Baseball	$2,000
Basketball	$7,500
Football	$35,000
Gymnastics	none
Hockey	$6,000
Lacrosse	$1,000
Track	$1,000
Wrestling	$2,000
Women's athletics	$10,000

Each year after deciding how much money is needed to be awarded to how many athletes, each coach makes requests to McInerney and his staff who in turn make recommendations to the Athletic Council, a body made up of the Student Government Association president and five students appointed by him; seven fakulty members appointed by the committee on committees of the Faculty Senate; and eight members of the professional staff, at least three of whom must be alumni. McInerney sits on the council without a vote. The University Scholarship Committee must give the final OK in the process.

The Financial Aid Office plays no part in decision-making but processes all awards.

A women's athletic awards program will be funded for the first time next year. Previous to 1973, the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW), which regulates UMass women's athletics, ruled that students who received athletic scholarships could not compete with AIAW members. This regulation has been deleted.

In order to be considered for the women's awards, according to Dr. Betty Spears, Head of the Department for Physical Education for Women (WOPE), applicants must show athletic ability and financial need. All applicants must fill out both the regular Financial Aid Office applications and WOPE forms.

"Any financially needy woman athlete may apply," Dr. Spears told the Collegian, "but there is an athletic contribution expectancy."

Approximately ten women will receive awards; only fee and tuition money will be given in the fall.

Unlike coaches in men's athletics, the women coaches will not use their scholarship money for recruiting purposes.

Head Football Coach Dick MacPherson, who, with approximately $110,000 in award money has the largest sum of all the coaches to deal with, spoke with the Collegian about his recruiting and awarding practices.

Nine of MacPherson's recruits for the fall will receive full scholarships; altogether 16 new recruits will receive some money.

"The bulk of the new football awards each year go to the incoming freshmen," commented MacPherson "but, we try to take care of the upperclassmen too.'

When an incoming freshman receives a scholarship he is told that he will not lose it during his stay here unless he quits the team, flunks out or is blacklisted by his dean's office. A player who is injured and can no longer participate in his sport will not lose his scholarship.

Each year MacPherson and his assistants scout each of the 274 high schools in Massachusetts and a number of other New England, New York and New Jersey high schools. They look for the very best athletes.

When considering an athlete MacPherson looks for three things: 1.) athletic ability 2.) academic ability 3.) character. He never takes financial need into consideration.

He and his staff do not take a player's position on a team into consideration but rather, look for a player with speed.

When the scouting period ends, the staff members get together and view film clips of the possible candidates; after this the final decisions are made on who will be recruited.

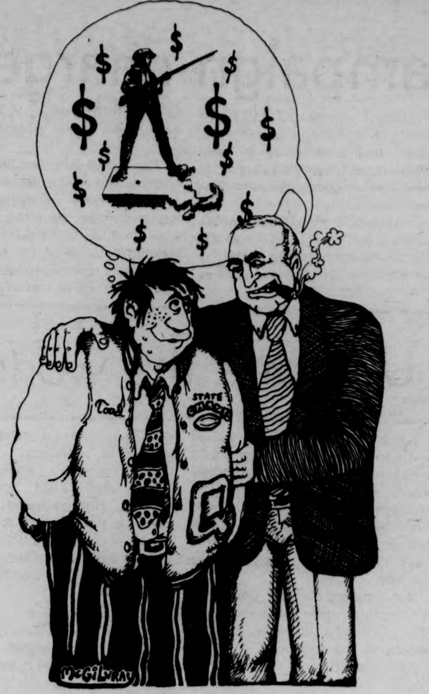
MacPherson contends that the only reason his recommendations for scholarship awards will be turned down is if he is recommending poor-quality athletes.

"We have the best chance at recruiting the high-quality, middle-income athlete who cannot afford an Ivy League school," said MacPherson.

"I'm glad we often reward the middle class athlete," he commented.

"I like to see success rewarded and it very seldom is in the middle class; only if you're very poor or very have rich have you got it made."

Talking about outside reaction to athletic scholarships he said, "I know people who don't have them don't think they're so great. I believe, however, that advisors in every department should act as the coaches do: helping and pushing their students."



The circle game

Who is G.H. Barber

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff

Next fall approximately $190,000 worth of athletic scholarships will be awarded to UMass students in the name of G.H. Barber.

Just who is G.H. Barber? No one seems to know.

"The Financial Aid office doesn't award athletic scholarships," said Richard Dent, director of that office.

"We dont't know who he is; ask Frank McInerney (Head of the Athletic Department). He'll know," said Dent.

"G.H. Barber gave some money to the University's athletic fund at one time," said McInerney.

"I don't know who he is but I think his son was on one of the teams here," he said. "He may still be alive, I think you ought to ask Robert O'Connell (Associate Head of the Athletic Department.) He takes care of those matters," said McInerney.

"G.H. Barber gave UMass some money at one time and his name has been retained as the title of the athletic scholarship fund," said O'Connell.

"I don't know who he is but certainly there will be a record of his donation at the University Treasurer's Office. Ask there," said O'Connell.

"He may have been an early graduate," replied the secretary at the Treasurer's Office.

"They will probably have complete records on him at the University Liason Office, where they have all the records of the Board of Trustees," she continued.

"Well, I know his first name was George and that he was a rear admiral," said the Liason Office secretary.

"He made a bequest by will to the athletic fund in 1972," she continued.

"How he was connected with the University, well, I just don't know," she said.

"Maybe you ought to try the Financial Aid Office."

A night in prison

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

MDC Staff Reporter Frits Geurtsen recently spent a night in Berkshire County Jail. These are his impressions.

There is nothing that matches the finality of the sound of a closing cell door.

Even when you know you'll be out in the morning, as I did, it doesn't diminish the effect of that sound.

Along with nine people from the UMass Police Academy, I spent last Tuesday night in Berkshire County Jail in Pittsfield.

The purpose of the stay, according to Brooks Smith, Human Relations teacher at the Academy and organizer of the whole affair, was not so much to give the police trainees an idea of what it's like to be in jail as to give them a chance to interact with the inmates on a basis other than that on which policemen and criminals usually meet - the scene of a crime, when both parties are at their worst.

When we arrived, we were booked (for trespassing - a very unimpressive charge) and then taken downstairs for something to eat. We were too late for supper, but Louie, the shortest bank robber in the business, fixed us up some grilled cheese sandwiches and coffee. We discovered later that this was a typical supper for the inmates.

People have a lot of stereotyped ideas about jail. One of them has to do with prisoners sexually assaulting other prisoners. The trainees joked about it beforehand, but there was a touch of anxiety in their comments. These anxieties were heightened when the first thing they heard upon entering the cellblock were cries of "Get the Vaseline" and "I want the cute one". These catcalls however were quickly and effectively cut short by other inmates.

After being issued individual cells, and a blanket and sheet, we were free to roam about the cellblock and talk to those inmates who were willing to talk to us. By and large, most of them were. A few wanted nothing to do with us, but they avoided us so that there were never any problems or confrontations.

The cellblock is a huge hall in which there are four tiers of cells in two rows, back to back, so that when you look out of your cell all you see is the wall of the cellblock. No cells are situated so that you can see anyone from them once you're locked in at night.

The average age of the inmate there is 22. More than 60 per cent of the inmates are there on drug-related charges.

Gurney to be indicted for campaign charge

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. [UPI] — U.S. Sen. Edward Gurney, R-Fla., a member of the Senate Watergate Committee, has been indicted by a Leon County grand jury on charges of failing to report campaign contributions, UPI learned yesterday.

A reputable source said Gurney was charged, in a sealed indictment to be delivered to Gurney's attorney today, with violating a state election law requiring the reporting of campaign contributions.

Gurney is believed to be the first Florida member of Congress ever to be indicted.

The indictment was handed down by the same grand jury which last week charged Eudcation Commissioner Floyd Christian — who later resigned — with 19 felony counts of accepting kickbacks and bribes in the awarding of state contracts, and then lying about it to a legislative committee and the grand jurors.

Contacted in Washington, Gurney aide John Gardner said the senator had no comment yesterday but may have something to say this morning.

Since the indictment was sealed and cannot be officially disclosed until served, neither State Attorney Harry Morrison nor sheriff's deputies would comment. Grand jury foreman Walter A. Roberts said neither he nor any of the jurors could comment on matters before the jury.

But a source said the indictment will be made public sometime today after Gurney's attorney accepts service of the summons.

The alleged violation is a first degree misdemeanor, carrying a maximum penalty, upon conviction, of a year in jail and a $1,000 fine.

The grand jury last week watched a videotape of a Dec. 6 telecast From Jacksonville, on which Gurney admitted, that he knew in 1972 of $100,000 in contributions collected on his behalf but did not report them because he was not an active candidate at the time and had no campaign apparatus for reporting.

But Attorney General Robert Shevin and Circuit Court Judge John A. Rudd advised the jurors that the law applied to a person between campaigns if he intended to be a candidate. Gurney recently announced his candidacy for reelection.

Election officials said that no one has ever been charged under the so-called "Who Got it, Who Gave It Law."

U.S. and the world

Soviets agree to assist in Mideast peace talks

ALGIERS [UPI] — U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, in a crucial step toward a Middle East peace settlement, obtained a promise of Soviet assistance in his efforts to promote a troop withdrawal agreement between Israel and Syria on the Golan Heights front.

In a joint U.S.-Soviet communique issued as Kissinger arrived in the Algerian capital from Geneva and seven hours of talks with Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyki, both sides agreed "to exercise their influence" to obtain a Middle East peace settlement.

Geneva was Kissinger's first stop on his fifth peace-making mission to the Middle East since the October war. He has conceded it may be his toughest assignment yet.

Kissinger stopped over in Algiers for talks with President Houari Boumedienne, one of the Arab hardliners.

While he met with Gromyko in Geneva, Israeli and Syrian warplanes dueled over the Golan Heights in the worst air clashes since the 1973 Middle East War. A total of nine planes were claimed destroyed by both sides.

The joint communique said "the Soviet minister and the U.S. secretary exchanged views on the current status of the negotiations of a Middle East settlement and on the next phase of these negotiations.

"The two sides agreed to exercise their influence toward a positive outcome and to remain in close touch with each other so as to strive to coordinate their efforts for a peaceful settlement in the area.

The communique said the United States and the Soviet Union were "in favor" of an early resumption of the Geneva peace conference on the Middle East. The two superpowers are co-chairmen of the conference which opened Dec. 21 but went into recess Dec. 22 pending the disengagement of Israeli troops with those of Egypt and Syria.

Soviets bolstering Syria

LONDON [UPI]-The Soviet Union is trying to force its way into the Middle East peace negotiations, maneuvering with new military aid and promises of long-term assistance to Syria, Middle East sources said yesterday.

The Russians have sent new advisers to Syria to assist them in the tough fighting against Israel on the eve of U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's latest effort to reach a military disengagement of the two countries, they said.

The Soviets were said to be shipping new heavy tanks, in addition to helping reinforce Syrian air defenses with new and more SAM missiles of the latest type. The advisers are to help in their deployment and in the training of personnel.

Nixon to keep tapes

was placing his trust "in the basic fairness of the American people."

As Nixon spoke in a nationally broadcast speech, the transcripts were stacked beside his Oval Office desk, each set in a notebook. One, emblazoned with the presidential seal, faced the television cameras.

Nixon said the notebooks contain more than 1,200 pages of transcripts of private conversations he held between Sept. 15, 1972, and April 27, 1973, with regard to Watergate.

He said they include all relevant portions of all subpoenaed conversations.

The President said he would make public not only these transcripts, but also transcripts covering tape recordings of 19 other conversations, and more than 700 White House documents, which already have been delivered to the House committee and the Watergate special prosecutor.

Nixon acknowledged there are ambiguities in the transcripts, and that they include material that will be embarrassing to him and to his aides. In releasing them to the committee and the public, Nixon said, he is breaching the principle of presidential confidentiality, but considers it necessary to do so to clear up the Watergate case.

The President also said he does not know how the celebrated 18¼-minute gap in one tape recording could have occurred. But he said he is certain it was not done purposely by his secretary, Rose Mary Woods.

Directly challenging the testimony of his former White House counsel, John W. Dean III, Nixon said again he knew nothing of Watergate involvement or cover-up until Dean told him about it on March 21, 1973.

Portuguese junta bans old party

LISBON [UPI] — Portugal's five day old military junta, in a series of revolutionary decrees yesterday, stripped leaders of the former dictatorship of all their powers, dissolved the former sole legal political party and proclaimed May 1 a national holiday.

Representatives of formerly banned and now legal left wing political parties held what they termed a "very cordial" 90-minute meeting with the chief of the Junta, Gen. Antonio de Spinola.

They said they asked him to make way for a democratic government as quickly as possible and he replied that he wants to hand over power to a provisional civilian government in less than the three weeks he originally promised.

"He told us he will accept the will of the majority and move as quickly as possible," Lio Lima, spokesman for the group, gold a news conference.

Left wing groups represented at the meeting ranged from the Christian Democrats to the Socialists and Communists.

In further moves to sweep away the last traces of 46 years of dictatorship, the junta announced the end of motion picture and theater censorship. Press censorship already has been abolished.

The junta's decision to proclaim May 1 a public holiday was widely interpreted as one more move to please the left wing parties. May 1 is celebrated in many countries by trade unions and left wing parties as a "day of the workers." In Portugal it was studiously ignored by the former regime.

A sunburst of decrees broadcast on the national radio:

—Stripped former President Americo Thomaz of all his powers and relieved former Prime Minister Marcello Caetano and his ministers, secretaries and under secretaries of their functions.

—Dissolved the old national assembly and council of state.

—Dissolved the National Popular Action (ANP) party, sole legal political party under the former dictatorship, and handed over all its property to the state.

—Placed representatives of the junta at the head of all government ministries until a new provisional government is set up.

The junta sought to prevent the revolution degenerating into a bloodbath by calling on Portuguese to end a witch hunt of former secret police agents.

Top Belfast leaders meet to halt violence

BELFAST [UPI] — Northern Ireland's three top politicians conferred yesterday on another move which could help end intercommunal violence in the province which has claimed $1,002 lives since the summer of 1969.

Police claimed one success and political leaders another as Northern Ireland Secretary Merlyn Rees met with the two leaders of the province's coalition government, Protestant brian Faulkner and Roman Catholic Gerry Fitt.

They discussed proposals by an Anglo-Irish Law Commission for a new structure of law covering both Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic to the south.

While they met, a Portestant organization claiming to represent 300,000 members called off plans for a mass strike May 8. The decision followed weekend discussions which closely involved the Rev. Ian Paisley, leader of the militant Protestant Democratic Unionist party.

Chrysler profits drop 98%; announces $99 price hike

DETROIT [AP] — Chrysler Corp., reporting its first quarter profits dropped 98 per cent from last year, announced yesterday that prices of its 1974-model cars and trucks will go up an average $99 tomorrow.

The company said retail prices likely will go up again before July 31.

Citing "world gasoline shortages, inflation and fears of a recession," the auto maker reported earnings of $1.6 million, down from last year's record $89.8 million. Per-share earnings were three cents, off from $1.71 for January-March 1973, the firm said.

The announcement of Chrysler's earnings decrease came three days after General Motors reported its first quarter profits plummeted 85 per cent from last year. The auto giant's per-share earnings of 41 cents represented its lowest return since 1948.

The beleaguered U. S. auto industry, affected by soaring inflation and the energy crisis' impact on big car sales since December, has watched car sales during the quarter fall 27 per cent from last year's record levels.

Stock market analysts have predicted the Big Three collectively will report their worst first quarter profit returns in more than a decade. Ford will report its first quarter earnings today.

With worldwide vehicle sales off 14 per cent, and U. S. car sales down 20.3 per cent from 1973, Chrysler's reported quarterly revenues of $2.7 billion compared with $2.9 billion last year.

The company added, however, that sales from its overseas subsidiaries totaled $800.3 million, a 14.6 per cent increase from the record $698.6 million reported during first quarter 1973.

Oil executive freed in Buenos Aires

BUENOS AIRES [UPI] — American oil executive Victor E. Samuelson was freed in apparent good health yesterday seven weeks after a record $14.2 million ransom was paid for his release. Hours later he was on his way home to the United States by air.

Ducking newsmen, Samuelson quietly boarded a Braniff flight, Flight 974 leaving via Paraguay, Bolivia, Peru and Panama for Miami, Washington and New York.

Police sources said that when Samuelson was released he appeared disoriented but otherwise in good health. He was wearing the same suit he was kidnaped in five months ago.

The police themselves made no formal statement, following their practice in the wave of kidnapings that has hit Argentina in recent months.

Samuelson, 37, of Cleveland, Ohio, the father of three pre-teen-age children, was kidnaped Dec. 6 from the Esso refinery company cafeteria at Campana, 50 miles north of Buenos Aires, by members of the People's Revolutionary Army (ERP), a leftist guerrilla group.

Esso, a subsidiary of Exxon Corp., paid the record ransom March 11 with 142,000 one hundred dollar bills in brief cases.

But weeks passed with no news of Samuelson. Financial sources said the guerrillas apparently delayed his release until they could "launder" the ransom money, that is, change it at various foreign banks so the cash could not be traced.

Police sources said word of Samuelson's release came from a student, Federico Pfister, 22, who said Samuelson was in good health.

Brandt cans meeting

BONN [UPI] — Chancellor Willy Brandt's government yesterday cancelled today's meeting with East German deputy Foreign minister Kurt Nier a week after the discovery of an East German spy in the Chancellor's office.

Government spokesman Ruediger von Wechmar said State Secretary Guenther Gaus cabled the East German Foreign Ministry that he was not able to receive Nier.

"The reason speaks for itself," Wechmar said.

Last Wednesday federal criminal police arrested 47-year-old Guenther Guillaume, one of Brandt's personal aides in the Chancellory and charged him with espionage for East Germany.

SAN FRANCISCO [UPI] — The Symbionese Liberation Army faces a Friday deadline to return Patricia Hearst to her family in order to gain another $4 million food ransom.

JERUSALEM [UPI] — Prime Minister - designate Yitzhak Rabin and the ruling Labor party yesterday began negotiations with members of Prime Minister Golda Meir's outgoing coalition in efforts to form a new government.

First on the list were the National Religious party (NRP) and the Independent Liberal party (ILP).

Court restricts prison censorship

WASHINGTON [AP]-The Supreme Court has placed restrictions on prison officials who want to censor mail to and from inmates.

Without dissent, the court created guidelines that for the first time limit censorship to what is necessary to further "one or more of the substantial governmental interests of security, order and rehabilitation."

In the prison mail case, the justices struck down the existing state regulations in California, calling them an invitation to prison officials and employes "to apply their own personal prejudices and opinions" to the detriment of free speech.

"Prison officials may not censor inmate correspondence simply to eliminate unflattering or unwelcome opinions or factually inaccurate statements," Justice Lewis F. Powell wrote for the court. "Rather, they must show that a regulation authorizing mail censorship furthers one or more of the substantial government interests of security, order and rehabilitation," Powell said.

The court said the restriction can be no greater than absolutely necessary and that prisoners are entitled to some form of procedural safeguard such as an appeal to a prison official other than the one who acted as the censor.

Nixon campaign funds may pay Mitchell fees

WASHINGTON [AP] — The trustees of President Nixon's leftover campaign funds plan to wait until bills are submitted before deciding whether to pay the legal expenses of former Cabinet members John N. Mitchell and Maurice Stans.

Mitchell and Stans were acquitted Sunday by a federal court jury in New York of conspiracy and other charges arising from a secret $200,000 contribution to Nixon's 1972 campaign.

Charles E. Potter, former Republican senator from Michigan 1who is one of three trustees of Nixon's $3.5-million campaign surplus, said he assumed there would be no difficulty over payment of legal fees for Stans, former head of the Finance Committee to Re-elect the President.

Potter said in an interview yesterday he was not certain about the case of Mitchell, who headed the political side of the re-election campaign for several months in 1972.

Stans was head of the Nixon fund raising operation throughout the period in 1972 and early 1973 that the Vesco matter was pending before the SEC.

Mitchell, who had been accused of actually trying to fix the Vesco investigation, was head of the Committee to Re-elect the President, the political operation, for about three months in 1972.

Potter said no decision will be made on payment of legal fees until the lawyers submit their bills. Then, he said, the matter will be turned over to attorneys for the 1972 Campaign Liquidation Trust, successor to the Finance Committee to Re-elect the President.

Potter said Stans, who is a trustee of the leftover funds, will not participate in any discussion of the matter.

Under a policy adopted in April 1973 by the budget committee of the Nixon re-election campaign — a committee that included Stans and Mitchell — legal fees were to be paid for former campaign officials only up to the time of formal indictment.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR
PHYSICS MAJORS
(OR THE EQUIVALENT)

FOR WHOM?

If you are about to graduate with a B.S. in Physics (or the equivalent) or are already a graduate we invite you to consider our M.S. program in Mechanical or Industrial Engineering with a major in manufacturing.

Manufacturing engineers are those concerned with the planning and selection of methods of manufacture, the design of equipment for manufacture, the improvement of established manufacturing techniques and the development of new ones.

WHY CONSIDER THE PROGRAM?

1. The Society of Manufacturing Engineers (SME), one of the leading professional societies in the country, has determined that manufacturing engineers will be in increasingly short supply in the future. This is because one of the country's major tasks is improving industrial productivity and industry will be looking for people who will be able to help in this important work.

2. Last year fifty-nine percent of the companies who interviewed on Campus were looking for engineering graduates.

3. As a result of the rapid expansion of the manufacturing research program at the University of Massachusetts, several excellent research assistantships are now available. These assistantships have stipends ranging from $3,200 to $5,000 per year plus waiver of tuition.

INTERESTED?

Call either Professor C. Poli at 5-0054 or call the Department of Mechanical Engineering (5-2505).

Imbalance law quickly repealed

BOSTON [UPI — The House and Senate of the Massachusetts Legislature, acting in swift succession, for the second year in a row decided yesterday to repeal the nine-year-old Racial Imbalance Act.

But defenders of the precedent-setting effort at expediting public school integration appear to have enough votes to sustain an anticipated veto of the repeal bill from Republican Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

The repeal bill Monday sped through the House, 134-85, after less than 20 minutes debate — one speaker from each side — then was passed by the Senate, 22-15, without a word of debate.

The repeal effort, spearheaded by the Boston and Springfield delegations in both chambers, last year was passed by the legislature but a liberal Democratic and Republican coalition narrowly sustained a Sargent veto.

Barring switches from a half dozen lawmakers in each house, the repeal effort again this year would fall short of the two-thirds majority plus one needed to override a gubernatorial veto; but opponents of the law, as they did last year, are expected to bring forward various schemes to suspend or water down the imbalance law which includes a tough and rigid definition of a racially imbalanced school.

Under this definition, a school is imbalanced if it has more than 50 per cent "non-white" enrollment.

The law requires communities with imbalanced school to produce a state-acceptable plan to eliminate the imbalance and has caused considerable hostility in Boston and Springfield where significant imbalances exist.

State holding veterans' bonuses

BOSTON [UPI] — More than 300 Massachusetts service veterans have $200 or $300 checks waiting for them, but the state doesn't know where to send them.

According to Thomas Devine, head of the Vietnam Bonus Division in the state Treasurer's office, the checks have been made out to veterans who successfully applied for bonuses, but moved before the checks were mailed.

"These people had qualified," Devine said, "and the checks are just sitting around. If these people would send us a forwarding address, the checks can be sent out."

According to figures provided by Devine, 209,723 checks with a total value of $48.1 million have been issued since 1968.

Under the program, Massachusetts veterans who served for at least six months between July 1, 1958 and April 1, 1973 qualify for bonuses of up to $300.

You're serious about photography.
So is the Canon F-1.

To you, photography is more than a hobby. You may never want to become a professional. Yet, your photography is as important a means of self-expression to you as your speech. You demand the same excellence in your photographic equipment as you do of your photographic skills.

The Canon F-1 is the camera that can fulfill any photographic task to which you put it. It can stand up to your ability in any situation.

Naturally, a great camera like the F-1 won't ensure great results. That's up to you. Yet—it's nice to know that your camera can grow with you as a photographer.

Part of the reason for this is the F-1 system. Since it was designed in totality, it offers total performance. There is nothing "added on" in the F-1 system. Everything works as it was designed to, and integrates superbly with everything else. You'll spend less time worrying about operating the camera than in shooting. And that's what creative photography is really all about.

Controls fall into place under each finger. It's no accident. Professionals who depend on a camera for their livelihood have a deep regard for the F-1's handling. It's amazing how much a comfortable camera can improve your work.

Sharing these lenses and many of these accessories are the new Electronic Canon EF, with fully automatic exposure control, the FTb, now improved with all exposure information visible in the finder, and the TLb, great for a second camera body or for getting started in Canon photography. Canon. For serious applications. For serious photographers.

Isn't it time you got serious?

Man in the street

Text by E. Patrick McQuaid
Photography by Bob Stevens

The matter of the endemic apathy ailing the campus community was presented to several random students recently at numerous sites on the University. Questions were directly concerned with the Student Senate and what could be done to cure the phlegmatic indifference paralysing both the Senate and the student body.

THE QUESTION: "How do you feel about the apathy in the student senate and what can be done by all parties concerned? This includes both the senate and the student body.

Steven Brush, a senior who resides off campus said: "I think that most of the students don't have time and they could care less. Most of those involved with the SGA are all on power trips; not really concerned. There should be more student involvement. The officers should go out and try to arouse some interest among the student body. Until they do this or something similar, I don't see how they're going to get any student support."

Mike Gallagher, graduate student: "I'm so apathetic I don't even have an answer for you. I never really thought about the SGA at all. It's totally an undergraduate government and I'm not concerned. If I could think of a useful function that the student government could serve, then I could see getting people interested in it. I mean, what's it for other than namesake?"

Marie Dion, freshman, Northeast resident: "Maybe the place is too big. I'm just a freshman, but I was pretty apathetic in High School too. It could have something to do with the outside government, the national impeachment and all. Perhaps they think nothing's worth it. I'm letting things ride; when I first came here I figured I didn't have to get involved with anything. I'm not sure that I want to get involved."

Jim Saucier, junior from Northeast: "I know that the apathy exists and it hums me out. I also know I can't do anything about it and maybe that's where my own apathy comes from. Apathy all depends on the individual. Maybe this interview will spark some interest: but it's no solution."

John Hurley, graduate student: "I think that it's a fact of life here and on any campus. It is not a unique occurance on this campus; it's a representation of student life in general. It has to do with the way that people are brought up.

Paul J. Hamel, Student Senate Treasurer: "Back when the Student first began everyone was interested. What's happened is that a lot of this interest does not exist any longer. The senate is no longer something new. The Student government has become basically outmoded.

Film on Haiti shows in Mosaic Fest

To The Editor:

Hanging out the window as the old-red-rattletrap-'54-chevy-stationwagon-taxi rumbled into the outskirts of town, I was thinking "this is really it — this is Africa." Thatched mud huts on the road coming in from the airport now giving way to low pastel cinderblock and stucco buildings; women walking, coming and going in all directions with seventy pounds of green coconuts or orange carrots almost spilling out of the giant baskets miraculously balanced on their heads; and not a white in sight.

But this was Haiti, not Africa. And after countless blocks of what seemed like the never-ending city outskirts, the taxi unexpectedly came to a stop. I couldn't figure out the reason for the delay until the driver pointed to the hand-lettered words pained over the narrow entrance of an undistinguished building: "HOLIDAY GUEST HOUSE". So I had arrived at my destination in downtown Port-au-Price — and there wasn't a building over two stories tall.

I unloaded my stuff from out of the back of the stationwagon — first the small suitcase of clothes, then the electric guitar, followed by the portable amplifier, and finally, the wah-wah pedal — and set it all down on the sidewalk, when I suddenly realized that here I was on my own, in a foreign country where I knew no one, with only $40 in my pocket, and unable to speak the language.

I spent that night in a $5 room at the Holiday Guest House. But from there I went through a sort of rapid cultural decompression — from living in a 10-dollar-a-week room at a bar-brothel, to living in an 8-dollar-a-month mud hut next door to a voodoo temple out in the country.

I went to Haiti to make a film on conga drumming and Haitian music, and while there, I met such people as Espera Pierre, a man who carved voodoo drums out of solid oak logs; Ti RoRo, a fantastic, spiritually inspired drummer; and Madame Nerva, a voodoo priestess. This film, Le Tambou: the drum of Haiti, will be shown for free in conjunction with the B.D.I.C. MOSAIC FESTIVAL Tuesday 8 p.m. April 30 at HERTER HALL.

Today, a national day of humiliation

To The Editor:

Tuesday April 30 has the potential to be a very important day in the course of events in this country and in the lives of people at UMass. This day has been declared by Congress to be one of National Humiliation, Fasting, and Prayer for the sins of this nation. The resolution was introduced by Mark Hatfield and four other senators in Congress and immediately received a standing ovation from those present. Apparently, this is the first time since Abraham Lincoln's administration that such a resolution has been proclaimed. The wording of this resolution expresses very clearly what we have a need for in this country today. The text can be found in Tuesday's Collegian.

This message not only has importance on a national scale but can also speak to each of us here at UMass. We have for the most part grown up in much wealth and comfort, unlike most of our age group peers in this world, and yet we continually complain about and criticize our conditions. i.e.; food, dorms, education, government, etc. The cynixism and apathy that is rampant in our midst will only lead to increased despair and selfishness. If our own attitudes about life and government on this campus are carried on into the "real" world, what do we have to look forward to?

The message of repentance means to think and turn in our attitudes and actions. Let us remove the pointing of the finger from our midst and remember that one finger pointing leaves three pointing back at ourselves. May this Tuesday be a day when we will think about our hypocrisy, in actions and attitudes, and may the living God grant us the strength to turn to him and humble ourselves before Him. God has given and forgiven, the rest is up to us.

Frat sponsors blood search

To The Editor:

At the time of the November Bloodmobile, due in part to the good publicity in the Collegian, there were a large number of students who came as walk-in donors on the last day of the drive. Unfortunately a few had to be turned away because of the last minute rush and others had to wait.

The sponsors of the May Bloodmobile, Gamma Gamma Sigma, Alpha Phi Omega, and University Women, urge all students to register in advance. Appointments are being made April 30, 31, May 1, 2, from 10:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Concourse. Those who prefer to chance being walk-ins should come early in the week and early in the day. The donor days and hours are Monday May 6 10:00 a.m.-3:30 p.m. Tues.-Thurs. 9:30 a.m.-3:00 p.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

We sincerely thank all students who have donated blood in the past and remind everyone that their donation assures that blood will be available when needed for themselves and their families.

'White pig' better name for center

To The Editor:

"To let: White Pig" might better have been the title of Monday's editorial in the Collegian concerning the problem of generating the cash to pay for the construction of our beautiful campus center.

The problem is not that the income from the center cannot pay the debt service; the problem is that no one ever really sat down before the monster was built and asked, in other than "speculative terms," how it was going to be paid for.

It is not even that the students rip off the university store, as the editors claim. It is that the store has still to install a sales and inventory system so that its management might have some good reason to know from where the losses are coming. It is not that the conference and function rooms are not used to capacity as the editors claim. It is that the management of the conference services, including catering and the hotel are not forced to justify themselves on other than political, that is profit and loss based on true cost, grounds.

The problem is that the place is really a political pork barrel, and the students pay for it. Why? It's like climbing a mountain, because it's there.

"Evade the issues"

Announcer: Welcome to "Evade the Issue", the game show that spotlights peoples' knack of not facing their commitments. Our selected panel of contestants are now ready to win that big prize. We'll discuss that at the end of our program. Our first contestant please.

Sam Senator: I'm a student and a senator. I believe that the Student Activities Tax should be abolished and that the senate elections should be open to the entire student body.

Announcer: Well, then why didn't you vote for Henry Ragin?

Sam Senator: Well, I really wanted to but I just couldn't. You know what I mean? Like the rest of the Senate wasn't into it and uh, well I just couldn't, you know?

Announcer: Yes, we know, you have evaded the issue by not being able to do what you want. Thank you. Our next contestant please.

Chancellor Bromery: My name if Randolph Bromery and I run the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

Announcer: Tell me, you are greatly interested in abolishing racist attitudes and creating a better educational atmosphere for minority students. Now that the student newspaper, which is New England's largest college daily and the ninth largest college paper in the country has voted to elect a black affairs, do you think that this will help your ideals?

Chancellor Bromery: I don't know. I never read the paper.

Announcer: Thank you. You have evaded the issue by failing to recognize that something is being done. Our next contestant please.

Gov. Sargent: My name is Francis Sargent and I run this state.

Announcer: Gov. Sargent, a while ago concerned persons came by your office regarding Russell Daniels. We know that Daniels is currently in jail for the murder of an elderly woman. We also know that he is mentally retarded and has been labeled as "A nine-year-old in Norfolk Prison." We also know of your concern with the mentally retarded. So tell me Gov. why didn't you meet with these persons?

Gov. Sargent: I have a busy schedule and on that particular day I had to attend a baseball game.

Announcer: But we all know that the baseball game was cancelled.

Gov. Sargent: But it was on my schedule and I have to stick to it. If you want to know anything else, talk to my secretary.

Announcer: Thank you Gov. Sargent. You have evaded the issue by evading all concerned persons. Our next contestant is our mystery guest. Come on out and tell us who you are.

Mystery Guest: My name is Richard Nixon and I am the President.

Announcer: Thank you Mr. President. The fact that you are so evasive warrants no further questions on our part. You have evaded so many issues by making them perfectly clear that they become more confusing. Your reputation is truly infamous. Thank you Mr. President for appearing. So, tune in next time when we will continue to "Evade the Issue."

Let's make a deal Nixon

Ten thousand people went to Washington D.C. on Saturday to demand the impeachment of President Nixon. Ten Thousand. In the peak of the Anti-War days that was like a coffee klatch. You know, someone would get on one of the F.M. stations and announce an Anti-War rally with a folksinger or two, and it would be a party. There would be a guerilla theatre; everyone would take a day off from school; in short, it would be a happening.

Ten thousand people went down to Washington D.C. on Saturday, and it seems almost insignificant. Nixon was in Camp David and he didn't hear them, however the cheers of the ten thousand cheering businessmen who greeted him in Mississippi last week were probably still ringing in his ears. Nixon knows where his bread is buttered. If the Impeachment comes about, he'll need roughly one third of the Senate, or 34 Senators "in his corner" to avoid being the first President ever ousted.

The people who used to go to protest marches don't go much these days. I used to think that it was fatigue; or that they just lost interest. Perhaps Anti-War demonstrations took on the aura of "happenings", and the Woodstock trend of rock festivals supplemented that need for the "happening". One thing seems somewhat certain; the Impeachment rally will have little or no effect on the President's impeachment.

I say this because the votes that are needed to oust Nixon are tied up in the deep South and the Midwest. Forget California. Forget New York. Forget Massachusetts. If you can't convince men like Carl Curtis of Nebraska, and Strom Thurmond, the King of the Deep South that Nixon is a crook, he'll be groaning all the way till '76; you know, doing a soft shoe on the Constitution and your mind.

The Presidency is a funny thing. Think of the type of man who gets there. Kennedy got there because of his charm, good looks, and money. His voting record wasn't exceptional in either the House or the Senate. Johnson got there because he was a skillfull parlimentarian, and Kennedy was assasinated. But Nixon, well he seems to be the epitome of what it takes to get through the system. What it takes to become "The President".

I figure that loosely 15,000 young people coming out of school every year have the potential to be active, energetic and dynamic leaders. This doesn't mean that all of them will be, or that someone outside that coterie can't be (remember Harry Truman). I just means that there is that coterie to start with. Then things happen.

The battles of the heart take place. Some die. Some get diverted. Others realize that the intensity that drives them on towards destiny is causing havoc in their determination for a sense of peace of mind. Some are heartbroken and never recover; others get hard and move on to something else.

It seems that to get to the top you've got to be willing to "make the deal", to keep quiet when you don't want to. Somewhat like an old lover gone astray, you rationalize things that don't go right; you compromise things that maybe you shouldn't. Can a politician "make it" and maintain a questioning heart and mind? A lot of people think that McGovern was that kind of man; and the time that I met him he seemed quite vulnerable. The key word is heart. Nixon doesn't seem to have one. He is a political animal who would do you in quicker than you could say Helen G. Douglas. He smiles. He grins. But I never get the feeling that he is there. I always get the feeling that his eyes are on the goal post, but his heart is "out to lunch."

When Nixon was involved in Student Government at Whittier College his biggest accomplishment was getting dancing allowed at the gym. In an interview in Emile D'Antonio's film Milhouse, the woman that Nixon took to the prom said with a faded grin, "You know Richard never liked to dance, but he knew that we did, so he got us a dance".

And I can imagine Nixon doing something like that. If I ever met him I'd like to gaze in his eye; ask him a question; and press him for a response. Because we've got to know the truth. We've got to know how someone feels. There must be answers. Why did he give up on living so soon? Why did he supplement it in a drive for glory? Did being President make it easier to enjoy life? Was it a sublimation of a desire long ago to be loved. These are questions that I want answers for. These answers can never be found at demonstrations; where the groups commeraderie is at times close; but it is a party, not a movement.

And for the 15,000 or so with that drive, intensity and heart, perhaps there will be that moment of truth. That time faced with compromises, that go against their heart, that contradict their feelings, that gool with their thoughts. Some will no doubt fall off, "beneath the wheel", and some will just compromise and pass on. Or perhaps we can dream and hope that there will be that third alternative; where the heart and the mind come together; where leaders are formed who don't want to destroy each other or themselves. Perhaps then we can help make both American and the world the kind of place that we all say it should be. But Nixon doesn't have the answers, because long ago when he made his choices he decided to forget the questions. It is doubtful if any amount of demonstrations will help him remember them now.

Blind justice

By KELLY ERWIN

"In the clear, bracing air of the central California coast...young lawyers, accountants and stockbrokers play a nine-hole golf course, roll boccia balls or plant seedlings in their own self-built park. At other times they may jog around a quarter-mile track or even take their visiting wives and girl-friends for a picnic lunch on a pleasant lawn, under gentle rippling juniper, oak and eucaluptus trees.

So pass the more pleasant moments for inmates in the wall-less Federal prison camp near Lompoc, California..."
—NEWSWEEK, Feb. 25, 1974.

Lompoc is the current abode of Watergater Donald Segretti. ElginKrogh, chief of the White House 'plumbers', resides in a similar camp in central Pennsylvania, while at Elgin Air Force Base in Florida (a prison known as the 'Federal Hilton') Bernard Barker, Frank Sturgis, Eugenio Martinez, and Virgilio Gonzalez, four more WAtergaters, were released on bond after two months of comfortable incarceration.

Elgin superintendent James Rhodes told NEWSWEEK, "We once could have formed our own government here. We had an ex-governor, two ex-state attorneys general, an ex-senator, and Lord knows how many lawyers."

The contrast between the treatment of these people who have cheated and stolen from, in a sense, the entire nation and the situation of an average prisoner is so glaring as to be absurd. Hell, these people are living better than most U.S. citizens.

George Jackson spent ten years in San Quentin before he was gunned down by prison guards at the age of 29. He alleged crime? A theft of 70 dollars.

Angela Davis spent sixteen months in a jail cell before she was released on bail and then acquitted of the frame-up charges against her.

Martin Sostre has been in prison serving a 30-to-41 years sentence since 1968 despite the fact that he was convicted on admittedly perjured testimony. But the case histories are too numerous for telling, the human tragedy of lives wasted and dehumanized, to common.

If justice in America really is blind, it's to make it easier for those in power to put a thumb on the scale.

A lot to learn

To The Editor:

While reading page two of last Wednesday's Collegian. I felt personally affronted by an interview with Rudy Jones, newly elected Black Affairs Editor of the Collegian.

Speaking from experience as a former editor of the Collegian, can only say, Mr. Jones, that you have a lot to learn about dealing effectively with people to produce a newspaper every day. I found it literally astounding that an editor could say, "I have no gain to derive from this position....I won't be accomplishing anything. There is nothing I need to get accomplished."

With such an attitude from a person who could potentially uplift the image of Black people on this campus and bring Black news into its deserved focus, I feel sorry for those Blacks who are concerned about such grave problems. I ask why you are bothering at all to be involved, if only in name?

I found your recommended cure all for the ills of the Collegian to be short-sighted generalizations with no mention of a cure. ["The community should get competent and intelligent people to run it."]

Whether or not you will believe this, the Collegian tries to be an open workshop for anyone who is interested. By arbitrarily judging one's competence and intelligence as a pre-requisite for participation you must not realize that only an elitist organization would exist.

Since the election of a new Board of Editors last January, I feel that the Collegian has made important progress both internally and externally. The editors have confronted an issue [not "yeilded to"] which editors beforehand did not deal with for a number of reasons.

This is something which I feel takes courage — adult sensitivity and security — something that can't be expected from all editors at all times. For you to generalize and say, "The paper is run by a bunch of racist, insecure, insensitive children who are blind to the implications of their actions," is a defeatist attitude. It makes me wonder if their is any hope in your working in a group, the Board of Editors, to bring about changes. [Or do you feel that technicalities of spelling and punctuation should be mastered for change to come about?] I really wonder how often you read the Collegian or talk to any of the people involved. Do you think that the paper magically appears on campus everyday? As evidenced by nearly all issues, the reporters are working — very hard, in fact. How are stories on financial aid, health services, Spanish language supplements, increased women's news, state politics, and pollution, too, printed? No, that's not hard when reporters are also students! If you do not recognize any journalistic merit here, surely you are not overlooking effort?

Mr. Jones, it is ironic that by placing yourself above the people who are asking to work with you on an equal basis, to try to correct their faults, you are setting yourself up for failure in your endeavors and continuing to propagate those adverse attitudes and beliefs which it had been hoped could be eradicated. As a woman, I am well aware of such pressures, too.

My one immediate hope is that last week's interview with you was a mistake [why no by-line?]. If not, I would urge all Third World members to seriously question your eligibility and intentions as Black Affairs Editor.

Mary Vorderer

Segregationist policies

To The Editor:

I would like to address Mr. Rudolph Jones and systematically analyze his interview from last Wednesday's Collegian

Your comments on the staff meeting at which the post of Black Affairs Editor was created were one-sided and incomplete. The vote was challenged because a constitutional requirement for a quorum was not met. Nixonian tactics? I think not.

Secondly, I ask you to publicly apologize for your comments concerning the staff of the Collegian. These students volunteer their time and effort in order to get the paper our five days a week, one hundred forty times a year, totally without pay. But that's not enough for you. "...racist, insecure, insensitive children who are blind to the implications of their actions." Look closely, Mr. Jones, you seem to be the only member of this elite group.

What is wrong with the Collegian? Besides being racist, of course, Mr. Jones' name is spelled wrong, and put in the wrong spot. This is why the paper must "be changed."

Millions of people, black and white, have been working toward equality between the races. You may not call yourself racist, but you and the "Black News Service" uphold segregationist policies. I don't know anyone else majoring in "struggle", but you have your editorial position, Mr. Jones, you have your power; use it like a wise man, not like a fool.

Daniel Smith

Jones is entitled to opinion

To The Editor:

Warning: Since letters to the editor are meant to be opinionated, this letter may possibly reflect my opinion. Opinion, like an onion, often has the characteristic of having an unwanted fragrance when it is not on your own breath. One might say opinion sometimes stinks. This is of course, an opinion.

RE: Letters to the Editor, April 25, 1974. Richard Barry.

Since Richard Barry knows how not to write an objective, factual report, as he and only he himself states, I should like to question whether he knows how to write a factual objective report. In fact, I should like to question whether Barry should be considered any sort of authority on journalism of any circumstance, even if those circumstances are the Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

First, there are no articles of any kind written by Rudy Jones in the April 11 or 16 Collegian issues. Two articles did appear in the April 12 and 18 issues. And they appear on the editorial pages. Apparently someone has made a mistake.

Second, Barry discredits Jones as using, "language as a means to portray his own personal feelings." Apparently someone does not understand editorial pages, nor language. How does one censor one's words without portraying one's own personal feelings? Why should Rudy Jones, as an editor, censor personal emotion from his editorial articles?

Third, "This is a classic example of stereotyping!" appeared as a line in Barry's letter. Classic example? Barry's description of a stereotype in his accusation directed towards Jones smacks of the same evil itself. What is a classic example? Would I need to take a Black studies course to learn that term?

Fourth. If quotes from nameless witnesses did not appear in newspapers, then why are reporters going to jail for being in contempt of court for refusing to reveal their sources? Why is the Jones quote unauthenticated? What constitutes a unauthenticated quote, and what source of information did Barry have that led him to the conclusion that Jones had an "unauthenticated" quote. Himself?

Unfortunately and ironically, the only thing that Barry has accomplished through his inept semantics and his verbal diarrhea, is to stir me up, and I hardly constitute a crowd of any persuasion, I am concerned with the facts, but I am also concerned with knowing who in fact is this, "crowd of easily persuaded people," and, "what in fact does Barry mean by, "seeing Jones' type of justice prevail?"

Richard Barry has not convinced me that he is an authority on journalism. The question of whether Rudy Jones is a good or bad journalist is not up to either him or I, but to someone with far more experience. And I doubt that one person, editor or not, will have that much effect on the reputation of the Black News Service. As for Richard Barry, may I suggest, to paraphrase Norman Mailer, that you roll up an issue of the New York Times and place it where the sun doesn't shine. The news should do you some good.

The refinery debate

Opponents: 'like fighting phantom'

The public record discloses little about Olympic Refineries Inc., an Aristotle Onassis corporation looking for a place to build a $600 million oil refinery. Here, in the first of a four-part series, is the story of the corporation.

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — Olympic Refineries Inc., a company with $150,000 in known assets, has plans for a $600 million oil refinery - but so far, no place to build it.

After being barred from its first-choice site by the voters of Durham, N.H., Olympic decided to wait for another town near New Hampshire's 18-mile Atlantic coastline to invite the company in.

Newmarket, just to the south of Durham, voted this month in favor of the refinery, and the company went back to the drawing board to develop a proposal that would fit there. Rochester, inland and to the north, is to vote tomorrow on whether to approve refinery construction there.

Olympic is an Aristotle Onassis corporation, although public records don't show the role of the Greek shipping magnate. The refinery plan has the support of New Hampshire's governor and largest newspaper, but virtually no information is available about its resources or plans.

There are indications Onassis is determined to build an oil refinery, if not in New Hampshire then perhaps in Rhode Island or Louisiana.

"It's like fighting a phantom," said John Gibson, a spokesman for Save Our Shores, a citizens' group opposing the refinery. "They make statements and deny them the next day. They make promises and break them. Sometimes you don't even know who 'they' are."

Constantine G. Gratsos, president of Olympic Refineries, is the chief representative of Onassis interests in New York.

In a recent telephone interview, Gratsos said Onassis has wanted to build an oil refinery for several years, that the shipping magnate is sole owner of Olympic Refineries stock and that financial information about the company is not available. Then he hung up.

The first inkling of Olympic's activities came last October when a seacoast community weekly, Publick Occurrences, carried a report that land buying was under way on Durham Point. The story mentioned rumors that an oil refinery was planning to locate on the site.

A month later, however, the newspaper quoted George Pappademas, a Nashua real estate broker, as saying he was buying up options on more than 1,000 acres of rural land in the sleepy college town of Durham for his own investment, a game preserve for friends in Keene, N.H., and possibly a family compound.

It later turned out that Pappademas, George Stamatelos of Keene and at least one other real estate man were offering top dollar for the options on behalf of a fellow Greek-American, Peter J. Booras, a greeting-card manufacturer and friend of Gratsos.

On Nov. 27, Booras, Pappademas and three consulting engineers met with Gov. Meldrim Thomson in the State House. The governor then joined Booras at a news conference to announce Olympic's plans to build a refinery on the optioned land.

Booras was identified as a spokesman for Olympic.

The press release said: "Olympic is an international company and has recently obtained a permit to build a refinery in Nova Scotia. Financial references are available from the First National City Bank of New York."

Onassis wasn't mentioned. Asked about an Olympic refinery project in Nova Scotia, a Canadian official said, "It's never gone beyond the rumor stage" and that no Olympic official has ever contacted the government directly.

When First National City Bank was asked for the financial references, a spokesman said: "We haven't been authorized to give out any information on Onassis or his company."

Olympic spokesman now say the company was registered for several years in Monte Carlo but never built anything. It reportedly was Onassis' vehicle for negotiating a refinery agreement with the Greek government, a deal that eventually fell through.

On Feb. 26, in the midst of a public relations drive seeking support for the Durham refinery proposal. Olympic filed papers of incorporation with the New Hampshire secretary of state's office.

Those papers show that Olympic Refineries Inc. has a broad charter to do business in New Hampshire. There are four officers, three directors and 4,020,000 shares of no-par-value common stock.

The officers are Gratsos, president; Nicholas F. Papanicolaou of New York, a 25-year-old Onassis protege, vice president and treasurer; Thomas R. Lincoln of Greenwich, Conn., secretary; and David C. Hamblett of Nashua, N.H., clerk. Gratsos, Papanicolaou and Lincoln are named as directors.

The records show that 3,000 shares of stock were sold to an unnamed investor for $50 a share, indicating the company received $150,000 for the only stock outstanding.

The name Onassis does not appear anywhere in the documents on file.

None of the officers or directors is a full-time employe of Olympic. The company's only paid personnel in New Hampshire, according to a spokesman, are two writers and four secretaries who staff the Olympic offices in Concord and Dover.

But the voters in Durham said they didn't want the refinery, and despite intensive lobbying efforts, the state legislature refused to override that local veto power.

Next: Why a New Hampshire refinery?

The quiet New Hampshire town of Newmarket sits on the Lamprey River off Great Bay where Aristotle Onassis' Olympic Refineries wants to build New England's only oil refinery. Newmarket voters recently approved having a refinery after neighboring Durham, N.H., turned it down.

Politics causes famine

methods of production. The transition from an organization of the division of labor based on manual manufacture and handicrafts to industrial machinery, steam engine, etc. marked an "essentially different period" of capitalism.

Consequent upon the revolutionization of the mode of production in industry and agriculture is a corresponding revolutionization of the social process of production (means of transport and communication, river steamers, ocean steamers, telegraphs, sailing vessels etc.).

Thus with the development of capitalism and the industrial revolution the nature of famine underwent a profound transformation. What was famine like prior to the Industrial Revolution? During those early times, communication and trade were undeveloped.

The then societies were more or less, self-contained, self-dependent and self-enclosed entities with little or no link and access between the same region, much less other regions and countries. The natural economy that prevailed in these societies had no structural connection with the occurrence of drought and other adverse geological and climatic turbulences.

To be sure, there was a connection. But the dominant tendency was that famine was a natural calamity, for the modern safety valves that wipe out famine were not found then. Thus those who had relatively advanced economies suffered from natural calamities in as much as those who were relatively undeveloped.

Ancient Rome, Greece, China and Axum suffered terrible famine outbursts at a time when they had advanced economies. It was equally true for Britain, Gaul, Prussia and European Russia who had had a relatively backward economic basis. A recorded 450 famines were known in Europe from 1000 1850 A.D.

We now live in a different historical epoch where famine due to droughts cannot be allowed to occur in a few developed countries, while it is made to exist in the rest of the under-developed world. This is the era of imperialism and monopoly capital which had integrated in its underdevelopment ring even the remotest rural backwater in the Third World.

Thus, when famine exists during this reign of monopoly capital, it is because the structural integration of these societies to world imperialism has given rise to the conditions of immobility and "underdevelopingness". The consequence from this imperialist relationship is the artificial superimposition on these backward economies of a style of life which blindly immitated the metropolitan centers particularly by the dominant interests in the periphery.

The backward ruling classes whose destiny is much more dependent on the moods of Washington or Paris than their own peoples can freely mess with the lives of their "subjects". They indulge in hoarding, grain speculation and create artificial scarcities to steal the last possession of the starving masses entrapped in a famine crisis. This, in turn, accelerates the famine crisis like wild fire to other regions.

In the imperialist era, famine is not a result of absolute want, rather whatever its incidental origin, it develops from the policy of throwaway prices which the profiteering classes launch against the laboring masses. Only the oppressed people in the world are vulnerable to famine eruptions at this monopoly stage of capitalism.

German lecture

The UMass Department of German in conjunction with the German Departments of Smith College and Mount Holyoke College, has been able to arrange for a visit to the five college area by CHRISTA WOLF, perhaps the most prominent of contemporary East German authors. She is spending a period of six weeks at Oberlin College as Writer-in-Residence, and is thought to be the first East German writer to visit the USA.

Mrs. Wolf will be accompanied by her husband, GERHARD WOLF, a literary critic, who has written extensively on contemporary East German lyric poetry. He will lecture on this subject (in German) on Thursday, (4 p.m., 231 Herter Hall, University). Christa Wolf will hold readings from her work (with discussion) tomorrow at Smith College (4 p.m., Browsing Room, Library) and at Mount Holyoke College (8 p.m., New York Room), and has announced a lecture to be held on Thursday, (8 p.m., 102 Thompson Hall, University) on the following topic: 'Lesen und Schreiben. Zur Problematik des Prosaschreibens heute'.

Free chamber music

Four outstanding instrumentalists will collaborate in a program of chamber music by Schubert, Kodaly, and Brahms tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at UMass.

Phillip Naegele, violin, has been a frequent performer in the Marlboro Festival and at their concerts nationwide. He has recorded for Columbia and Da Camera records and is on the faculty of Smith College.

Marcus Thompson, viola, has won the Young Concert Artists Award of New York and has appeared regularly in recital and chamber concerts. He is now on the faculty of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Cellist Leopold Teraspulsky, a member of the UMass music faculty, has performed at the Casals Festivals in Puerto Rico and in Prades, France. He has also appeared for the past eight years at the Aspen Festival in Colorado and has recorded for Columbia, Pro Musica, and Coronet records.

Nigel Coxe, piano, has performed extensively as a chamber music player and soloist in Europe and the United States. In the past year he has been featured soloist with the BBC Welsh Orchestra and has given recitals with Pina Carmirelli at the Brattleboro Music Center, and in New Hampshire. Mr. Coxe is also on the UMass music faculty.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

Mime artist coming

"The Mechanics of Creativity," a mime performance by Fax, will be presented twice tomorrow evening, at 7:00 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium, UMass, and at 9:00 p.m. in the Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College.

Fax began his study of mime and movement as an undergraduate at Brandeis University, and after graduating continued studying with his teacher there, Kenyon Martin. Since 1970 he has toured the United States with Martin's National Pantomime Theatre. He has recently been teaching and performing in schools and clubs throughout the Boston area.

Admission will be 75 cents. Tickets can be purchased at the door or in advance on Tuesday and Wednesday from 10:00 a.m. - 1:00 p.m. in the Campus Center concourse in front of the Hatch at the University.

Everywoman's Center offers workshop

Project Self, a series of workshops by, for and about women and sponsored by the Everywoman's Center here will be offering a workshop in Consumer Law, Wednesdays from 1-3 p.m. for four weeks.

Everyone has probably had, or will have, at least one unfortunate experience with high pressure door-to-door salespeople, repair people who did dissatisfactory work, hassles from phone or electric companies, or trouble getting loans-mortgages. Now EWC is offering a workshop on what to do about these common problems.

"Women and Consumer Law" will cover what consumer rights are and how to be protected both before and after entering into a consumer transaction.

There is a $10.00 registration fee with some scholarship available. To register, come by Everywoman's Center in Goodell Building today, or call 545-0883.

Book returns soon

Beginning Monday, May 6, the Textbook Annex will be returning some of this semester's books to publishers. As such, we can no longer guarantee that your book will be on our shelves. If for any reason you have avoided purchasing a course book, please do so before Monday, May 6.

Help needed for fast

A major effort is being launched at UMass this week to participate in a Five College Fast to Save A People, planned for tomorrow.

The Fast to Save A People is focused on famine relief and long-term rebuilding of the Sahel, the Sub-Saharan region of Africa which has been experiencing drought, famine and large numbers of deaths by starvation for the past several years.

A Five College Rally in support of the Fast day is being planned for tomorrow at 7 p.m. on the Town Common.

Volunteers are needed to staff tables in the Campus Center and Dining Commons all of this week, explaining the famine relief need and asking for fasting, contributions, and support of the Rally.

Interested persons may call the United Christian Foundation office, 545-2661 or 545-2789 for further information.

A prison night

The first inmate I talked to was Pat. Pat is a heroin addict who is in jail for possession of heroin. He previously spent a year and a half in a Connecticut prison and has a Federal warrant out for his arrest now. Pat will be nineteen next week.

Pat said that when he gets out of jail he probably won't go back onto heroin, but only because he doesn't want to risk going back to jail. If heroin were made legal, he claims he'd go back on it without a second thought.

While I talked to Pat I looked around his cell. He had hung a curtain in front of his door (the guards make him take it down at night). There were photos of naked women on the wall, next to a large poster of a WAVE with the message 'I want you'. A radio hung on a nail. Some textbooks lay scattered next to his bed and there were a few cigarettes on the box that served as a bedside table.

The textbooks are from courses that Pat is taking at Berkshire Community College, along with several other inmates. Pat only stayed in school until the seventh grade, but in jail he has earned his high school diploma and is taking college courses.

Gov. Sargent to speak on nuclear energy

Governor Francis W. Sargent will be on campus once again tomorrow to announce "major state policy on nuclear power," The New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution said Friday.

Diana Sidebotham, Coalition president, said in a statement the governor is expected to discuss the state's role in guiding development of nuclear power.

She said Sargent's address would come at 4 p.m., directly after a meeting of the Coalition's board of directors in the Campus Center.

Predicting the safety of nuclear power plants and educating residents nearby to the critical problems raised are two headaches the power industry faces. Stories, page 19.

There was no immediate confirmation of the visit or address from Sargent's office.

The New England Coalition is a citizen advocacy group organized at Brattleboro, Vermont in 1971, originally to oversee safety and environmental questions during the construction of the Vermont Yankee Atomic Plant at Vernon, Vermont.

The coalition is said to be considering moving its base of operations to Amherst in order to more easily observe the planning and potential construction of twin $1.35 billion nuclear power plants in Montague by Northeast Utilities Inc.

Dear Aggie...

Dear Aggie,

Women's Lib has gone on step too far. I am presently the manager of an intramural softball team. Formerly, I was also the pitcher of this team. I couldn't make it to our last game so this female substituted for me. She pitched such a helluva game that the rest of the team decided they wanted her to finish out the season. I regard this as an insult to my masculinity. How can I regain my status?

A Nurd

Dear Nurd,

You are a nurd! Don't you know by now that not everyone can be a P.P. (perfect pitcher)? Would you consider it an insult to your male ego if another male took your place? Probably not! What is in question is your pitching only. Maybe you're just not qualified to play on the mound. Why not try another position like leftfield? If you still don't like it, LUMP IT!

Dear Aggie,

You think you have problems to solve, I'm "Puckered Up's" boyfriend and in my own interest I figured I'd better get my two cents in before everything gets too complicated and permanent damage is done. You see PU didn't tell you the whole story. Things were getting desperate so I took things into my own hands and moved to California. This way, either she'll calm down or she'll go kissing crazy on other guys and prove to herself and me that she's a kissing nympho. I'm betting she'll calm down because in the three and one half years we've been together we've gotten along really well and besides this little problem it's a great relationship. After a few months out here we got together again and she showed considerable improvement although I believe a little more time is necessary to get the kissing craze out of her system.

So you see, there is some productive action being taken and you can bet this'll all have a happy ending. Her writing to you for help was a good sign and it sounds like she's almost ready to resume a normal relationship with me again. Please don't put crazy ideas in her head although so far you seem to be genuinely interested in her search for happiness. Thanks.

(California Blues)

Dear CB,

Thanks, I'm glad things are working out, even though I did have nothing to do with it.

Dave A.L. — I hope today is better than yesterday.

"Well, Mr. Mask, my fearless protector, our work is all done for tonight," Chicago Black Hawk goalie Tony Esposito was beaten for six goals by the Bruins in two periods of action Sunday night. Mike Veisor, his replacement, shut out the B's over the final twenty minutes.

B's look to offense to eliminate Chicago

By KEN CAFARELL

BOSTON [UPI] — The Boston Bruins know what they must do to end the season for the Chicago Black Hawks-and it has nothing to do with conservative hockey.

Phil Esposito, John Bucyk and the rest of the Boston gang have given up their preoccupation with defensive hockey and have relit the after burners on their highpowered offense which produced the league's four top scorers this season.

The result has been two consecutive wins and 11 goals in the Stanley Cup semifinal series for a 3-2 edge.

A win Tuesday night in Chicago will eliminate the Black Hawks from the playoffs and the Bruins would play the winner of the New York Ranger - Philadelphia Flyers series, which is tied 2-2.

The Bruins virtually blasted the Black Hawks off Boston Garden ice Sunday, thanks to an incredible second period five goal blitz led by Buyck and Esposito. Esposito had two goals, both in that period, while Bucyk scored his second goal of the night and added an assist. "If we play as well as we did in the second period Sunday and in the two games in Chicago, we'll be hard to beat," said Esposito, who became the 11th National Hockey League player to score more than 100 points during playoff competition. His second goal have him 101 points.

"Chicago played a little looser Sunday. They were skating around ailittle bit more," said Bucyk. "But I think they're going to be tougher Tuesday with their own fans behind them."

"It's another one we've gotta win," said defenseman Dallas Smith, who scored his first playoff goal during the second period blitz. "They're too tough a club - if you get down to a seventh game, you never know what's going to happen."

Bruin Coach Bep Guidolin fairly beamed over the performance of his No. 1 line of Esposito, Ken Hodge and Wayne Cashman, who had been all but silent early in the series.

"When your big boys are shooting, you're doing well." "Andy Savard and Gregg Sheppard's lines have been doing the job, but you've gotta have those big boys scoring." The Bruins will have to keep up their offensive style if they are to win Tuesday because, as Bobby Orr said, "You can't sit back and wait for Chicago.

"If you sit back and wait, they'll kill you. They're a good hockey club."

John Havlicek goes up for two of his team-leading 26 points in Sunday's NBA championship battle with the Milwaukee Bucks. The Celtics took the home court advantage away from the Bucks winning 98-83.

NY-Philly go to round five

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — The deadlocked Stanley Cup semifinal series between the Philadelphia Flyers and the New York Rangers resumes here Tuesday night with both clubs vowing to prove or disprove the "home ice" advantage.

The Flyers won the first two games of the series while playing at home and the Rangers evened it in the next two games in New York, including a sudden-death victory Sunday.

Flyers' Captain Bobby Clarke said after the 2-1 loss Sunday, "I guess we've just got to go home and regroup."

Clarke noted two of the remaining three games in the best-of-seven series are scheduled here.

"I'd say that puts us in the driver's seat," he said.

His teammate, Gary Dornhoefer, agreed.

"If we can't win two in our building, we don't deserve it," Dornhoefer said.

Rangers' Coach Emile Francis disagreed with the home ice philosophy.

"Nobody has an edge on home ice when two teams are evenly balanced," he said. "All you have going for you is what's going in a particular game."

Rod Gilbert, who scored the winning goal in Sunday's overtime period, added, "We've won there before. We know we have to do it again."

It's the heavyweight vs. the lightweight in NBA championship

By MIKE O'BRIEN

MILWAUKEE [AP] — Coach Tom Heinsohn compared his Boston Celtics' playoff series against the Milwaukee Bucks to a prize fight, a classic match of boxer vs. slugger.

"We're the light heavyweight and they're the heavyweight," Heinsohn said Monday. "No way a heavyweight like Sonny Liston is going to catch us and hit us. We dance around, like Sugar Ray Robinson, and they've got to catch us. That's what it amounts to."

The Celtics, fast breaking on offense and employing a full court press on defense, wore down the Bucks 98-83 Sunday for a 1-0 lead in the National Basketball Association championship series. Heinsohn said the Celtics intend to maintain their pressure tactics in the second game in the best-of-seven series Tuesday night.

"We know the Bucks are a great basketball team and it's going to be a very tough series," he said. "But we've shown we're capable of playing our style. They still have to establish they can play their style, which is a slowdown.

"Obviously, they'll try to do something about our press," he added. "I'm sure they'll make some changes. But I'll tell you something. I looked at the films this morning, and I think we can press even better."

The Bucks' 83 points were their third lowest total of the season and their lowest ever in a playoff game.

"There's no question the pressure affected us, but we beat ourselves," said Bucks' Coach Larry Costello. "We gave them too many uncontested shots. But we feel we have people we can win with. If we can just get the ball up and run our offense, we'll be in good shape."

Costello declined to say what adjustments he planned, but admitted that forwards Bob Dandridge or Mickey Davis might see some duty at guard.

Sunday, the Celtics centered their pressure on Oscar Robertson and eventually tired the 35-year-old playmaker, who had to play all but two minutes because a pulled calf muscle sidelined reserve guard Jon McGlocklin in the second quarter.

McGlocklin will not play Tuesday and his availability later in the series is in doubt. The Bucks' fastest guard, Lucius Allen, had knee surgery March 16 and is out of the playoffs.

"I don't know whether Oscar can play 46 minutes again or not, but he'll have to," Costello said.

Robertson scored only two baskets, one a tip-in, on 13 shots. Costello attributed Robertson's poor showing to weariness.

"I think as you get older, you use all your strength bringing the ball up the floor and it affects your shooting," he said.

Gorillas bomb Amherst, 20-0

By MIKE ELLIOTT

Yesterday was hot and humid and so were Garber's Gorillas as they blanked Amherst College, 20-0.

Both UMass goalies, John Rutledge and Bobby Durland, pitched in for the shutout, playing two periods each. Neither goalie was severely tested, however, because Amherst didn't have the ball very much. The Gorillas controlled the ball nearly 70 per cent of the time while Amherst had it about 15 per cent. The other 15 per cent was taken up by loose balls with both teams fighting for them. When Amherst had the ball they could hardly shoot, let alone score. The Lord Jeffs of Amherst had only eleven shots on net – eight in the first half and three in the second.

The game was a physical one, with plenty of checking and slashing on both sides. UMass had eleven penalties; Amherst, an equal number.

The outcome of the game was never in doubt, though. Within the opening minutes of the game Harry McVey made a good run and dodge and beat his man inside for what turned out to be the game-winning goal. McVey continued his scoring spree and wound up with four goals and three assists on the day. He now leads the team in scoring with a total of 61 points – (24 goals and 37 assists).

The halftime score was 10-0 and it didn't look as though Amherst had a chance. The Gorillas made sure of this in the second half as they doubled their lead.

UMass simply outplayed and outclassed their opponent. However, they did not play to the best of their abilities. At some points in the game they had trouble picking up loose balls. Their caliber of play was somewhat less than what they had displayed against Williams College on Saturday.

Amherst College was so far out of the game in the fourth period that UMass head coach, Dick Garber, revamped his lineup. Coach Garber had attackman, Peter Connolly playing defense while defensemen Russ Incorvia, Billy Blaustein, Rich Lally, Tim Murphy, and Kurt Olson played the forward positions. The defensemen had a hand in scoring the final UMass goal. Both Kurt Olson and Rich Lally were positioned in front of the Amherst cage, on either side of the crease. Olson got the ball and fired a hard shot, hitting the Lord Jeffs' goalie in the chest. Lally picked up the rebound at the left side of the net and bounced it in.

The UMass fastbreak did not develop often in the game but when it did it was worked to perfection. The finest example was the one which resulted in the seventeenth goal for the Gorillas. Tom Geronimos started the play, breaking down the middle of the field. The ball was quickly passed to midfielder Ken Michaud, on the right wing, to George Beraino and then to Jeff Spooner, standing outside of the Amherst crease.

The clue to how the UMass team played against Amherst is the number of fastbreaks completed. The Gorillas had only two yesterday. When they are at their best their fastbreak is the most potent weapon. They played well enough yesterday to beat most teams but their fastbreaks were not working.

Yesterday's game featured some excellent shooting, however. The Gorillas connected on over fifty per cent of their shots. They displayed some of their "cannons" yesterday. The fifteenth UMass goal was a result of a solid shot, fired from the restraining line by midfielder Bruce Sibson. Sibson gathered in a pass from Tom Geronimos at the line and whistled it by the Amherst goaltender.

The win by the Gorillas was the seventh in a row. They have beaten, in order, Connecticut, Harvard, Fairleigh Dickinson, Boston College, Holy Cross, Williams College, and Amherst. They are presently ranked ninth in the nation and will have to finish in the top eight if they have any hopes of making the NCAA post season tournament.

Garber's Gorillas will have a five day layoff until they play the University of New Hampshire on Saturday. After the UNH game the Gorillas will face Brown in what should be the most important game of their season.

"I'VE GOT IT" says UMass attackman Andy Scheffer as he scoops up loose ball in an earlier game against Cortland State. Harry Mcvey, Pete Connolly, and Bill Arnold also battle for the ball.

McCraw lifts Angels to victory over Sox

BOSTON [UPI] – Tom McCraw, who previously had just one hit this season, collected two homers, two doubles and drove in four runs Monday night, helping the California Angels snap a five-game losing streak with a 7-2 victory over the Boston Red Sox.

Bill Singer gave up a first inning run but calmed down to go the route for his third win in five decisions. Singer gave up seven hits and struck out seven. Luis Tiant suffered his third loss against one win for the Red Sox, who have lost six of their last seven.

McCraw homered to right in the second to tie the game, doubled home one of two Angel runs in the sixth and pasted a two-run blast into the Red Sox bullpen in the eighth. McCraw had been batting .143 going into the game but upped his average to .455 with the perfect four-for-four night.

Rookie shortstop Dave Chalk helped the Angels' attack with a pair of triples and a sacrifice fly.

Boston took a 1-0 lead in the first inning on a walk to Doug Griffin, Cecil Cooper's single and a sacrifice fly by Carl Yastrzemski. Griffin's 15-game hitting streak came to an end as he went 0-3 against Singer.

McCraw tied the game in the second with his first homer and the Angels added solo runs in the third and fourth innings to go ahead to stay. California sealed the game in the sixth on Morris Nettles' first major league hit, a stolen base, McCraw's double and Chalk's triple.

Crew still undefeated defeats Coast Guard

By BOB ESTELLE

The varsity crew won a close race from the Coast Guard Academy last Saturday at Lake Wickaboag in West Brookfield. It was the fourth regatta won by the Minutemen in their quest to defend their national title, won last year at the Dad Vail.

The day started off with the first freshman boat racing against the Coast Guard frosh. With a slight tailwind on the starboard side, the little Minutemen beat the Cadets by three lengths, taking a big lead right from the start of the race.

The UMass frosh completed the 2,000 meter course in 5:48.8, which turned out to be the best time of the day. The Cadets had a time of 6:01.3.

In commenting about the race, frosh coach Chick Leonard said, "I feel that they rowed well. The difference between this week and last (when the frosh lost to Boston U.) is that they didn't hurt themselves with mistakes."

The jayvees from UMass and the Coast Guard were next and was the closest race of the day with the Cadets winning by three seats. The winning time was 6:08.8 while the Minutemen had a time of 6:10. Racing for the UMass jayvees were Bob Norton, Dick D'Addario, Bill Vose, Rob Hopkins, Mike Kaczmarek, Rich Jamara, John Moynihan and Jim Bouzianis. Mark Lyle was the coxswain.

The varsity race followed and it was never close. UMass pulled ahead at the start and was ahead by a length halfway through the course. They glided through the remainder of the course and finished with a time of 5:53.1. The Coast Guard had a time of 5:56.4.

The UMass varsity had Peter Berg, Paul Gowen, Jack Watkins, Kevin Conner, Rich Clair, Bill Fitzpatrick, Peter Flood and Steve Loomer racing. Bruce Kline was the coxswain.

The final race of the day was a four-man race, UMass entering two frosh boats to Coast Guard's one. The frosh boat with Al Segal, Ted Mone, Bob Cullen, Jim Tilley and coxswain Andy Burton pulled away early in the race and won it by two lengths over the Coast Guard. The second frosh boat entered by UMass finished way behind the two. The winning time was 6:50.8. The Coast Guard boat had a time of 6:57.3 and the second UMass boat had a time of 7:05.

Racing in the second boat in this race were Rich Efthim, Mark Lucas, Jim Linnehan, Walter Berger and coxswain Bruce Jacobson.

Next week, in preparation for the Dad Vail (two weeks away), the crew will be in Worcester for a big race with several other New England schools including Trinity, UMass' biggest challenger for the Dad Vail cup.

Town transit proposal finalized

By KATHY SHEEHAN

The Amherst Committee on Public Transportation met last night to finalize their proposal to be given at the annual 1974 Town Meeting next Monday night. Its proposal, detailed in an interim report, request the Selectman (1) to take such action necessary or advisable to establish and enroll the town as a member of the Lower Pioneer Valley Regional Transit Authority (LPVRTA); or (2) if the LPVRTA is not established prior to September 6, 1974 to take such action to establish a Regional Transit Authority consisting of Amherst and interested area towns and cities. The Committee also requests the town to raise a sum of money for the purpose of making comprehensive and detailed public transportation studies.

Included in the LPVRTA would be Amherst, Northampton, Hadley, Easthampton, Holyoke, South Hadley, Springfield, Chicopee, West Springfield, Agawam, East Longmeadow, Ludlow, Longmeadow, Westfield, and Wilbraham. If a majority of these towns vote in favor of the Transit Authority, it will be automatically created. However, a town may vote to create the authority and then petition not to participate. Springfield has already officially affirmed its desire to create this public transportation authority.

According to the interim report, a regional transit authority would have several advantages for Amherst. It would mean that the Town could benefit from state and federal financial aid to public transportation to an extent not possible if the Town proceeds alone. Under an established Transit Authority, 80 per cent federal and 10 per cent state funding is available for capital equipment; and the 50 per cent of the deficit.

Some neighboring towns have expressed interest in cooperating in a regional system; among them are Belchertown and Ware.

More importantly, the new public transportation could be designed in such a way as to provide access for handicapped people. Traffic congestion would be relieved and the pressure to build new roads would diminish, according to the Committee report.

If the Transit Authority is created, it will have the authority to purchase new buses or to contract with already existing bus companies in the area: Holyoke Street Railway and UMass.

With respect to UMass, the University could possible face a reduction in cost under the Transit Authority. The UMass bus budget is now approximately $400,000. Under the Authority, the state would subsidize half of the cost, so the cost to UMass would be reduced to $200,000 while maintaining the same services and student drivers.

The total estimated cost for Amherst's participation in the Transit Authority is $7,000. The Committee is expected to appear before the Finance Committee Thursday night to get a budget approval.

Phonothon surpasses goal

By EILEEN O'CONNOR
MDC Special

This year's phonothon was "an overwhelming success" according to Brenda Rau, the coordinator of the operation. With a goal set at $35,000, the phonothon eventually totalled $38,789.50.

The phonothon was run by students this year, which is a precedent for UMass and most colleges in the United States. In the past, said Ms. Rau, UMass alumni did all the work, and it was doubted that students would meet up to their standards.

However, groups of students cooperated with free beer and food as an added incentive. Rau said the students were "afraid to leave their seats for fear of losing them and their phones."

Rau began recruiting volunteers two and a half months before the operation began. Chairperson, Bobbie Laporte said, "I'm glad it is over so that I can return to studying."

Other participants were leaders of individual dorms and organizations. Steve Souza led McNamara to a $7,386. victory, while Scott Hazeltine organized Cashin to a $4,055 second place position. Also the Vets, a fraternity, placed third with a total of $3,927.

Tod Manent of Cashin raised a total of $2,500 alone and was "a dorm by himself", according to Rau.

The project took place upstairs in Memorial Hall with thirty phones in constant operation in the evenings. According to Rau, when enough phones were not available, office phones were used.

15,000 calls were made and a total of 7,000 alumni were contacted. 25,000 pledges were received with the largest at $250.00. A $2,000 dollar pledge was made but was not included in the total because of it's unbelievability.

The average pledge ranged between $15 and $20. Fifty-four alumni joined the Second Century Club which guarantees $100 per year.

Rau said that a fair share of the alumni obliged and if they did not the students were able to deal with it.

Much of the money will be donated to BDIC, Everywoman's Center, Outreach, and scholarships in general.

Although the phonothon has officially ended, work has not.

Ms. Rau wants to "pat the right people on the back." Individual totals must be tallied and winners congratulated. McNamara is being given a party for their efforts.

So far, only $5,000 of the pledges has come into Alumni Office.

Rau said: "We'll have another phonothon next year, I'm sure!" She also said that the phonothon gives the students a chance to familiarize themselves with the alumni office before they graduate.

Overall, the phonothon was an "exhausting process but worth it," according to Rau.

Town zoning board ponders solar energy proposal

By JOE BROSSEAU
MDC Special

The Amherst Zoning Board is currently considering a $3 million proposal for a commercial center heated by solar energy to be built on a five acre site at the corner of Main and Northeast Streets in Amherst.

As proposed, the center will include the following:

—A 500 seat auditorium for the performing arts.

—A restaurant with a capacity of about 269.

—A 24 hour coffeehouse seating 189.

—A jazz lounge which would hold about 285.

—A health club with a 60 foot swimming pool.

—A shopping mall with space for about ten shops.

—Space for about 12 offices.

The most novel feature of the plan is the solar heating aspect designed by architect Philip Lehn of 655 Main Street, Amherst. It contains two separate systems for heating the center in the winter and cooling it in the summer.

As designed, large sections of the roof and walls would be covered by five-layered sheets of transparent glass. These would allow sunlight in to warm the mall in the winter. In the summer they would turn opaque, thus reflecting sunlight and keeping the center cool.

In addition to this there would be heat conducting panels in the roof. These would be connected by heating ducts to the basement where heat would be stored in water.

The site of the proposed center is owned by developer Fred Boyajian, who purchased the land for $170,000 last February. He is currently awaiting a decision by the Zoning Board on the issuance of four special permits. Boyajian is also the owner of Quicksilver, a bar on North Pleasant Street. Neither he nor architect Lehn were available for comment.

Ground breaking for the center is scheduled for next spring or summer pending the issuance of permits. However, this could be delayed for us to a year until the completion of a new sewage plant for Amherst, according to Zoning Board chairman Kenneth Rosenthal.

Completion is currently slated for the summer of 1976.

Nixon warns business

From Wire Services

WASHINGTON – President Nixon called on business leaders last night to used restraint in future price increases, warning that continued high inflation would bring back demands for wage and price controls.

Speaking to a group of 3,200 business leaders and their wives attending a banquet at the 62nd annual convention of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Nixon made no mention of his Watergate woes.

"If the fires of inflation continue to burn too brightly, the demand for controls will come up again in the country and will be reflected in the Congress," he said.

Earlier Tuesday a handful of Democratic Senators sought but failed to generate some congressional enthusiasm for standby presidential authority to clamp controls on sectors of the economy where inflation is especially bad.

Sunderland gets new P.O.; should mean better service

By DONNA A. DIODATI
MDC Staff

A brand-new one-story brick building on Garage Rd. in Sunderland opened its doors last Tuesday. The building's occupant: the United States Post Office.

Postmaster Dean Scudder, who has held his potition for 18 years, commented on the new facility: "We have much more room here. There are 22 parking spaces (as opposed to four), and there's a ramp for handicapped people." He added that the efficiency of the facility should be reflected in better service to the postal patrons.

Prior to its move last week, the Post Office was located in a small wooden building (which also houses a beauty parlor) on South Main St. (Rt. 47). Before that, the mail service operated from part of the building John & Rudy's Market now occupies.

Construction on the new Post Office building began last November, and was completed a few weeks ago. Owned by a Greenfield resident, it has been leased to the United States Postal Service for a thirty-year period.

Postmaster Scudder says that Sunderland's population is expected to reach 9,000 by the 1990's, according to consultants' reports. The town's Post Office currently serves over 3,000 residents.

Calling the recent growth in Sunderland's mail volume "tremendous," Scudder explained that three years ago there was only one RFD route; now there are two such routes that cover outlying areas. Other residents (except apartment complex dwellers) pick up their mail at rented boxes in the Post Office. There are 484 such "lock boxes" in the new building; the former Post Office had only 188.

In addition to Postmaster Scudder, the Post Office employs four others - three women and one man.

UMass and 'Affirmative Action'

By BARBARA VOORHEES
MDC Staff

Affirmative Actions are steps to bring about equality; steps being taken at this University to ensure that on-campus employment and student admission to any University area are non-discriminatory in regards to race, color, religion, sex, age or national origin.

Because it is inpart Federally-funded, the University is required by law to have an Affirmative Action (AA) policy; in the area of higher education, the Federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare enforces AA.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery is ultimately responsible for the implementation of AA programs. He has delegated responsibilities to all parts of the University via the vice chancellors and their staffs.

Associate Provost, Jean Leppaluoto, a co-ordinator of AA for academic affairs cited three dates as important in the formulation of AA programs: 1964, 1968, 1972, the years when minority, women's and students' rights, respectively, became legally protected.

"Now we must be concerned with making these groups aware of the rights they have," said Leppaluoto, "and with implementing programs to protect these rights."

Under the academic affairs AA policy each department and unit on campus is being: 1.) analyzed to determine whether women or minority group members are under-represented or under-utilized (students and employees). 2.) evaluated on general recruitment practices.

Active recruitment and hiring of women and minority group members are expected in all departments where there are deficiencies. However, persons may not be demoted or displaced from their jobs in order to fulfill AA plans.

"It seems that some people fear there will be mass hiring and recruitment of unqualified women and minorities," said Leppaluoto.

"This is not what is happening," she continued. "It is illegal to hire an unqualified employee or admit an unqualified student for AA purposes."

Each department and administrative unit within academic affairs is required to maintain records documenting its efforts with respect to the implementation of the AA program.

Southwest board considers plans for theater workshop in Center

By CHRIS WALTER
MDC Staff

Plans are being considered by the Southwest Cultural Policy Board to establish a theater workshop in the Hampden Student Center.

The project is being organized by Joshua Spahn, a junior theater major who has produced several plays on campus. He would be in charge, with a faculty sponsor, of producing works, and teaching a theater course.

"There is a demand for the arts," commented Spahn in an interview, "We'd like to establish more creative uses of energy than streaking or throwing things out of windows."

The theater would be devoted to Ensemble work, according to Spahn. He explained that ensemble theater is a type of production which differs from traditional drama in the way that it is produced.

Ensemble concentrates on "allowing the actors and actresses to get more deeply into their roles," Spahn said, and this "Heightens the effect of the play. Production time is longer, but this allows greater interaction among the actors and they become more attuned to each other."

Another facet of Ensemble, which would also decrease the cost of a studio, is that scenery and props are very basic. "We'd like to use a building block set in the studio," he said, "Shapes and forms which can be re-arranged. You're better off suggesting something to an audience and letting them use their imaginations to become part of the play, than telling them what they should be thinking."

Funding for the workshop, if approved, would come from Academic Affairs and the Southwest Cultural Policy Board. Bob Antil, of Southwest Cultural, said he supports the project, and estimated that funds would range rom $500-$800.

"If theater is here, I think people will pay attention to it. People are being turned off by traditional drama, and we'd like to do something more meaningful," Spahn concluded, "There is a lot of drama outside of Shakespeare and Chekov."

Five RSO groups' affirmative action plans rejected

By MIKE KNEELAND
MDC Staff

Some RSO Groups may not be able to spend their allocated money because their affirmative action statement was not approved by the Student Senate Women's Committee.

Cathy Korbett, Chairperson of the Committee, said of 13 statements reviewed to date by her group, five have been rejected. Rejected were statements from the Collegian, Boltwood Project, Belchertown Project, Index, International Programs Office, and the Amateur Radio Association.

The Federal Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) Dept., through an Executive Order, requires all Federally funded organizations to submit affirmative action plans. Because the University is in part Federally funded, Korbett explained, it is required by law to submit the statement. The Student Senate, therefore, has established the Women's Committee, which presently consists of 7 women and one man, to review affirmative action plans submitted by RSO-funded groups.

See below for affirmative action and the administration.

"The affirmative action is not concerned with increasing the numbers of white men in groups," said Korbett, "but is concerned with increasing the numbers of women and minority people in groups."

RSO-funded groups must submit an affirmative action plan to the Women's Committee which includes the following:

—A breakdown, according to race and sex, of the group's staff.

—A description of the selection process for paid position with a title

—A plan for the recruitment of members of the organization

—Details of how the program addresses issues relevant to Third World People and women students (when applicable)

—Specific affirmative action goals

—Plans to meet affirmative action goals or documentation of affirmative action efforts.

—Identification of problem areas

If a group fails to meet the above specifications, the Women's Committee may reject the statement and ask that another, more acceptable, statement be written. And, according to a Senate Master Binding Clause, the RSO Group may not spend its allocated money until an acceptable statement is submitted and accepted.

"I feel bad that everyone feels bad about this," Korbett said. "I don't feel the affirmative action has to hurt anyone..It should be a good, educational experience."

Printers party

That annual holiday of ink, newsprint, beer and sandwiches, the Printers' Party, is upon us.

All Collegian personnel are invited, nay, urged to attend. It will be held at the Ware River News (in Ware) on Thursday, May 9, and all the goodies are provided by the printer. If you wish, you can bring some brownies and cookies, etc.

Transportation, in the form of a bus, will be provided. It will leave the Student Union at 6:30 p.m. and return at 1:00 a.m., but normally a couple of cars go down too, so departure times aren't hard and fast.

So come and see the miracle of a young Collegian being born, and celebrate same. Sign up with Bill Ballou in the office.

Inmates receive 'some sense of direction'

By FRITS GEURTSEN
MDC Staff

MDC Staff Reporter Frits Geurtsen recently spent a night in Berkshire County Jail. This is part two in a two-part series of his impressions.

Another "inmate" I had a chance to talk to was Jim. Jim is actually a UMass student who is voluntarily serving 90 days and getting credit for it. He told me more about the jail.

"This jail is a lot different than most because it gives the inmates some sense of direction," he said, "but at the same time it's considered a harder one to do time at because it's so liberal. The other jails make an inmate's life so rigourously structured that time goes by a lot faster."

"Inmates get their heads together a lot quicker up here," he explained, "but then what? One morning they wake up, they know what they want out of life, and they've still got ten months to go before they're out."

Jim said that he didn't get any problems from the inmates about being there, once they were satisfied that he wasn't a policeman and wasn't going to go running to the guards every time something was wrong.

"As a matter of fact," he said, "I got more hassle from the guards. They can't understand why I'd want to do this."

Several people mentioned that the inmates tend to be more aware of themselves and what's happening than people on the outside, because they have to deal with everything. They have no escapes like alcohol or simply walking away from a problem. They've got to face their problems — and they've got a lot more time to think.

Lock-up was at nine o'clock. On weekends and holidays it's eight-thirty. Someone told us that the cells we were occupying were the worst in the place because they were on the lowest level and got very cold and damp at night. They did.

I stood at the door for a few minutes after I'd been locked in and then turned around to survey my cell. My Cell. That's a frightening concept.

It was exactly like all the other cells except it didn't have that homey touch that some of the others had achieved. There was a

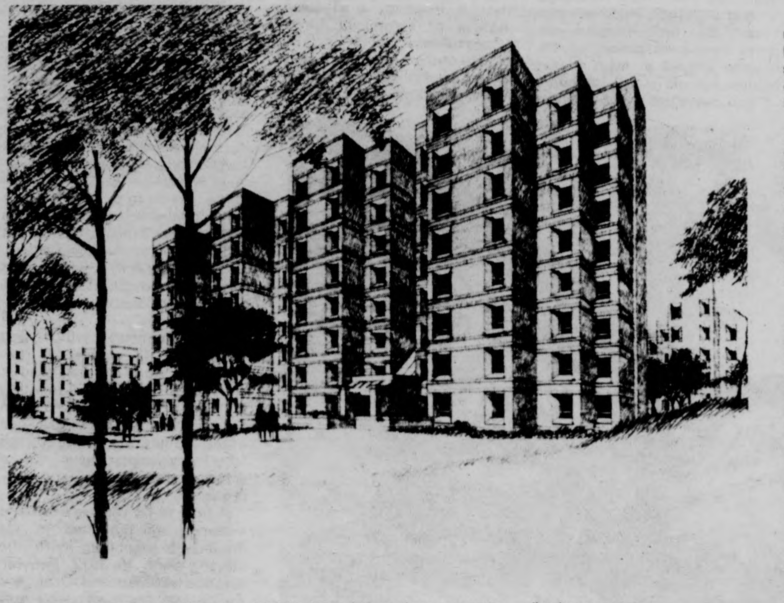
Sylvan Area: Living 'the suite life'

By SAMUEL HASSAN

The following is the first in a three part series about the Sylvan Residential Area at UMass.



A little north of Northeast, above WOPE and across from Orchard Hill stand the three newest dorms on campus.

Known as the Sylvan Residential Area, the dorms are nine story brick structures, they cost a total of $10 million to construct and are named for three former UMass trustees; Harry Dunlap Brown, William M. Cashin, and Elizabeth L. McNamara.

Cashin was first to open in the Spring of 1971. Because it was in a new area, the Housing Office had trouble getting people to move in. Some students were actually forced to live in Sylvan at first, but now the complaint that, "nothings going on up there," is as old as the area itself.

Brown and McNamara (last semesters second most requested dorm on campus) were opened in the fall of 1971. The Area was officially dedicated on October 23rd, 1971. The three dorms are set in beautiful wooded surroundings thus the Latin word sylva meaning wooded or forest area.

In typical UMass style, the dorms are surrounded by interesting modern landscaping, but unlike some areas of the campus, natural flora abound. If you've never been up to Sylvan, come up and check it out.

Architect J.C. Warnicke designed the suite set up, a two stall, one shower bathroom surrounded by two or three fairly compact double rooms, one or two singles, and what the suite centers around, a usually well furnished lounge depending on the occupants.

Living in a suite can be unique in that a closer, more interpersonal relationship can develop among suite mates. In fact the dorms were initially intended to house mostly engineering students who could work on their studies together.

All of the dorms are coed, and while there are predominately male or female suites, some suites are coed.

More privacy in the bathroom is one aspect of living in a suite that can be advantageous, depending on your outlook. But there are disadvantages too.

In any area, meeting people can be a problem, and if you really don't hit it off with your suite mates, Sylvan can be a drag. The privacy of a suite can become loneliness unless an unhappy resident goes out of his or her way to meet new people. The question arises; What's worse, being lonely by yourself, or lonely in a crowd?

Any dorm is what the students make it, so rather than describe the lounge parties, the poker games, some studying that actually goes on, etc., I will try to cover all that Sylvan offers its residents.

Like all dorms on campus Sylvan dorms have a security system, and this means for student jobs. Twenty-six students check keys from 11 p.m. to 4 a.m., till 6 a.m. on weekends. The security guards are paid $1.85 per hour, and if the crime figures for Sylvan are reflective of their work, the guards do a good job.

According to a March 15th, 1974 report on Student Security Policy by David L. Johnston of the Campus Police, Sylvan, with 12 per cent of the campus population makes only 8 per cent of the calls received.. The only area with a lower call record is Northeast, 12 per cent population, 4 per cent of the calls. Southwest with 47 per cent of the population, is responsible for 62 per cent of the crime reports made from dorms to the Police. Naturally all crimes are not reported, but unless Sylvan residents are more negligent than other students on campus, crime is relatively low.

Tomorrow's story will look at Sylvan's answer to the biggest crime in America today, rising food costs. Read about the subshop, academic offerings, WSYL, recreational facilities, juvenile journalism at its best and more, tomorrow and Friday.

Black Theatre Workshop called 'step above black exploitation'

By GLORIA MONTGOMERY
Black News Service

The Saturday night presentation of Black Theatre Workshop at Smith College was undoubtedly meant to be a step above black exploitation in theatre. It was a serious attempt to deal with human relationships. Blacks were not depicted as a culturally deprived, helpless and hopeless group of people awaiting the beneficence of white peoples salvation. Black people were proud and demanding and it is this sign of humanity, this strength that we must cheer.

The Black Theatre Workshop themed, "A Revelation", presented three short plays, the choreography and songs were inspired by the latest release of Doug and Jean Carn on Black Jazz records. Featured was the talent of sisters from Smith College including several other black students from the five college community. Among the cast appearing in Saturday nights performance was Yolanda King, daughter of the late Dr. Martin Luther King. Yolanda King proved to be unsurpassable in her successful portrayal of an elderly, however, overbearing black woman who showed an undying love for her family and race. Clearly it was the wisdom and strength of this woman which enabled all those around her to survive.

In her efforts to educate her grandson, Eugene, on how to stand up for those things in which he believe and deal effectively with white people, Mrs. Love, played by Yolanda King proved through the force of her own personality (and the use of her magic potion) that there does exist a methodology to deal with the complexities of human existence.

The play was more than mildly entertaining. It was powerful enough to make an important statement; that black people are indeed angry and that the white hero is not our savior. This play called, "A Contribution", was written by Ted Shrine. Other cast included Lucy Holland, as Katy and Floyd Cummings as Eugene.

The second play recorded a familiar theme, that of a white couple who adopts a black child. This theme, however, proved to be a very irritating issue to Richard, played by Winston Williams of UMass. This play portrayed young white liberals who out of their own insecurities feel the need to pay tribute to the struggle of black people by adopting a black child. Richard took this as an issue to probe deeper than the surface realities and raised questions regarding what could become of a child who was compelled to grow up in such isolation from his own race. Roz portrayed by Joanne Lyons experienced a meaningful confrontation with herself with regard to her own black identity. We must view the theme and setting of this play called, "Sacrifice, written by Beverly Morgan as somewhat mediocre in plot. However it was entertaining.

The third presentation called, "Sister Son-ji" was written by Sister Sonia Sanchez. It was brillantly performed by Beverly Morgan. Sister Son-ji interpreted the experiences of a neurotic black woman who when encountered by certain concrete realities, learned to cope effectively with them. This play symbolized the strength of the black woman.

Perhaps certain decided advantages as effective acting, excellent choreography and timely photography are what made the Black Theatre Workshop a success. In any event, the performance showed loads of creativity and excitement.

A new minority is emerging at UMass...nontokers. Watch for MDC's Stephen Seche's in depth report in the Collegian.

Transcripts lay blame on Dean

From the Wire Services

WASHINGTON — Edited transcripts of some of President Nixon's secret Watergate tapes went to Capitol Hill yesterday accompanied by a White House statement saying they prove he had "no knowledge" of the bugging or its Cover-up and that John W. Dean III is the real culprit.

watergate aftereffects

But perhaps the most crucial of those transcripts showed that Nixon 13 months ago rejected granting clemency to bugging conspirator E. Howard Hunt Jr. as politically impossible but sounded out Dean about meeting Hunt's demands for hush money "damn soon."

"It seems to me we have to keep the cap on the bottle that much, or we don't have any options," Nixon told Dean, adding that he thought John N. Mitchell would be the best man to put in charge of raising $1 million to keep the defendants quiet.

The transcript of a two-hour meeting Nixon had March 21, 1973, with Dean and then-White House Chief of Staff H. R. Haldeman, also showed that Nixon wanted a new grand jury investigation of the bugging scandal at least in part because it would be a secret forum.

"You can refuse to talk," agreed Haldeman.

"You can take the Fifth Amendment," added Dean.

"That's right...," said Nixon. "You can say 'I don't remember.' You can say 'I can't recall. I can't give any answer to that, that I can recall'."

These and similar passages perhaps were among those Nixon had in mind Monday night, when he said in a nationally televised speech that people reading them "might interpret in drastically different ways."

But the White House, in a 15,000-word summary released along with the transcripts, said they prove Nixon is innocent of all Dean's charges of complicity in the Watergate affair.

"In all of the thousands of words spoken, even though they often are unclear and ambiguous, not once does it appear that the President of the United States was engaged in a criminal plot to obstruct justice," the summary said.

One of the quotes included in the brief as evidence of Nixon's determination to clear up Watergate came from an April 15, 1973 conversation with Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry Petersen about the refusal of conspirator G. Gordon Liddy to cooperate with government prosecutors.

"I want him to be sure to understand that as far as the President is concerned, everybody in this case is to talk and to tell the truth. You are to tell everybody and you don't even have to call me on that with anybody. You just say those are your orders."

The White House brief, constructed generally along chronological lines, notes that no one, not even Dean as Nixon's chief accuser, has alleged that the President had advance knowledge of the wiretapping burglary at Democratic party headquarters on June 17, 1972.

The transcripts of Nixon's conversations totaled 1,308 pages and were distributed to reporters at midafternoon at the White House, six hours after they were delivered to the House Judiciary Committee that is considering Nixon's impeachment.

The committee, which had subpoenaed 42 presidential conversations April 11, cancelled a scheduled morning meeting without explanation. Chairman Peter W. Rodino Jr., D-N.J., and other Democrats charged the edited transcripts were not a sufficient response to the subpoena.

A total of 48 conversations and meetings are presented in the document beginning with the meeting Sept. 15, 1972, between Nixon, Haldeman and Dean and ending with the meeting on April 27, 1973, between the President, assistant Attorney General Henry Petersen who was then heading the Watergate investigation, and press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler.

Included were edited transcripts of 31 of the conversations the Rodino committee had subpoenaed plus 17 others that were not. The White House said nine other conversations demanded by the panel had never been recorded and two other tapes could not be found.

Nixon's public statement of April 30, 1973 in which he announced the firing of Dean and the resignations of Haldeman, Ehrlichman and Attorney General Richard Kleindienst also was included in the package.

Transcripts of edited versions of many of President Nixon's Watergate conversations arrive on Capital Hill yesterday to be turned over to the House Judiciary Committee.

Panel Republicans will accept tapes; Democrats undecided

WASHINGTON [UPI]-Republicans on the House Judiciary Committee yesterday accepted with some misgivings President Nixon's decision to furnish only transcripts of subpoenaed Watergate tapes, but they were ready to battle any Democratic attempt to reject the offer.

Committee Chairman Peter Rodino, D-N.J., declined television network offers for equal time to respond to Nixon's Monday night speech. An aide said Rodino did not want to participate in a political game and House Speaker Carl Albert, D-Okla, said it would not be a good idea for him to accept it.

Soon after delivery of the transcripts from the White House, committee Democrats scheduled a caucus to discuss their possibile recourse to what they considered less than full compliance with the committee subpoena.

Democrats generally spoke harshly of the Nixon offer calling the transcripts a "mish-mash" and a "coverup" but they appeared to have reached no concensus on what to do about it. Republicans seemed to want to accept the transcripts and drop the issue.

Committee Republicans held their own half-hour caucus with the House GOP leadership.

House Republican leader John J. Rhodes of Arizona said "the overwhelming majority of the people in the room felt the President was in substantial compliance with the subpoena," but he said there were a few dissenters.

The station wagon-load of transcripts was delivered to the impeachment inquiry headquarters one-half hour before the 10 a.m. EDT deadline stipulated in the subpoena which demanded tape recordings of 42 conversations.

Telegrams poured into the Capitol offices of most of the 38 committee members, most of the messages opposed to the President's position. One GOP office said it got 29 telegrams in the first mail and all were unfavorable to Nixon. During the morning, 4,500 telegrams arrived at Rodino's office and most of them opposed Nixon.

But Nixon got some strong support from Republicans in both Houses, including the endorsement of Sen. Barry M. Goldwater of Arizona.

"I believe this is a fair and equitable way to approach an extremely difficult problem," Goldwater said. "If that is not enough for the Rodino committee, I am afraid I will have to reach the committee that the House Judiciary Committee, on a question of the very greatest national importance, has decided to play a partisan role aimed at vote-getting rather than truth-getting."

Senate OK's Simon

WASHINGTON [UPI]-The Senate yesterday confirmed William E. Simon as Treasury secretary.

The Simon nomination, one of the least controversial major appointments of the Nixon administration, was routinely brought to the Senate floor by Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield and was passed by voice vote with no debate.

Simon, former head of the Federal Energy Office, succeeds George P. Schultz who announced his resignation earlier to return to private life sometime next month.

Kissinger arrives in Egypt with hope for settlement

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt [UPI]-Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger arrived in Egypt yesterday with "increased hope" after his talks with the Russians and Algerians on arranging a military disengagement between Israel and Syria.

He came seeking more help from Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, in two days of talks at this seaside city, before tackling the problem directly by flying first to Israel, then to Syria.

A high official aboard Kissinger's plane said that since Kissinger is going to Israel first he hoped Israel would make the first move to break the impasse with Syria - since it is Israel which is occupying Syrian territory captured in the 1967 and last October's wars.

If Israel does not make the first move, then Kissinger's mission will be more difficult, the high official said, but Syria also must make concessions for it to succeed.

Sadat greeted Kissinger with a smiling, hearty, "Hello, Henry," and a warm handshake. To Nancy Kissinger, Sadat said, "You are among Henry's family here."

Kissinger's special plane landed at Jiyanklis Air Force base in the desert and his part made a 20-minute ride in a Russian-built helicopter to the Maamoura guest house, where President and Mrs. Sadat were waiting to greet them.

The Kissingers were staying at the Safa guest palace, which once belonged to the former Crown Prince Mohammed Ali, situated on high ground by the sea and easily guarded.

The Kissingers and the Sadats were dining together Tuesday night and the two men were expected to have their first round of talks.

While Sadat goes to Cairo today to deliver his May Day speech, Kissinger will sight-see with Foreign Minister Ismail Fahmi, who met Kissinger's plane and embraced him when it landed at the air force base yesterday.

Sadat is expected to return to Alexandria for a second meeting with Kissinger late this afternoon.

Kissinger will then begin his mission directly by flying to Jerusalem tomorrow. Then he will shuttle between Israel and Damascus unless there is some immediate stalemate.

Before taking off from Algiers, Kissinger said at the airport: "I leave here with a warm feeling and increased hope for my mission in the Middle East."

Jailed SLA leader asks Hearst release

SANFRANCISCO [UPI]-A prison inmate who claims to be a leader of the Symbionese Liberation Army appealed yesterday to Patricia Hearst's kidnappers to free her by Friday in order to win $4 million food ransom for poor people.

"I have absolute faith that SLA "General Field Marshal" Cinque will do what is proper to prove the conditions for spending the $4 million, said the convict, Clifford Death Row Jeff Jefferson, in a message relayed through San Francisco attorney Vincent Hallinan.

Miss Hearst's father said the inmate's appeal "is all to the good" and that he also hoped his daughter would be released and the fund used for the food program.

California Attorney General, Evelle J. Younger, meanwhile proposed a state law banning corporations and trusts from making any such ransom payments in a kidnap case. The law would also make it illegal for anyone to accept food or extorted money.

Younger said such a law would "take the profit out of future kidnappings."

The Hearst Corp., which put up the $4 million for Miss Hearst's safe release, said the money would be withdrawn if the 20-year-old newspaper heiress is not returned by Friday. She was kidnapped Feb. 4.

Meantime, the FBI said it was on full alert in case the SLA carried out any new actions before the deadline.

Portuguese Communist asks political unity

LISBON [UPI] — Alvaro Cunhal, head of Portugal's formerly outlawed Communist party, returned yesterday from 14 years' exile in eastern Europe and, addressing 5,000 wildly cheering followers from the top of an army tank, called for a union of all parties to bring back a democratic regime to this country.

"We need a union of all political movements to strengthen democracy in Portugal," the whitehaired Gunhal said. "United we shall crush the last of Fascism and create a free democratic society."

Shortly before Cunhal arrived, a spokesman for the new military junta headed by Gen. Antonio de Spinola, told a news conference it will name a prime minister and civilian government "as soon as possible."

The spokesman, Maj. Maria Fernandes, also hinted at the possibility of a national referendum to decide the fate of Portugal's war-torn African territories.

Cunhal was the second exiled Portuguese leader to return home to a hero's welcome following last week's coup that brought Spinola's revolutionary military junta to power. Socialist Party leader Mario Soares arrived Sunday from Paris. He was at Lisbon's airport along with other left-wing lladers to welcome Cunhal when he arrived from Prague by way of Paris.

Cunhal had lived in exile in Prague and other eastern European capitals since he escaped from jail in Portugal in 1960.

He returned as labor unions and left-wing parties ordered millions of workers into the streets Wednesday for the first legal May Day demonstrations in 46 years.

Cunhal joined in the call to workers to turn out, but he warned against violence.

"Violence now is dangerous," he said. "It will only play into the hands of our enemies."

Left-wing organizations announced demonstrations in different parts of Lisbon and provincial cities, starting at 10 a.m. today.

The ruling junta made May Day an official holiday, but appealed for restraint and warned that troops, national guardsmen and police would be out on the streets in force.

Immediately after his plane from Paris touched down, Cunhal was mobbed and almost swept off his feet by supporters and friends.

Outside the airport in drizzling rain about 5,000 left-wingers, mainly Communists, were held back by troops and 10 army tanks.

Violence erupts at Indian trial

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. [UPI] — A trial of Indian militants erupted into a pitched courtroom battle between police and Indian supporters yesterday. At least 10 persons were injured in the outbreak and two were killed in a related car smashup.

Police said two persons were killed when their car was struck by a police cruiser speeding to the club swinging, fist throwing and chair smashing free-for-all going on at the Minnehaha County Courthouse.

Hospitals reported at least 10 persons treated for injuries.

An order by Circuit Court Judge Joseph Bottum to clear the courtroom when Indian sympathizers refused to stand for his entrance led to the brawl.

Indian supporters insisted the Indians made no move until riot clad police had started the violence. Police had made no official statement. But privately, officers disputed the Indian contention.

The courtroom was left in shambles. Chairs were thrown through windows and about half the windows in the modern, relatively new building were knocked out.

An estimated 75 to 100 Indians outside the courthouse threw tire irons, rocks, chains and bottles through windows and doors. Witnesses said others ran from the building with billy clubs or baseball bats.

The battle erupted during the trial of five Indians for their part in a violent demonstration in the town of Custer, S.D., last year. The Custer incident was a warmup to the 71-day occupation of the Pine Ridge Reservation hamlet of Wounded Knee by leaders of the American Indian Movement (AIM) and their supporters.

Economic agency proposed

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Bipartisan Senate leaders yesterday urged the government to develop a watchdog agency to protect the nation against unforeseen economic crises such as the energy shortage.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield told a conference of top administration and congressional leaders that "there would have been no fuel crisis" if the government had set up a central resource data bank years ago.

"And if it is energy today, of what will we as a nation be in dire need tomorrow? We need to ask ourselves: How are we equipped — or ill-equipped — to address the next crisis in resources or materials or commodities that may engulf the nation?"

Mansfield and Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania called the meeting to consider their proposal for a temporary commission that would study ways to set up some sort of central agency capable of foreseeing the nation's needs and preparing it for potential crises.

Mansfield said the study group could investigate possibilities for "a continuing instrumentality which would be capable of giving the President and the Congress the kind of integrated perception of out national requirements now and in the future, which has heretofore been lacking."

Farm prices drop 6% in one month

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Prices for raw farm products, slumping for the second straight month, declined another 6 per cent in the month ending April 15 to foreshadow a probable slowdown in food inflation for consumers.

The Agriculture Department's monthly farm price report said yesterday that the April decline, which followed a 4 per cent drop in March, was due largely to falling prices for wheat, hogs, cattle corn, soy beans and eggs.

The decline left prices 17 per cent above a year earlier, but they were more than 8 per cent below last January and about 12 per cent below the record set last August.

Beef cattle prices, declining for the seventh time in eight months, fell to $39.20 a hundredweight compared with $40.70 in March and $42.40 a year earlier. The average farm price for wheat, which hit a record high of $5.52 a bushel in February, plunged a record 98 cents a bushel during the month ending April 15 to reach $3.98 a bushel compared with $2.15 a year earlier.

In a separate report, Agriculture economists said livestock prices and retail meat prices will move up from current depressed levels later in the spring, but then probably should decline again for the rest of the year as supplies increase and inflationary pressures ease.

Cambodia invaded

SAIGON [UPI] — South Vietnamese troops, tanks and warplanes, in a running battle with Communist forces on the approaches to Saigon, pushed into Cambodia yesterday for the first time since the cease-fire declaration 15 months ago, military sources said.

Officers said government forces crossed the Cambodian frontier 40 miles west of the capital and pushed at least 2¼ miles into Communist sanctuaries over the border.

Incomplete field reports said North and South Vietnamese armies fought at least two battles inside Cambodia yesterday.

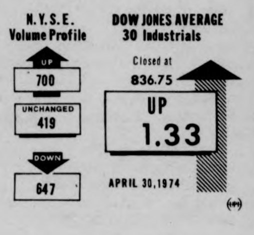
The Paris cease-fire declaration, signed Jan. 28, 1973, forbids military operations by any foreign troops inside Cambodia, a stipulation largely ignored by the Viet Cong and North Vietnam.

Sirica to remain

WASHINGTON [UPI] — U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica refused yesterday to disqualify himself from conducting trials of Watergate cover-up defendants.

Sirica denied he had developed any "personal stake" in getting five defendants convicted and said their "conjecture on this point is wholly inappropriate."

Former Attorney General John N. Mitchell, former White House aides John D. Ehrlichman and Charles W. Colson and former Republican campaign aides Gordon Strachan and Kenneth W. Parkinson filed motions for Sirica to turn their cases over to another judge on grounds he had a personal bias.



Price controls end

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Wage-price controls expired at midnight, while a handful of Democratic senators pushed yesterday for standby controls giving President Nixon authority to clamp new restraints on industries where inflation proved toughest to lick.

But other influential Democrats argued that after 32 months of on-again, off-again freezes and controls, it was time to kill the stabilization experiment once and for all.

Revenue sharing up

WASHINGTON [AP] — About half of the nation's 38,000 local and state governments will receive more money and the other half will get less under revenue sharing allotments announced yesterday for the 1975 fiscal year.

Approximately $6.2 billion will be paid out by the Office of Revenue Sharing in the third year of the five-year program to send tax money back to the cities and states.

The 1974 allotment, for which the final payment will be made in July, totaled slightly more than $6 billion.

To date, approximately $12.7 billion has been allocated to state and local governments out of the $30.2 billion program that ends in December of 1976. About $1.5 billion is still to be distributed in July for fiscal 1974.

House panel votes to end oil depletion allowance

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The House Ways and Means Committee approved legislation yesterday that would cost oil companies billions of dollars in new taxes.

The tax package, approved 14 to 5, includes a three-year phaseout of the oil depletion allowance and a temporary "windfall profits tax," which actually is a graduated excise tax on crude oil prices.

Several last-minute amendments to the bill were defeated.

The Ways and Means Committee's staff estimated that the bill would produce an additional $13 billion to $14 billion in revenue from the oil industry over the next five years alone.

The legislation is expected to pass the House easily and go to the Senate, probably in about two weeks.

The depletion allowance permits an oil company to deduct a percentage of taxable income up to 50 per cent of profits. Critics have contended that it is simply a tax loophole while some companies contend is a necessary incentive for new exploration. It would drop from the present 22 per cent to 15 per cent in 1975, then to 8 per cent in 1976 and out entirely in 1977.

The full depletion allowance would continue for natural gas, and a 15 per cent allowance would be allowed through 1978 for "stripper" wells — those producing less than 10 barrels a day — and for the first 3,000 barrels a day of any producer and for oil produced on Alaska's North Slope.

The windfall provision would be a graduated tax on any crude oil prices above $4.50 per barrel. The base would rise gradually until the tax disappeared.

After the first year, oil companies could regain some of the tax under a "plowback" feature allowing them to spend the tax money on new exploration and development. No plowback would be allowed the first year, and only 50 per cent the second year.

Hundreds of irate consumers and a number of politicians jammed the State House yesterday as the Dept. of Public Utilities opened hearings on the fuel adjustment clause. Leadoff witness Gov. Francis Sargent is shown as he urged replacement of the clause, saying that a new system is needed. He proposed that incremental costs charged by oil companies to utilities should be passed onto consumers only after public hearings.

Gay ruling coming

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI]-Federal District Judge Hugh Bownes refused yesterday to prevent a state court from considering whether homosexuality is a mental illness.

The Gay Student Organization (GSO) at the University of New Hampshire in Durham had asked for an injunction to bar Strafford County Superior Court Judge Charles J. Flynn from considering that argument, posed by UNH trustees in an amended suit seeking to limit GSO activities.

U.S. hinders refinery

MANCHESTER, N.H. [UPI]-A protege of Aristotle Onassis, returning to New Hampshire for the first time since rejection of Olympic refineries $600 million seacoast proposal, told Newmarket selectmen yesterday federal offshore regulations must be changed before the company will make another refinery proposal in the state.

Olympic Vice President Nicholas Papanicolaou met in open session with the three selectmen from the seacoast factory town of 3,400 that narrowly endorsed a refinery after neighboring Durham rejected the Onassis' proposal in March.

For the first time since Olympic announced plans to build in New Hampshire, federal offshore regulations were cited as a hurdle to constructing a seacoast refinery and offshore oil terminal.

"Under your leadership a fair vote was taken," Papanicolaou told the selectmen and newsmen at the Holiday Inn. "We are encouraged and happy by the results. Now we have to wait and see what happens at federal levels."

Oil search to start

Boland, Conte hit tape compromise

By The Associated Press

Reps. Silvio O. Conte, R-Mass. and Edward P. Boland, D-Mass., have issued statements critical of President Nixon's proposed Watergate tapes compromise.

The two congressmen, who have both said they would take no position on impeachment until after the House Judiciary Committee issues its report, said the President should have granted wider access to the original tapes.

The president yesterday released edited transcripts of a number of subpoenaed tapes and of some tapes not requested in the Judiciary Committee subpoena. He said the two ranking members of the committee would be allowed to listen to the tapes.

"If the committee feels it needs more than edited transcripts then they are entitled to it. If the committee feels that the majority and minority counsels should verify the transcripts, I would go along with that," Boland said.

"The House is entitled to all the information it considers essential," he said.

He said he doubted that the committee would be satisfied with transcripts.

Conte said he could not endorse the President's decision because 11 tapes covered by the subpoena are not included.

What's going on at the School of Ed?

By DEBORAH L. SCHNEER

Spring Marathon — a week of "fun and games and learning experiences" cross culture simulation exercises, analysis of our conditioned responses to insects, theatre improvisation from childhood fantasies...the image fostered at the School of Education is one of happy teachers and students engaging in all sorts of different activities that will enable them to learn more about themselves and others.

But not everything was fun and games at last weeks Marthon, nor is everything fun and games a the School of Ed. As many of us are beginning to realize, behind all those simulation exercises, some important political affiliations and decisions are in the process of being made.

At the workshop entitled Educational Colonialism, significant issues concerning an agreement that has just been made between The Center for International Education (C.I.E.), and the U.S. Agency for International Development (A.I.D.), were raised. Apparently, AID has just granted a sum of close to one million dollars to the CIE in order to strengthen and expand its capabilities and expertise in developing countries. Those who are not aware of the political purposes of AID may view the above as an innocent and helpful venture. But after examining the nature of AID, it becomes clear that the signing of a contract with this organization holds serious political and social implications for all persons involved in the project. Because this huge sum of money is being granted to an organization at our University, it behooves all of us, students, workers and faculty, to examine the exact purpose for which it will be used.

Supposedly, this money will serve to train a cadre of Americans and foreign nationals and AID personel on nonformal, or out-of-school education, and to provide the methodologies and techniques necessary for designing and implementing such programs, in "underdeveloped" countries. But if the School of Ed. wants to tackle the problem of underdevelopment, educational or otherwise, than they ought to look at the causes for its existence, such as a long history of colonization by European powers in which period the colonies were depleted of a large portion of their wealth and were politically and culturally dominated. Another reason is the underdeveloped countries dependence on the international marketplace, their economic and political control by U.S. corporate interests, and the situation of international colonialism by which the small upper classes get richer, while the majority of the population suffer a continuous decline in standard of living such as the case of Brazil. We are talking about countries controlled by U.S. corporate interests, the interests being to maintain ownership of, or easy access to sources of raw materials, to perpetuate the production of U.S. capital to be loaned at a high rate of interest to poor countries, to open up markets for U.S. industrialists and investors, to have access to a cheap labor force, to strengthen economic and cultural dependence on the U.S., and to smother any socialist movements that challenge the above, movements that threaten the very causes of poverty.

U.S.AID is but one of the agencies that serves to protect U.S. interests in underdeveloped countries, but it is an important one. Cited are just a few examples that demonstrate the political intentions and interests of AID.

U.S.AID loans are granted to underdeveloped countries on the condition that "...AID personell be given access to (hence considerable influence over) all government economic documents including future projects and policies." (New Chile 1973, p.45). In Chile 1968, an AID loan of thirty million dollars for the "procurement of US goods was tied to the following conditions...A) elimination of prior import deposits B) tariff reductions for capital imports C) credit extensions for purchase of foreign exchange to cover imports and minimal annual interest rates of nine percent for the period of the credit.." (New Chile — 1973 p.45). Since 1965, Chile has purchased with U.S. loans, millions of dollars worth of U.S. capital; equipment, machinery, factories, which means that the Chileans have to buy more spare parts from the U.S., more mechanics, tools, (ETC, ETC) which furthers the relationship of colonial dependence....In 1971, when Chile announced the nationalization of the copper mines the mother country threatened an economic blockade, leaving Chile with one of two choices, to either submit to the demands of the multinational corporations or to become dependent on yet another source of foreign aid.

In 1966-67 in Guatemala, the "Pilot Plan" was organized in Izabal and Zacapa, the principal guerilla zones of the country. Designed to "establish a governemnt presence" that is to wipe out the revolutionary forces, AID secured .5 million dollars overnight, and poured the money into community services (health care, leadership training, technical assistance, schools, strengthening of local governmental institutions, ie, small non structural changes designed to pacify the population) and military operations. The infamous rightist group, Mano Blanco was born here, a terrorist organization responsible for the murder of hundreds of leftists. The White Hand was often given assistance by US army officers.

Guatemala — 1967 Urban guerillas becoming most active at this time when AID launches a "'model precinct' program in zone five, one of the poorest areas of Guatemala city, to test new techniques and establish a 'police presence' in this 'high crime' area and eventually to be extended to the rest of the city." (Jonas-NACIA, March 1974 p. 19)

In 1971 when Uruguay was under the threat of the Tupemaroes, AID poured more money than ever before under the heading of Public Safety Program.

AID has hundreds of agents in South Vietnam, many who have been transferred to other underdeveloped countries in Latin America. Examples are endless. AID is alive and kicking wherever there are people struggling to make structural economic changes in their countries. It is clear that the role of AID is of a political nature — designed to protect the interests of ruling classes, and to subvert peoples struggles all over the world from Africa to Vietnam, to Latin America. AID financed American Educators then are useful in several ways; 1) Because nonformal education is a powerful means of social control through ideological diffusion, these professionals will be the means by which the ideological diffusion of American social economic and political values will take place. 2) They will become the pawns of a powerful organization that supports corrupt cruel and elitist regimes, that reinforces economic inequities and injustices, that subverts all revolutionary activity, and that further strengthens existing relations of cultural and economic dependence on the U.S. government, corporations and banking system. 3) They will contribute to the further educational dependence of developing countries on American educational philosophy methods and techniques.

It is therefore with great dismay that I see a center at our University enter into a binding agreement with this organization that is responsible for the despair, hunger, and murder of people all over the world. Unfortunately then, some questions inevitably come to mind. Just what is going on at the School of Education? What other centers are as dependent as the CIE on State Department funds? What other centers are also tools for the foreign policy of this Government? What other contracts are being made with the State Department behind a mask of theatre improvisations and simulation exercises? What is the School of Ed's responsibility toward graduate students who in order to complete their studies have to accept AID money and contracts? Again, just what else is going on at the School of Ed?

Budget cuts - the attack on our education

By JERRY LUND

This year, UMass faces budget cuts that would seriously damage public education, our education, in this state. We must fight these cuts together to save presently threatened programs and to prevent future attacks on our education.

These cuts affect everyone at UMass, but they especially affect students, undergraduate and graduate. As proposed, the budget cuts for the university would be made in the areas of student services, financial aid, teaching and research assistantships, and special academic and non-academic programs. The only areas exempted from these cuts are "built-in costs", the capital budget paying off the debt on campus buildings and contractual salaries for academic and non-academic employees. These "built-in costs" must be expanded because of inflation, so even if the budget wasn't cut overall, other areas must be cut in the face of the same inflation.

For undergraduates, student services would be cut back in the residential areas and in university-wide programs, exemplified by proposed eliminations in Southwest Residential College. Cuts in financial aid are being disguised by expanding the Work-Study program which costs the university only one-fifth of the funds available in this Federal program. Cutbacks in teaching assistantships would mean fewer sections and larger classes in most courses. Other areas that would be cut include the BDIC program, the Everywoman's Center, and the acquisition of books by the library, among many others. As we look at these, we become aware more and more that the budget cuts don't affect a few programs, they affect all aspects of undergraduate life. For even those programs not directly cut realize that next year's program can't possibly operate on this year's budget in next year's inflation!

For graduate students, the proposed, cutbacks in financial aid, teaching and research assistantships, and academic programs endanger their ability to continue at UMass. Those who keep their jobs can expect increased section enrollments, more clerical work, and longer research hours. Even those not dependant on their departments for their incomes would find graduate offerings restricted as faculty were shifted to teach more undergraduate lectures. Graduate education at UMass would be threatened by increasing restrictions on the number of students admitted.

For faculty, the budget cuts would mean more hours teaching to larger and larger lectures. The cuts would also lead to more restrictions on tenure, requiring faculty to devote more time to publishing and less to teaching. Even tenured faculty would see their departments frozen at their present level and content.

For staff, the level of their wages would become sticky, not keeping with the cost of living. Advancement would become more difficult if positions were not eliminated entirely. "Greater productivity" would be expected with more work to be done in less time without comparable increases in pay. Even students would notice this, standing in fewer but longer lines in buildings cleaned less often by workers expected to care for more buildings in the same time.

Unless we, the university community, act to fight these cuts being discussed in the legislature right now, we will bear the above consequences next year. And probably in the years to come as public education comes under intensifying attacks in Massachusetts, as it has in other states. We must organize to fight the budget cuts!

On April 25, 1974, there was a meeting of graduate students representing 14 departments. After a discussion of the particular situation in each department represented, it was decided that all departments meet this week to develop ideas for action. On Thursday, May 2, 1974, at 8:00 p.m. in Morrill Hall, there will be another inter-departmental meeting to pool ideas and develop graduate students' part in a university-wide action to fight the budget cuts. For further information call: (54) 5-2837.

We call on the university community, undergraduates, graduate students, faculty, staff, other organizations, and the administration to have their own meetings, take their positions on the budget cuts, and act with us to fight the budget cuts. Unless we do, we will be the ones who'll lose out as public education in Massachusetts is crippled by the legislature.

Reid Fishman

Nixon, yeah, yeah, yeah

"Ladies and gentlemen, we interrupt tonight's regular programming to bring you this special announcement. And now, direct from Washington, D.C., here's the President of the United States."

"My fellow Americans, I come before you tonight because I have to. The House Judiciary Committee, headed by my old friend, Peter Rodino, has threatened to impeach me if I don't turn over 42 Watergate related tapes. Believe me, I'm scared.

So to show all of you that I have nothing to hide, here they are. You all see them don't you? We had those boxes made up special for tonight. I hope this will prove to the American people that I'm not so bad after all. Yes, there are 31 tapes here for everybody to see. I hope you're satisfied, because I'm not going to let you hear them. Instead, I've prepared a text of everything said that relates to Watergate, and I'm prepared to release it to the American people, for a good price. Not only that, but if you order now, I'll throw in this additional record offer, with my picture on the cover, that will include a number of humorous anecdotes and insults taken directly from the Watergate tapes. For instance, here's one from Bob Haldeman — "We've got to get rid of Dean. He never puts any sugar in my coffee." And here's one from that witty wonder, John Mitchell — "I wish I could get that bitch off my ass for good." That's right folks. It's a million laughs as you hear that famous line by Rosemary Woods — "Is this how I'm supposed to...?" And of course, who could forget that immortal line by yours truly — "I think the American people have the right to know the truth about this. Don't you, Spiro?" I'll even throw in a live recording of the Key Biscayne Trio, singing, "Yes sir, that's my Bebe". So don't wait. Accept this offer right now, while I still have a chance.

Furthermore, we all know that impeachment would be bad for the country. Why, if you thought Spiro was stupid, try talking to Gerry Ford some day. After all these years, he still can't find the men's room in the Capital. And let's face facts — I've shown you all the evidence tonight. There they are, right in front of your TV screen. Even people from Missouri can't argue with that logic.

We all have to remember that we live in America, where a person is always innocent until proven guilty. There is not one concrete piece of evidence to prove that I had anything to do with Watergate or the cover-up. After all, everyone knows that John Dean is a quack, and Charles Colson has been known to hit the bottle on several occasions. I assure you that you won't find anything on those 31 tapes, but I seem to have somehow misplaced the other 11.

One must understand that it's a matter of national security. You don't want those Commies to find out what we're saying about them, do you? I've given you all that I can without risking the fate of our nation. What more can I do? I won't give up my tapes of Sammy Davis Jr. under any circumstances. He gave them to me as a present. So why don't you all write to your Congressmen and tell them to fuck off, and let me get back to more important things like the Bicentennial celebration. Do you realize that's only two years away, and we're so busy wallowing in Watergate that we've been neglecting it completely. And then there's the energy crisis. While everyone else is caught up in this silly scandal, I've proposed legislation that would establish a massive nuclear power plant right in the middle of Massachusetts. These are just a few of the things we should do to get our minds off of Watergate.

So if you believe that the office of the presidency deserves a little more respect — if you believe that I knew nothing about what my top aides were doing for two years — if you realize that I've done all I can to bring the truth out into the open concerning this entire affair, then you're my kind of person. Who knows? Maybe you can be president some day."

Where are they now?

Since it is moving uncontrollably toward the end of the school year, many among us are no doubt, reevaluating their progress this year toward their goals varied as they are. A High Cume, a good Husband, THE TOTAL HIGH, a Rich husband, a skyhook dunk shot, are just some of the many aspirations that some of us have set as first priority goals. And this is the time of year to ponder and reflect our performance of late and to regenerate our drive, just as the land is giving birth to new hope and life. But to get to the point (We thought that would never come), there are those in this world who apparently are interested in our progress toward becoming good little pawns of Big Brother. I'm referring of course to those little local society pages that every community is seemingly afflicted with. It's strange but we don't live in a vacuum, though one would be hard pressed to prove that assumption wandering about campus and staring into the expressions of countless blanked people. There are, it seems, those who are genuinely interested in the fact that Bruce Grapedbrain has just made the Dean's List at Miami Dade Jr. College or Loretta Lymph is currently studying Sociology at the Sorbonne and is competing in the International Fencing Tournament in Basle, Switzerland against Zorba the Greek.

We thought that, in the due process of justice and fairness, that since not all newsworthy items get published in these hometown rag society sections, we might print some of those that most assuredly need amplification so that all would get what they deserve for their accomplishments. We hope that all of the following receive what they deserve:

Steve Gubber — son of Mr. and Mrs. Dork L. Gubber of Elmtree Street is currently flunking Botony and is being exorcised for evil spirits at Georgetown University. He has been acting quite weirdly of late and may have to be put away.

Henry Ragin — Son of Man and Friend of All is currently having a good time in the midst of All Abominations, also known as the Student Senate. Henry failed beautifully in his quest for total powerlessness and is resigned to a life of Ludicry, Sensuality and Good Colombian.

Larry Post — son of Mr. and Mrs. Parcel and Emily Post of 3 Whatsituya Ave. is currently taking Short Lessons and dissecting Petrified Yak specimens and botching the job. Larry is preparing for a career in aviation. He plans to be the Left Wing of a B-52 Bomber unless he bombs out here first.

Randolph Bromery — is currently pretending to be Chancellor of a large State Institution in Western Mass. Some think it might be the University of Massachusetts while other conjecture it to be Belchertown State School. Bromery is noted for a career in fence-sitting with a strong forte in free speech. He is currently planning for a career in Boston.

Guru Mahar Ji — The 14-year-old Perfect Master from Valhalla, India. Guru is presently teaching perfect knowledge and reaching puberty — all at the same time. Among his other pastimes are reading Marvel Comic Books, and International Jewelry smuggling. Little Guru is planning a career in Theology with an emphasis on becoming God.

Richard Nixon — is presently flunking all of his courses. Among them are Ethics in Government, Accounting and Basic Bookkeeping, Food Science 101, Criminology, and Learning Experience (LEX) 299 Democracy as a Viable Method.

Josherina Toughcookie — the infamous self-styled "Hard-Assed Dyke" is currently beating up White Male Honkeys at her Beauty Parlor in Nome, Alaska, where she spends her summers, in an effort to preserve her frigidity.

Marty Kelly — son of Mr. and Mrs. Princess Grace Kelly of 11 Monaco Drive. Marty is currently posing as a serious sports analyst in some hole a few demented minds call a radio station in Worcester. Kelly is preparing for a career in broadcasting, and to guarantee his success, he has been enrolled and received a scholarship to the BOZO THE CLOWN SCHOOL OF SARCASM AND HEAVY ANALYSIS, in Neward, N.J. this summer in an effort to improve his personality.

Josh — is currently coming. And its been a long time since he last came and went, so he should be finally due.

Frank Rizzo — currently being considered for the Humanitarian of the Year Award by the South Philadelphia Mafia Association. Frank's hobbies include enbalming and keeping Perverts off the streets. Frank's big plans for this year include sending one segment of our population on a slow boat somewhere. Frank has been halucinating of late, asserting that he is a Mayor of a big city, and may have to be committed.

Zamir Nestelbaum — is currently flunking life at the University of Elsewhere where he is a Volunteer Fireman and burns Kurt Vonnegut novels in his spare time.

OH THE!! PAIN!! OF IT!!! ALL!!!!!

Fast today

Today people all around the country are participating in the "Fast to Save the People". The object of the fast is to get people to give up one or even all of their meals and donate the money to Oxfam-America and Project Relief to aid drought victims in Northern Africa.

As many as ten thousand people may be facing a slow death from starvation this year.

In this area Smith and Hampshire Colleges are participating as well as the Center for Racial Understanding here in Southwest. Contributions can be given at the Center, dining commons or the Southwest Resource Center.

It is not much to ask fora contribution. The simple point, is people are starving and we can directly help them today.

Blacks help themselves

By RUDY JONES
Black Affairs Editor

One would presume that individuals concerned with the problems afflicting Black people - being victims of Americanism would work assiduously towards solving some of these problems. But what invariable results is that some of these individuals just play lip service to the Black struggle while others audaciously offer useless and ridiculous criticisms mixed with blind suggestions on the path that the struggle should take.

Ms. Vorderer what did you do while in the position of editor of the Collegian to make the paper more representitive and sensitive to the Pan-African and Third World community here at this University? You and the paper did absolutely nothing. And what are you doing today? - probably supplying Ku-Klux pictures for the Black Affairs Editor's file.

Ms. Vorderer I suggest that if you are sensitive to Black peoples problems then why don't you go neutralize the Birchites and the Ku Klux Klaners on the Collegian staff. Why don't you go stop your Mama and Papa from exploiting and oppressing Black people. Why don't you insist that this institution - various academic departments impliment the Federal Government Affirmative Action policy.

When you have worked consistently at these tasks then if we deem it necessary we'll solicit your advice. For you see Ms. Vorderer, Black people have been following the advice of your people for a long time and it seems that these suggestions just seem to tighten the oppressive chains that bound us.

Please keep your sympathy for your people, - Black people don't need it. Sympathy doesn't liberate an oppressed people. Your people need all the sympathy they can get. It's their inhumanity and callousness that's causing most of the problems facing Black people.

Portuguese colonialism

To The Editor:

A decade after the disintegration of colonial empires in Africa, Portugal, the poorest country in Europe is still stuck in the mire of political anarchronism – COLONIALISM. As the Portuguese have always justified their occupation of Mozambique, Angola and Guinea-Bissau by calling it a "civilizing mission" – the Europeanization and Catholicization of "pagan wastes". The Portuguese in their "sense of mission" constructed a legal system in which force would do what economic incentives failed to do. The inhuman Portuguese Labor Code, proclaimed in 1899, has been their guide even since in their "territories" in Africa. The labor code, in part, ordains that "all the natives of the Portuguese Overseas Provinces are subject to the moral and legal obligations of seeking through work the means which they lack by subsisting and for improving their conditions". The most disheartening point of the code is not the morality, but the machinery it sets up for compelling men to sell their labor at the going price. In 1928, this machinery disturbed the sensibility of the World Community, which forced Portugal to revise the labor code. The new Ordinances, however, specified that an African could be forced to work only on projects of public welfare such as roads and harbor works, but in fact, the discriminatory practices in these "African territories" are matched only by those in South Africa. Last year, the United Nations Special Committee on Territories under the Portuguese Administration, concluded that "while forced labor had been abolished, practices that amounted to forced labor continued to exist." These practices and among others like them are the products of the Portuguese "sense of mission" in Africa.

Do not misunderstand the political upheaval in Portugal last week, as an expression of love for those dispossessed Africans in Mozambique, Angola and Guinea-Bissau by the coup leaders in portugal. Such an assumption ignores the composite realities of the political uprising in Portugal. Remember that General Motors or Chrysler cares only when apartheid – an anathema – does not produce a disciplined pool of cheap labor in South Africa. The coup leaders in Portugal, like General De Gaulle in France before them, were concerned only with the sagging economy at home, forty years of iron-clad dictatorship, lack of democratic ideals even in crudest form, and a demoralized and divided society. The coup leaders want a political solution to their thirteen-years-old colonial war which will guarantee the preservation of their economic interests in Africa. Do not allow the military junta, with their proposal for a federation of the African territories with Portugal, to delude you. I do believe that independent African nations have now learned a good lesson from such chimerical program with former colonial brahmins. Emancipation cannot be fully actualized if minority rule is not completely abolished in Africa. Majority rule dominates in the second half of the 20th century, just as colonialism and the "white man's burden" were the accepted values of an earlier era. The demystification of such a value, that really began in 1960, will not end until the consummation of the ideals of Pan-Africanism i.e. Africa for Africans. Vorster of South Africa and Ian Smith of Rhodesia should beware, because rain does not fall on one roof alone.

Aid handicapped

To The Editor:

As a first semester student at the University, I am very much amazed at the lack of interest shown by the students and administration towards the plight of the physically disabled student.

As was pointed out in an article in the Collegian's April 17 issue, there is an office for the handicapped in 229D Whitmore. This office has been long overdue. Although there are approximately 480 permanently handicapped, and 600 temporarily handicapped students on campus, during the course of one year barely 65 students have taken advantage of this facility.

Being handicapped myself, I cannot understand why this office has been utilized so little by the students. There is quite a bit of work that needs to be done in the area of the handicapped. I feel that the handicapped students themselves should make an effort to create more awareness among the school's population, Without this effort, the handicapped can count on remaining a discriminated minority. They can then blame no one but themselves.

Kneeland wrong on amnesty views

To The Editor:

The first time I read Mike Kneeland's article on amnesty in last Thursday's Collegian, I was disgusted and angered at yet another version of what by now has become a very much overworked line of thoroughly specious reasoning. After a second reading however, I realized that my disgust was giving way to pity. Although I'm too aware that many people still base a lot of their moral convictions on the 'my country, right or wrong' ethic, I had somehow hoped that Kneeland was above that sort of crap.

Apparently though, he feels that by using the same old cliches he can perform some sort of intellectual legerdemain and miraculously transform an unjustifiable economic and political bloodbath into what he cavalierly terms a 'tense situation' wherein we must be able to 'count on our armed forces'. I gather that he not only wants to count on a good fight, but that he wants to count on them not to think as well.

There is obviously a precedent at issue, but it involves questioning the right of a government by and for the people to abuse some of those people by sending them to an immoral war, and simultaneously abuse the people who wouldn't play the game. The precedent is not, as Kneeland would have us believe, a matter of maintaining a noble and effective military night. There is simply no way to justify that kind of reasoning. The fact that he still clings to non-thinking of that sort doesn't make me angry anymore, it just makes me sad.

Library cure

To The Editor:

Whoever is responsible for the planning and construction of the new library is guilty of one slight oversight. Certainly somewhere in that vast structure a floor could have been set aside as a health service center for the purpose of administering to students stricken by heat prostration or temporary blindness during the course of their studies. [There illnesses are most frequently reported among individuals studying an hour or longer; ie. engineering majors.]

The additional expense of operating such a facility could be defrayed by offering inexpensive health policies in the lobby – similar to those one purchases for twenty-five cents at the airport. If this plan proves successful, the additional revenue may possibly enable the library to remain open during weekend evenings, when some students actually do have work to do.

Student arts festival in Herter Gallery

In October or November, 1974, the University Art Gallery, Herter Hall, will present a student arts festival. The festival, which will be open to University-wide participation, will allow a diverse number of students to make active use of the gallery, which is wholly student funded. The basic premise of the festival is that the activity of students is learning. It will be an opportunity for students to get together outside a formal structure to exchange ideas and information, to try out new ideas – an opportunity to synthesize one's own ideas as well as to become aware of what other students involved in the arts are doing.

The festival hopes to achieve an innovative use of gallery space. The gallery will not only be available for exhibition space, but also for workshops, demonstrations, performances, mini-lessons, panel discussions, etc.

Since the festival hopes to present a learning experience, the emphasis will be on works in progress, on the experimental, immediate problems and concerns rather than on what has already been resolved. We hope to create an atmosphere of direct confrontation with people, material, ideas, technique, space. One that emphasizes the activity of a learning process and the exchange of information. The strict, traditional gallery context need not be imposed; it is simply a matter of this space being made available for student use.

A selection and organizational committee is now being formed. Students involved in the arts who are interested in being on the committee should contact Frank Cadwell or Skip Forwood in the Gallery office in Herter Hall or call 545-0976 before May 10.

Class study pegs 'average' shoplifter

By ELAINE ORPHANOS
MDC Special

A survey on shoplifting actions and attitudes of UMass undergraduates revealed today that the average student shoplifter is a single, 21-22-year old, middle to upper-middle class female whose parents are in the lower-middle income bracket.

Because the topic of shoplifting has a wide appeal, 15 students of Dr. Dario Politella's Expository Writing class here unanimously decided to conduct the study for their final project this semester.

Politella said, "Their primary objective was to identify the average shoplifter according to sex, lifestyle, residence, family background and socio-economic level."

He also told the students to conclude "why, where, what, how and when a student steals goods from a store."

Elaine Orphanos, one of the 15 students involved, said, "Each one of us randomly distributed 20 questionnaires and tabulated our own findings. After this was completed, we wrote separate detailed reports on the results."

"My report showed that 8 out of 10 females had shoplifted, at some point in their lives, where as, only 4 out of 10 males confessed to the act," Orphanos said.

Her sampling included only juniors and seniors, Orphanos said. "The results leave no doubt that the senior is the major culprit." Orphanos affirmed that, "Two thirds of the shop-lifters, both male and female, were seniors."

According to Orphanos' statistics, although the female shoplifters outnumbered the males, 7 of the 8 females claimed that their last shoplifting experience occured over a year ago.

"The average female shoplifter usually commits the act early in life and limits herself to small, low-cost items."

She added that "more female shoplifters steal goods out of compulsion or for peer-approval than out of need. As a result, the average female shoplifter stops out of a fear of being caught."

Orphanos typified the average male shoplifter as "a single 21-22 year old senior." Her statistics show that whereas 60 per cent of the female shoplifters classified themselves as middle-upper class, the male shoplifters were distributed equally between the four levels ranging from lower class to upper class.

"There appears to be a potential for males to shoplift from both lower and upper class," Ms. Orphanos asserted. She concludes that, "The male shoplifter usually takes small edible items, if he is of a lower class background, while the upper class male shoplifter prefers to take inexpensive clothing."

The study revealed that, although females have shoplifted more frequently than males, the men are inclined to pursue the hobby.

"There was only one, negative male response to the question about continuing to shoplift, in comparison with the five negative female responses. Also, 3 of the 4 male shoplifters admitted no guilt feelings," Ms. Orphanos said.

Recalling that, in general, the male student would rather not commit himself, she said that, "Most often, the male shoplifter either had no feelings about shoplifting or said he didn't know."

Part of the questionnaire allowed for the non-shoplifters to air their opinions. Again, according to the statistics, Ms. Orphanos typified the average non-shoplifter as a "21-22 year old junior", regardless of sex.

"The male non-shoplifters are of upper-middle to upper class backgrounds. On the other hand, women are of lower-middle to middle class background", Ms. Orphanos said.

While airing their opinions, the non-shoplifters, by a majority of 90 per cent, held that shoplifting was against their principles.

"By contrast, the only thing that was against the shoplifter's principles was stealing from a small independently owned store", Orphanos concluded.

Fight hunger with hunger

FAST TO SAVE A PEOPLE MAY 1st

On Wednesday, May 1st, join with students in colleges and high schools all over America to help fight hunger with hunger. On that day, students will contribute their food money to help the forgotten people of drought stricken Africa.

Today six to ten million people face death from starvation in the worst drought of the century. Thousands have already died. Last fall newspapers reported that the crisis was over. Now it is all too clear that this is not so. The rain that did fall was late and totally inadequate. There will be no harvest.

If every college student fasted and gave $1 it would generate $20 million for drought relief. Please help. Bring your food money to your local Fast headquarters of send it to Project Relief.

Some days are just too exhausting for a UMie...

Downey Side needs money; she aims to help get it

By LESLIE WRAY
MDC Special

How many times have you walked past a guy on a street corner or at the Student Union, who is holding a canister and asking you to donate to a good cause? And how many times have you walked past him and then kicked yourself for not giving that nickel or dime that's just hanging around in your pocket? I've done it many times — in fact, I've always felt put out when someone steps up to me with one of those canisters and asks me for a donation.

Last September I got involved with an organization called Downey Side, which is a non-profit, non-sectarian agency that provides permanent families for homeless teen-agers here in Western Mass. I've been working as a volunteer counselor and tutor in a home in So. Hadley since then and I have become more and more involved in the agency working with these kids.

All of a sudden it was May and the Regional Director asked me to help them out on their annual Tag Days fund-raising drive by organizing a group of volunteers here at UMass to stand in the Student Union and collect donations for Downey Side. My initial reaction was, "No thanks, that's not for me," but I thought it over for a few days and changed my mind. Downey Side Homes, Inc. gets a certain amount of money from the State for each child they take into their care, but they get no funding for expanding their program, improving their homes or buying those little extras that make life nice for these kids who have never had those things.

Consequently, we are always trying to raise money, but Tag Days are our big drive. Last year Downey Side raised $35,000 from just having volunteers standing on street corners with canisters. With the money, they opened several new homes (now numbering ten, each with eight boys or girls) and was also able to make some other necessary improvements on the already existing homes.

It occurred to me, after thinking these things through, that this kind of volunteer work is absolutely necessary for agencies like Downey Side to survive because they just don't get enough money from the State.

As a result of my efforts and many others', especially including the women and men of Gamma Sigma Sigma and Alpha Phi Omega, there will be people volunteering their valuable time to collect donations for Downey Side in the Student Union, Thursday and Friday, May 2 and 3. This is only part of a drive that will cover all of Western Mass.

I know that students don't have all that much money to spare, as I as a student myself. But please, when you see those people with the Downey Side canisters this week, pull out your pennies and nickels, and I guarantee you'll walk away feeling good about yourself.

Be seeing you there... Thursday and Friday all day, May 2 and 3.

WATCHING BIG BROTHER

Having spent many frustrating hours waiting around at Whitmore, I've often stood at the "glass wall" looking down on the futuristic scene of men and computers. After three years of wondering exactly what went on inside this huge electronic think tank, I decided to go down and check it out.

Over one million dollars worth of American technocracy. It all looks very impressive from above and is even more so when you're surrounded. The atmosphere inside the tank is a strange mixture of two distinct airs. The men and women that run the center seem relaxed and casual but at the same time seem to show a sort of reverence toward the machines. They understand them and know the apabilities of these silent electronic monoliths. On the other hand one gets the feeling of being in the presence of an awesome power. Its the feeling you get seeing a Saturn 5 on the launch pad, or, to bring it down to gut level, being blasted by the Grateful Dead's new sound system. A sense of an ungodly force, mad made.

After overcoming my initial paranoia I began wandering around. The computers were hard at work. Of course there's no way to tell this, except for an occasional flashing light, but I could feel the energy they generated.

I was introduced to Mr. Leonard Booker, Asst. Manager Computer Operations, who took great pride in explaining to me the great administrative responsibilities of the computer system.

The IBM 370-145 system can read data into memory at the rate of 1600 x 200 inches per second which, in the jargon, equals 320,000 character bytes per second. Its three printers each print at the rate of 1,100 lines per minute totaling 1-1.5 million lines per day on the average. From 50 visual display terminals between here and Boston the system receives 10,500 inquiries per day. In addition it processes 650 jobs per day, i.e., revised schedules, pay checks, etc. Along with record-like discs the computer stores information on 3600 ft. reels of ape, 2,000 of which are kept in a room-size vault at the center.

The system runs on 'capitalizing programs' which take all of the input programing information and builds a master control file. Anywhere from 1 to 250 periferable programs will use the master fle to update, delete, and add records depending on the number and type of satalite department requests.

"OSCAR" is one of these programs. Called upon only four times a year, OSCAR is a programing package that will seat students by section, course number, department, and viable time vectors with 90 per cent accuracy of their requests.

On line with the central processing unit there are 72 No. 3332 teleprocessing display units. According to Mr. Booker, with the exception of four units located in highly security sensitive areas, the remaining 68 units can only request information that is applicable to the particular needs of the students.

This is a 'medium scale' system which can handle as many as 12 activities simultaneously, and is on the job 24 hours a day. Only a few large scale systems exist as they are incredibly expensive and are used for research only.

I left the center with the feeling that everything was under control. I can safely report that there is no immediate threat of this powerful servant revolting and taking over the University. So relax, the computer does not run our lives — we run its life.

The refinery debate - part II

Onassis hits suspicion, support

Tax and regulatory advantages, plus New England's thirst for oil, apparently made New Hampshire a preferred site when an Aristotle Onassis corporation set out to build an oil refinery. Here, in the second of a four part series, is an account of those factors.

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

CONCORD, N.H. [AP] — The Energy crisis dramatized what New Englanders already knew: they are major consumers of oil, but they are also at the end of the pipeline, totally dependent on outside suppliers for refined petroleum products.

So when Aristotle Onassis flew to New Hampshire last December, saying he was "not a Greek bearing gifts," he clearly expected a warm welcome for his proposal to build a giant oil refinery.

He encountered a mixture of enthusiasm and bitter suspicion.

Despite technological improvements, refineries produce noise and odors. Environmentalists have fought suggestions that one be built along the tourist-rich New England coast.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson of New Hampshire has balked at suggestions from fellow New England governors and others that the six states join in a regional effort to solve the area's oil supply problems.

Since his inauguration two years ago, Thomson has been actively searching for someone to build an oil refinery in the state. He says it would be a boon to the economy and a solution to the energy shortage.

Industry engineers say any refinery in New England must be built near the coast to minimize the cost of piping crude oil from off-shore tankers. New Hampshire is landlocked except for an 18-mile strip of rocks and beach that touch the Atlantic in the southeast corner of the state.

Five major oil companies have looked at the area and gone away, but Onassis decided it was worth trying.

He has the unqualified backing of Thomson and of William Loeb, publisher of the Manchester Union Leader, the state's largest and quite powerful newspaper.

New Hampshire has relatively little land-use legislation to protect the environment and ecology of the seashore. And there is no personal income or sales tax in the state.

Official studies indicate that the wording of the state's real estate tax law would exempt most of a refinery complex from property taxes, and tax revenue most likely would be derived from the state's 7 per cent tax on corporate profits — if the refinery makes a profit.

Industry spokesmen say refineries generally are the least profitable link in the oil producing and marketing chain. One called them "necessary evils that the companies are forced to build only because they can't sell crude oil at gas stations."

Onassis became a millionaire at 25 by shipping oil, not refining it, and has made hundreds of millions since by putting together one of the largest independent tanker fleets in the world.

Twenty years ago, Onassis signed a deal with the king of Saudi Arabia that would have guaranteed him the right ot transport at least 10 per cent and as much as 80 per cent of that oil-rich Arab nation's crude production. Several major oil and shipping companies, with the aid of the United States and Britain, combined forces to make him break the contract that would have given him a stranglehold on the market.

Onassis continued to make money on his fleet by putting some tankers under long-term charter to the major oil companies and retaining others for the "spot market," hiring out ships to haul a single cargo on a single trip.

Industry representatives say the spot market can be extraordinarily profitable but also risky. "You can lose your shirt if you build a supertanker, and then can't keep it full," said a spokesman for the American Petroleum Institute.

In 1968, Onassis tried again to guarantee constant cargoes for his tankers by promising to build a refinery and power complex for his native Greece.

In exchange for building the $400 million plant, he would have had exclusive control over the refinery's oil shipments.

But the deal fell through two years ago when Onassis couldn't deliver a total financial package or assure the refinery a source of low-priced Arabian crude oil.

Olympic's proposal for New Hampshire would be even more expensive — an estimated $600 million for a 400,000 barrel-per-day complex — but with it Onassis would get a deepwater port on the Atlantic capable of servicing the highly efficient supertankers.

There has been talk, sometimes encouraged and sometimes denied by Olympic, that Onassis is willing to offer Saudi Arabia or some other oil-producing nation a substantial interest in the refinery in exchange for a guaranteed supply of crude and an assurance of business for his ships.

With the exception of a few American-flag carriers that Onassis built to settle a court case 20 years ago, virtually his entire fleet of about 70 ships sails under so-called "runaway" flags or flags of convenience. That means they are registered in countries that don't tax or regulate them.

Next: Onassis and his holdings.

UPI Telephoto

Aristotle Onassis is welcomed to New Hampshire by Gov. Meldrim Thomson, left, on a visit last December to promote plans to build an oil refinery in the state. Thomson had been actively seeking a refinery in the state, but voters in Durham, Onassis' choice location, turned it down.

Arts festival at Amherst College for prisoners fund

A Festival of Arts will be offered on Saturday, for the benefit of the Attica Prisoners' Defense Fund by the Amherst College Entertainment Committee and the Amherst Attica Defense Fund by the Amherst College Entertainment Committee and the Amherst Attica Defense Coalition. The Festival aims at raising funds to pay for the defense of 60 inmates being prosecuted by the State of New York for charges stemming from an uprising at the Attica Correctional Facility in Wyoming County. All of the varied festival events will be held in the Amherst College Gymnasium, and are open to the public.

Jazz percussionist Max Roach, a member of the University of Massachusetts Black Studies Department, will perform in the festival. One of the most influential percussionists in Afro-American Music, Roach has performed with such great artists as Charlie Parker, Dizzie Gillespie, and Charles Mingus. Other musical performances will be given by Real Tears — a country rock group, and two local rock groups yet to be named.

Poetry readings will also be included in the festival program. Sonia Sanchez, a member of the Amherst College Black Studies Department, will read from her poetry. Other local poets will also give readings.

Creative theater presentations will be given by the New Cell Theatre, an Amherst College group, and by the Living Theatre. A nationally known company. The Living Theatre, will present a work entitled "Seven Meditations."

The festival artists are donating their talents and time to the Attica Prisoners' Defense Fund. Organizers of the festival note that the Fund was created to provide for the adequate defense of the accused prisoners in the face of a massive budget appropriated for the prosecution by the State of New York.

Cell full of 'small ironies'

dusty toilet in the corner with no seat. A clogged sink hung on the wall next to it. The cell was maybe eight feet long and six wide.

Some aspiring artist had done a pencil sketch of a "chopper" bike on the wall near the toilet. Someone else had numbered the days on the wall and crossed them off as they went by. The word 'peace' was written several times.

I was struck by small ironies like a copy of Travel and Leisure magazine lying on the floor and a matchbook cover advertising clocks and watches.

Lying in bed that night I heard muttered voices with an occasional comprehensible phrase, radios blaring long into the night, the sound of one door after another being locked for the night, and the strains of a harmonica. Once I heard someone singing 'Jailhouse Rock'.

My cell was unlocked at six-thirty, but breakfast wasn't until seven-thirty. It turned out to be no better than dinner — consisting of a bowl of cold cereal and a dougnut. I was told it was a special breakfast because they usually don't have doughnuts.

After breakfast we had a group rap session with all of the police trainees and some of the inmates. It was generally agreed that the duration of the stay had been too brief and that they didn't get as accurate a feeling of what it was like to be in jail because the guards knew who they were.

Everyone was enthusiastic about the outcome of the stay, even those who had had reservations about it beforehand.

Brooks Smith said that he hoped the experience night help the future officers in using their discretion when making arrests and possibly cut down on unnecessary arrests. The trainees seemed to feel that the experience wouldn't necessarily change their work on the street at all, but it would definitely alter their perceptions as to what criminals are like.

"If nothing else comes out of this," said Smith, "I hope that both the trainees and the inmates will have come a little closer to seeing each other as people and not merely objects."

MassPIRG reports

Student evaluates his semester internship

By STEVE DELANCEY

—Last week: MassPIRG Reports looked at the PIRG's support of Senate Bill No. 197—the maiden name bill—

Looking back over my semester spent interning with MassPIRG, I'm more than satisfied that my time spent with the group was a valuable experience. It gave me a chance to get out of the five - classes - for - fifteen - credits - routine, to get practical experience in a field that I might want to return to someday, and to do work with more concrete results than a grade and a few credits.

In a previous column, I outlined my efforts to get a 'bottle-ban' bill passed into law in Massachusetts. Between that project and the writing of this weekly column, I was able to get to know the people who work with the group, find out on which projects the group is working, what they have accomplished, and how they go about trying to protect the environment and the consumer.

My final evaluation of the effectiveness of the group is mixed—not because of any failings of MassPIRG, but rather the failings of the system within which it tries to work.

The PIRG concept—using volunteer student funds and efforts in an organized way for social change—is a new and important idea. The office serves as a base for the group and a resource-bank of information on consumer and environmental issues. The staff is made up of hardworking professionals who coordinate the work of students and other citizens with their own work in order to act as informed and effective lobbyists and spokespersons.

The PIRG also offers continuity to student activity, which would otherwise be seasonal and transient. While a student's work is usually limited to the time period of a semester, work done in conjunction with the PIRG will be picked up and continued after the student has left the group.

The problem is that MassPIRG must stay within a limited framework of action in order to function within the system and be accepted as an effective and dependable public voice by the bureaucrats in a position to institute change. The PIRG is becoming recognised as an important citizen voice—a fact recently demonstrated by the large number of applications they received from highly-qualified professionals in response to an opening they had for a relatively low-paying journalist-editor position on the staff.

MassPIRG is often frustrated in its efforts to work within these necessary guidelines because the channels through which it works—particularly the legislature—are often unresponsive and very sensitive to political moods and their own political futures.

My major project with MassPIRG this semester and the results of my work are a good example of how the legislature procrastinates on important issues:

Last year the state legislature returned a number of bills that would have required a deposit on all bottles and cans to the Committee on Commerce and Labor for further study. A number of similar bills were introduced this year in that committee and also in the Committee on Natural Resources. Several environmental groups began to organize support for those bills.

—Next week: Part two of this continuing saga.—

OPPORTUNITIES FOR
PHYSICS MAJORS
(OR THE EQUIVALENT)

FOR WHOM?
If you are about to graduate with a B.S. in Physics (or the equivalent) or are already a graduate we invite you to consider our M.S. program in Mechanical or Industrial Engineering with a major in manufacturing.
Manufacturing engineers are those concerned with the planning and selection of methods of manufacture, the design of equipment for manufacture, the improvement of established manufacturing techniques and the development of new ones.

WHY CONSIDER THE PROGRAM?
1. The Society of Manufacturing Engineers (SME), one of the leading professional societies in the country, has determined that manufacturing engineers will be in increasingly short supply in the future. This is because one of the country's major tasks is improving industrial productivity and industry will be looking for people who will be able to help in this important work.
2. Last year fifty-nine percent of the companies who interviewed on Campus were looking for engineering graduates.
3. As a result of the rapid expansion of the manufacturing research program at the University of Massachusetts, several excellent research assistantships are now available. These assistantships have stipends ranging from $3,200 to $5,000 per year plus waiver of tuition.

SVS co-sponsors 'Cell Block Theatre'

Student Volunteer Services will co-sponsor, with assistance from a number of student organizations, two performances on the UMass-Amherst campus of the Cell Block Theatre.

The purpose of Cell Block Theatre Corporation is outlined as a "comprehensive, full-time program for ex-inmates based on theatre and related techniques as therapy in the catchment area of New York and New Jersey," Operating out of New Jersey's Yardville Prison, the Theatre, in terms of representing a true therapeutic process, speaks for itself. The rate of rearrest among participants in Cell Block Theatre is ten per cent as compared to a national average of 85 per cent.

The actors, writers, technicians, and other members of the company are convicts and former convicts who have taken part in workshops offered as training sessions in Yardville Prison. Cell Block, which has a theater in New York City where full performances are given for paying audiences, will give a performance at the UMass campus May 3, in Thompson Hall and May 4, at the Campus Center Auditorium.

Ramon Gordon, administrative director of the Cell Block Theatre, believes the program is vital because "it trains the memory, improves speech, stimulates the creative imagination, heightens sensitivity and perhaps most important, it develops insight into personal problems and offers a means of expression for the men." It helps prepare them for a successful return to society.

A Wisconsin task force on criminal planning pointed to the need for such rehabilitative programs when it recommended in 1972 that that state phase out its prisons over a five-year period. In a lengthy study the task force explained that "no amount of resources, however great, can enhance a convicted citizens chance for a productive re-entry to a democratic society when the citizen has been confined in an institution too large to provide individual services, too geographically remote to provide vital life contacts, and too regimented to foster self-esteem."

In order to bring the company from New York to the UMass campus, Student Volunteer Services raised $2,000. to cover Cell Block's expenses as the theatre is a non-profit group. Due to the financial contributions of Greek Area Affairs, Orchard Hill Academic Affairs, the Program Council, University Without Walls, the Domestic Action Program, the Chancellor's office, the MARY Program and the Poverty Committee, Student Volunteer Services was able to raise the necessary funds.

Guru identified

This week the Amherst College Assembly Program features the award-winning documentary "Who Is Guru Maharaj Ji?" The program, held in the Converse Hall Assembly Room, begins at 1:30 p.m., tomorrow afternoon.

The film, honored as the best religious documentary in 1973 at the Atlanta International Film Festival, captures the salient moments in the Guru's life and lucidly describes the spiritual "Knowledge" he freely offers. As a consequence of this teaching, Guru Maharaj Ji has been distinguished by governments throughout the world and in the U.S.; he has been awarded such honors as the Key to New York City, a proclamation by Boston's Mayor Kevin White, and a resolution by the State of Connecticut.

Vaginitis

By DIANE WILKINS
MDC Special

Last year UMass women made 2210 visits to the UMass Health Services with problems directly related to vaginitis. Three out of four women can expect to have vaginitis (infection of the vagina) at sometime in their lives. Although vaginitis is not dangerous, it can lead to complications when neglected. Understanding a few facts can help prevent vaginitis.

Normally all women have some vaginal discharge. This discharge is composed of secretions from the cervix which combine with cells from the vaginal walls to form a non-irritating, non-malodorous, clear to milky white fluid. Although the amount varies from person to person and from time to time in the menstrual cycle, discharge may sometimes be present in sufficient quantities to stain underclothing.

During a woman's fertile years, the vagina is moist, soft, and pliable. Its moist, warm environment provides an ideal breeding ground for microscopic fungi, parasites and bacteria. Under normal conditions, these micro-organisms co-exist in a balanced relationship. But when the balance among them is disturbed one or the other of these organisms may multiply unchecked.

The ecology of the vagina can be disrupted in various ways. Anything that alters the natural acidity of the vaginal environment can predispose to vaginitis. Conditions like diabetes and pregnancy, certain medications like cortisone and oral contraceptives, have been cited as potential factors. Non-medical factors such as tight fitting jeans, pantyhose or nylon briefs can also provide more suitable conditions for the growth of organisms by creating a warmer, wetter environment.

Anything which indiscriminately kills micro-organisms, such as antibiotics (penicillin, tetracycline, etc.), may increase susceptibility to vaginitis. The alcohol based perfumes in some feminine deoderants (when sprayed into the vagina), in scented tampons, and in some douches may kill or inhibit the growth of some micro-organisms thereby permitting the organisms which cause vaginitis to overgrow.

Douches which are too alkaline, too frequent or too chemically irritating can flush out the protective contents of the vagina. Detergents used in baths, bath oils and body soaps may alter the microbial balance as well as lead to local irritation, particularly if not thoroughly rinsed off.

Another frequent cause of vaginitis is the introduction of outside micro-organisms into the vagina. This can occur through poor personal hygiene or sexual intercourse.

Whenever recurrent vaginitis appears to be acquired through sexual contact make sure Both partners are medically evaluated. Whatever the contributing factors, when the vaginal ecology is tampered with, the organisms which cause vaginitis can grow out of control. For information on specific types of vaginitis see, "Vaginal Discharge," a pamphlet available from the Health Education Office at the University Health Services.

Specific medications are available for each of the major types of vaginitis. When the symptoms are not characteristic of a specific type of vaginitis then a culture of smears from the vagina is necessary for diagnosis. After medications are prescribed, the treatment regimen should be completed even after symptoms disappear. If you think you might have vaginitis, call the Health Services at 549-2600 for an appointment.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Low key is best — the break you seek is upcoming. For now, be diplomatic. Creative ideas can be nurtured. Accent is on service, work, health, an understanding of why there are restrictions. Promises from a distant source need more examination.

TAURUS (April 20 - May 20): Avoid speculation. Conservative policy now is essential. Recklessness will cost more than it has in past. Know it and guide yourself accordingly. Young person is confused and is testing your sense of balance. Know it and be responsible, not charming.

GEMINI (May 21 - June 20): Lie low. Be aware of legal loopholes — and requirements. Pisces, Virgo persons could figure prominently. Build slowly and thoroughly — be sure base is solid. You gain by observing, filing additional information.

CANCER (June 21 - July 22): Hold off on journeys. Messages tend to be garbled. Reservations might not be in order. Do some double checking. Those who perform special services seem indifferent. Patience is your ally. Aquarius, Leo and Scorpio individuals are in picture.

LEO (July 23 - Aug. 22): Atmosphere of change prevails. Restlessness can be transformed into creative action. Be analytical. Don't jump at first offer. Find reasons why — don't be satisfied with superficial explanations. Gemini, Virgo persons are likely to be involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 - Sept. 22): One who seems to oppose you could actually be responsible for windfall. You have been relying on scheme which lacks substance. Mate, partner knows it and is trying to inform you. Be receptive.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 - Oct. 22): Much that occurs is likely to be undercover. Clandestine meeting could be on agenda. Pisces, Virgo persons play significant roles. Health, work, relations with close associates are featured. Plans are subject to revision.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 - Nov. 21): Your desires may be luring you along a path that is not profitable. Key is maturity — stop playing games with personal security. You may be attempting to expand too quickly. Organize priorities. Take inventory.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 - Dec. 21): Finish rather than begin project — tie loose ends. Aries, Libra persons could figure prominently. Find better means of distribution, advertising, getting message across. One at top wants more proof of effectiveness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 - Jan. 19): Study Cancer message for valid hint. Bring forth creative resources. Find viable alternatives. There are secrets and you can discover them. Relatives, close neighbors may be trying to tell you something.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 - Feb. 18): Plug budget leak. Avoid extravagance. Count change. Get money's worth. Insist on quality. Eschew get-rick-quick schemes. Don't give up something for nothing. Another Aquarian could enlighten you. Listen!

PISCES (Feb. 19 - March 20): Lie low. Wait and observe. Remember diet, health resolutions. One at top does not feel secure and may seek your counsel. Be flexible. Expansion is due; key is patient dedication. Efforts will be repaid.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a determined, creative person. August could be one of your most important months of 1974. You draw to you individuals born under Leo and Aquarius. Opposite sex finds you attractive. You are direct, original and arouse envy in your less talented associates.

RI officials accepting high school pregnancy

[UPI] — High school officials across Rhode Island are beginning to relax policies that once kept unwed pregnant students continuing their educations.

Dwindling in numbers are student advisors who would counsel a pregnant girl to leave school and never to return because she had set a bad example for the rest of the student body.

"The way civil rights are being talked about, and students' rights, we may have no right to say anything about excluding any student from school," said one principal. "All moral issues aside, how are we to say that a pregnant girl has any less right to be in school than someone with a broken leg?"

Arthur T. Zarella, student relations administrator at Providence High School, said, "I'm not sure I can talk about the attitude that was held before. I think you have to look at the whole society, and the way society looked at pregnancies in high school. The policy of pushing kids out of school because they were pregnant either had to come out of shame for the student or out of the idea that babies come from cabbage leaves."

At Providence Central High, there were more than 50 pregnant girls enrolled last year. Beginning this September, Newport school officials will give a pregnant girl the alternative of either remaining in class or studying at home with a tutor. In Middletown, Portsmouth, Warwick, Cranston and Pawtucket, school officials have taken care to be sure pregnant students are not forced or coerced to leave, by teachers or student advisors.

"Many of these girls want to come back. They are not ashamed, and there is no reason for us to hold any particular moral position about this. They know what they want from us, we can give it, and we encourage young mothers, married or unwed, to come back to school," said John F. Smoth, guidance counselor at Roger Williams School in Providence.

One 18-year old Providence girl has told her story about being a high school mother: "The kids in school pretty much accept it. There is nothing much anyone can say. I'm proud of the fact that I have done well. I think I have earned top grades in all my classes. I'm proud of the fact that I have a clean house, and take care of the baby as well."

Rozelle chastised for NFL drug decision

By DON FINLEY

WASHINGTON [UPI] — A spokesman for the National Football League Players Association said Tuesday that Commissioner Pete Rozelle acted irresponsibly in fining eight San Diego Charger players for alleged drug use without giving them a hearing before an impartial arbitrator.

"It is McCarthyism at its best," Ed Garvey, Executive Director of the NFLPA told a news conference in denouncing what he called "this new vigilantism" of Rozelle.

Garvey urged the players not to pay the fines and said the NFLPA would not sign a new contract with the league without a clause protecting the rights of players against such abuses.

The NFLPA has listed 57 daemands it wants in its new contract, but Garvey said the league has not yet replied.

"Pete Rozelle does not understand the meaning of due process," Garvey said other sports leagues have impartial arbitrators to settle disputes, but in the NFL all appeals from Rozelle decisions go right back to Rozelle himself for a ruling.

Rozelle last Friday fined eight players and Charger General Manager Harland Svare a total of $20,000 and the San Diego Club another $20,000 for alleged use of drugs during training camp and also during the regular season. Svare and the players also were placed on probation.

Garvey told newsmen he had no indication there had been any "illegal" use of drugs by any of the Chargers, and certainly no use of any "hard drugs" such as heroin or cocaine. He said Rozelle had no right to arbitrarily fine the players unless there was proof of illegal use of drugs.

"He has demonstrated a shocking disregard for the lives of the men involved as well as their future and their families' future," Garvey said.

Garvey said that for some weeks now he had been urging Rozelle to work jointly with the NFLPA to draw up drug use guidelines, but that Rozelle had spurned him and said he would act on his own.

The NFLPA official said the Players Association has scheduled a drug conference sometime in early June where experts in various fields will discuss the problems of drug use by football players.

Garvey also criticized Charger owner Eugene Klein for urging Congress to force NFL players to take urinalysis tests. He said Klein had "placed every player in the NFL under a cloud of suspicion and we will not tolerate it."

Scheinblum, Schaal swapped

KANSAS CITY, Mo. [UPI] — Third baseman Paul Schaal and Richie Scheinblum, returning to former teams, were swapped Tuesday in a straight player trade between the Kansas City Royals and California Angels.

Schaal returns to the Angels, the team he started with in 1964, while Scheinblum goes back to the Royals, a team he hit .300 for in 1972.

Schaal, who came to the Royals in the expansion draft the regular third baseman since the middle of 1969.

Is pro track here to stay?

So far, the few meets the International Track Association has held in the United States have attracted large crowds.

At the Los Angeles Sports Arena, the attendance was 6,892. Last Saturday, in El Paso, Texas the stadium was sold out so spectators paid to sit on the surrounding hillsides.

It looks as though, unless fans grow tired of seeing a somewhat constant field of stars, the pro track tour is here to stay.

If the pro golf tour can draw crowds week after week, the ITA tour shouldn't have any problems becoming established. One of the advantages of protrack is that it is not limited to the U.S. Meets are held all over the world and two weeks ago, Japan was the site of the tour.

Competitors are awarded $500 for a first place finish and $1,000 should they break a world record. Ben Jipcho of Kenya is the leading money-winner on the tour with $7,450 in earnings. Jipcho won the mile, Saturday, in a mediocre 4:02, but the field was one of the finest ever assembled. Kip Keino, Jipcho's countryman finished fourth, while Dave Wottle took third. Sam Blair took the lead on the backstretch of the first lap while the other runners, including Jim Ryun, ran strategically, waiting for each other to make a move. Ryun pulled up, as he has done sporadically during his career, after the half-mile mark.

Randy Matson, a one-time world record holder in the shot at 71-5¼, is another of the big names in pro track. Fred DeBernardi is a top-notch shot putter, and threw 68-7½ in Los Angeles a few weeks ago.

Steve Smith and Bob Seagren are internationally known in the pole vault, but suprising Buddy Williamson scored the biggest upset in L.A. by vaulting 17-8 and taking first over Seagren and Smith.

Dave Wottle is probably the crowd pleaser in the 1,000-meter run. Australia's Chris Fisher and Tom Von Ruden are also performers in the 1,000.

1972 Olympic champion, Rod Milburn has been enjoying the tour with times like 7.0 in the 60-yard high hurdles. Milburn tied the track record with his seven-second burst, and has held superiority over his challengers, including Lance Babb.

In the women's 60-yard dash, Wyomia Tyus is unbeaten so far this season. Tyus, a two-time Olympic gold medalist at 100 meters, recently tied the track standard of 6.7. Barbara Ferrell and Mabel Ferguson have been Tyus' competition.

The men's sprinters include former Olympian John Carlos and speedy Harrington Jackson. Carlos also sees action in the 300 as well.

Some good performances this season have included a 32.1 by Carlos in the 300, a 7-0 high jump by Larry Caruthers and a 49.0 in the 400 by Larry James.

Although some of the times and distances haven't been indicative of professional trackmen, the fans seem to enjoy seeing the big-name competitors in action. One of the reasons the performances haven't been up to par might be the attitude of Randy Matson and possibly others. Matson stated his feelings after a recent meet, saying, "Pro track is still a second job to me."

At any rate, the standing ovation the crowd at El Paso given to Jipcho during his victory lap, showed that they were satisfied with the tour, and that the ITA is here to stay.

UMass rugby club keeps up its winning ways

By HUESS J. McDEWIS

The UMass Rugby club kept up their winning ways last weekend against Holy Cross. The B side started it off with a tough but sloppy game. Larry Tebo and Mel Butts provided the scoring giving UMass a 10-0 lead. Then the defense held as Holy Cross did not score until the last play of the game. The margin was 10-4, breaking the B side's string of three shutouts through the last five games, the B's have outscored the opposition by 93-7 (ninety-three to seven).

In the A game, Jay Appleman started it off by bursting through the middle, passing the ball as he was being tackled to Craig Lovell, who did the same passing to Rich Lopes. Lopes sauntered in for the try in a nice team movement. Appleman scored the second try as he picked up a loose ball, made his way to the sidelines, and outran the entire Holy cross side. Five more people had good shots at him but he evaded them all as he ran uphill for eighty yards and a try. Dan Georgianna, Brian Skanes and Ed Phelan led the scrum into some particularly vicious forward play. The final score was again 10-4, UMass winning.

In the C game, Doc Laurence scored the only UMass try. Holy Cross tied it up and kicked a penalty kick to win the game in the last minutes of play.

The week before UMass finally got their offense rolling. They beat Concord RFC A's 20-0, B's 40-0, and the C team beat Dover RFC 20-0. Practically everyone scored or at least helped set up a score.

This weekend UMass hosts Brown, Saturday at 1:00. In this game, Jacko Sheehan will try to set a new record for most hospital passes received during a season. Within two of the record, Jacko is sure to be obliterated trying to pass this mark. Brown, always a good hard-hitting team, will be doing their best to oblige him.

Moundmen look for Springfield win

Olson or Baye to get start

By MIKE BROPHY

The UMass baseball squad will attempt to pull out of its recent skid in which they dropped two contests to Maine on the road today when they travel to meet the Springfield College Chiefs in an independent ballgame.

UMass takes into the contest a disappointing mark of 4-8, including an earlier 11-8 loss to the Chiefs in which Kevin Keith pulverized UMass pitching.

Keith went for four on the day as he collected a pair of singles, a double, and a homer, accounting for two RBI's.

John Olson (no record on the season) or Chip Baye (also no record as of yet) will get the starting nod from Coach Dick Bergquist. "It all depends on who feels better," he said, "But I probably won't even make up my mind until just before game time."

For Springfield it will be Mike Abaraham (1-0 on the year and a big righty) in their effort to improve on their somewhat unsatisfactory seasonal mark of 4-7.

UMass has not seen the new pitcher at all and went through an extensive batting practice yesterday in an effort to prepare for today's must game. "This is our chance to get back on the right track," said pitcher Jeff Reardon at practice yesterday.

Abraham pitched seven and one-third innings in collecting his first collegiate victory and struck out one while walking four. He has an ERA of 7.36.

Springfield is coming off a series in which they split a twinbill with UNH Monday, losing the opener by a score of 8-0 and coming back to win the second affair by an 8-6 tally.

"We looked like an improved ballteam Monday," said SC Coach Archie Allen, "and I am hopeful we can take UM again. Keith has to have a hot bat, though, if we're to beat them," he continued.

'What is the story with the Minutemen," one may ask. For starters they have dropped six of seven games played in New England since returning from Florida with a 3-2 record. In that stretch of seven games their batting average has fallen from around .300 to a meger .260 and the pitching staff has not met the challenge of the improved New England baseball circuit.

The staff ERA now stands at 4.88 and they have allowed 108 hits to the 473 batters faced so far.

With twelve games now history and only four of them worth pleasant memories, the Minutemen will be looking to put it all together and bring back that touch of yesteryear this afternoon at 3 p.m.

On The King-Mackler Dispute

To The Sports Editor:

I would like to direct this letter to Linda Mackler and Katie King and to all UMass women athletes. Katie King and Linda Mackler have made us painfully aware of the problems of women in sport and especially the problem of women athletes on this campus. Discrimination against women athletes has been blatantly accepted, not only on the UMass campus but also in every level of female competitive sport. Women in every part of life have gotten the "raw" deal and sports are only a small part of the problem. But in sports, I feel women can enter into a man's world and take her place along side men, with confidence and pride. We must begin to provide the leadership and intiative to fight these inequalities. Let us, as informed athletes and women, work as a unified group towards better athletic opportunities.

For several years now we have tried to form a women's track team. For many reasons we have not been very successful. The support from the University has been anything but positive. Except for a very small group of individuals, [Coach Ken O'Brien, several UMass. professors from the English department, and town people], we have received little or no encouragement from the University. Through hard work and outside help we have been able to host two meets at UMass, the New England Track meet last summer and the Women's Regional Championship this past Fall. Quite a few women from UMass participated in both of these meets and UMass Women's Track Team placed first and second. Still the University has given us no real support. Getting facilities is almost impossible and it has only been through determination that we have survived. If the University is willing and open to respond to leadership and the demands of its women athletes, then let it step forward with that statement.

We ask for support of a women's athletic union to accelerate the progress of women's support. Unity is the only answer. Ms. Mackler and Ms. King and all interested women committed to the progress of all women, must get together and state our demands as a whole. Those truly committed to this cause can get in contact with me; Charlotte Lettis, 549-6881. Soon...
